Hail! New-born Year, in the Cradle of Time!
The Guardian Angel of Hope and Love,
In tenderest blessing bends above,
While the old year dies with the midnight chime.
Wake! Glad New Year and with lavish hand,
Spread joy and happiness over the land.—James Clarence Harvey.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Some of our Subscribers are under the impression that all our Premiums are sent by mail, and complain of the non-arrival of Premiums before they have inquired at the Express Office. Eight out of every ten complaints can be adjusted by a simple inquiry at the Express Office.

Mrs. Caroline A. M., Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "Will you solve the following?

"They left their little ones at home,
And whither went they did not know;
They walked in a most perfect road,
With all the heathen full in view.
They lived for man and died for God,
But of religion nothing knew."

This problem, stated by our Binghamton correspondent, is a most interesting one. The answer may be found in the Bible, and no doubt it will quickly suggest itself to many readers of THE MAIL-BAG. We will be pleased to hear from as many as possible on postal cards, giving the correct solution.

Replies continue to come in to the question propounded in THE MAIL-BAG of Dec. 1st, the answer to which was "Lot's Wife." As we have already received and noted several hundred correct answers, it is unnecessary to publish more names. It is pleasant to note the widespread interest which the Bible questions awaken. A few of the answers have been in verse. One lady, "Mrs. C. W. P." of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes of Lot's wife that she Looked back with sorrow

On the city of the plain;
Yearned with mother's longing,
Stood motionless with pain

Watching the sleeping city.
Unaware of its fate;
Lingering, breathless, tearless,
Then turning, twice cursed
To wait.

A SOCIAL GOSPEL.

How Dr. John L. Scudder and the Tabernacle Church are Making Religion Attractive and Helping to Brighten Joyless Lives in Jersey City, N. J.

An interesting attempt is being made by Dr. John L. Scudder and the people of the Tabernacle Church in Jersey City, N. J., to solve the problem of "the down-town church." Probably no problem before the Christian community at the present time is more perplexing than this. What ought the members of a church to do when the wealthy people who have supported it for many years move away to more fashionable localities? Sometimes the building is sold and the property is effected in which its prosperity has gone. But this is unsatisfactory because there is everywhere need in the section before or the work the church was established to do. The population surrounding the church increases and the rooms formerly covered only one family in each of the roomy, old-fashioned houses, now shelters many families who make their homes in one or two of its rooms. The tall tenement house teeming with life makes its appearance, and its inmates have urgent need of all the help the church can give to keep their lives from becoming sordid.

RAW MATERIAL.

If the church so situated determines to remain in its old location and make good its divine Founder's declaration, that "to the poor the Gospel is preached," it must change the character of its work. True, the same Gospel must be preached, and its efficacy is alike for rich and poor, but the mode of its presentation must be changed, and the manner of its application to the daily life and needs of the people will be different. "Bear ye one another's burdens," is the motto that the church has to adopt. It must understand what the burdens are that are pressing on the people, and must make an intelligent effort to alleviate them. This is the aim Dr. Scudder and his friends have adopted in their great building on the corner of York and Henderson streets, Jersey City. Their desire is to help the people in practical ways, to infuse some joy into their dull lives, and to encourage them in their efforts to better their condition. Obviously a great advantage is gained for religion if the people can be brought to regard the church as their sympathetic friend, and learn that it is honestly endeavoring to benefit them. They do not want charity, but they do need help and advice and friendly neighborliness, which they ought to be assured of, but too often have to complain that they do not find in a company of the followers of Christ.

The Jersey City Tabernacle is surrounded by saloons and houses in which provision is made for the gratification of low and debasing proclivities. Theatres, music-halls, and gambling-houses beckon the tired workers who want some recreation after their daily toil. But these workers are usually men and women who know that these forms of amusement are dangerous and degrading. They would choose the cleaner and better solace if it could be had. Assured of this fact, Dr. Scudder and his workers have labored to provide such amusement. Interesting meetings with plenty of music, a good reading room well provided with new magazines, an excellent gymnasium and baths are among the attractions which the church offers. It will shock the staid church member to learn that there is also a bowling-alley in connection with the church, but even he might give up his prejudice if he saw the man who loves the game going to the church for it instead of to the saloon, and especially if he saw the man coming away from it after his game in a place where he has not been expected to drink. The result of these and other forms of amusement has been seen in a ready appreciation of them and a distinct improvement in the moral tone and religious observance of the neighborhood.

But the Tabernacle work of this novel kind is not all amusement. There is help there of other kinds than mere recreation. There are educational classes which are of inestimable value to the young people of the section. The girls know how to appreciate the dressmaking class, and that is one of the most popular of the aids yet established. Then there is the cooking-class which is well attended, and in the benefits of which the fathers and brothers of the students may be expected to derive satisfaction. Classes for the teaching of stenography and typewriting, for physical culture, for architectural drawing and many other accomplishments are conducted. Besides this there are various clubs which are encouraged to hold their meetings in the building. A day-nursery has also been established, which enables mothers who have to depend on their own exertions for a livelihood to obtain employment, with the assurance that their babes will be carefully attended to while they are at work. How useful this branch of the work is, may be realized from the fact that last year no less than 1,641 children were thus cared for in the nursery.

In these and many other kindred ways the Tabernacle Church is helping the people around it, and is brightening many lives. Its doors are open every evening, and something interesting is going on all the time. No one who knows Dr. Scudder will be afraid that in all this practical helpfulness the spiritual work is neglected. The preaching services on the Lord's Day, the prayer-meetings, the Christian Endeavor Society, the King's Daughters, and the Bible classes, are all in efficient operation, and many are found in attendance who were first attracted by the secular advantages that the Tabernacle offered. Dr. Scudder, too, coming in such close touch with the people, as he necessarily must do through these numerous activities, knows precisely the kind of presentation that the Gospel must have from the pulpit to meet their peculiar needs. The old story of the clergyman who gave a tract against the sin of dancing to a man who had lost both legs, has no counterpart in the Tabernacle pulpit. Dr. Scudder knows the temptations and trials of the people who sit under his ministry, and shows them how the principles of the Gospel apply to their daily lives.

The success of this effort at helpfulness is proved by the need of increased accommodation. Temporary buildings modeled on the People's Palace in London, have been erected, to house the classes, and Dr. Scudder is trying to get sufficient funds to erect a permanent building worthy of the work. Some conception of the need for this improvement can be obtained from the fact that last year 40,000 persons were for one purpose or another in attendance at the Tabernacle. Recently, another down-town church has been added to the sphere of influence and beneficence of the Tabernacle. The First Congregational Church at Bergen and Boyd avenues, has been consolidated with the Tabernacle, and a similar set of activities has been initiated for the benefit of the people in that section. There is abundant material to work upon, for lower Jersey City has a population of over a hundred thousand persons, and to all these this Gospel agency is holding out the light. The one urgent need that is continually pressing on the pastor and his helpers is that of money to extend and develop the work.

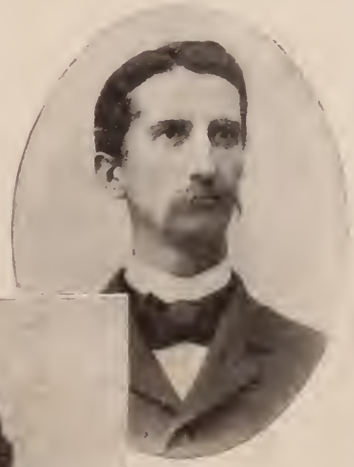
THE PASTOR'S STUDY—A GROUP IN THE DAY-NURSERY.



DR. SCUDDER.

Dr. Scudder, whose portrait we publish, is an energetic man, forty-four years old, full of life and sympathy, and devoted to his labor. He is a son of the famous missionary, Dr. Henry Martyn Scudder, and is a graduate of Yale University. Before settling in Jersey City he devoted four years to labor in the First Congregational Church at Minneapolis, Minn., where he did an excellent work among the students of the Minnesota State University. It is a very different audience that he now addresses, but he is happy in his work, and if some of the wealthy citizens who desire to help their less fortunate brethren, would place a liberal sum in Dr. Scudder's hands, they would relieve him of his most pressing difficulties, and enable him to more effectually help the people whose burdens and trials he has made his own.

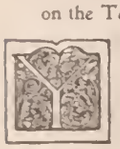
An Infidel Convinced.

Rev. James Newby, an evangelist, relates the following incident as having occurred in the course of his work: "One night in a tent meeting, in which I was taking part, we received an anonymous letter, to the following effect: 'Pray for an infidel who does not believe in God, and has done all he could to break down the faith of others.' We tried to find out about this letter, but no one could tell us anything about it. In the prayer meeting on Saturday evening an old man stood up and acknowledged himself to be the writer of it. He said that he had come to the evangelistic meeting as an out-and-out infidel, and had spent much of his life in inculcating these principles into the minds of others. But what he had heard and seen began to move him, until the terra firma on which he had stood so long began to shake under his feet, and he was made to feel himself a helpless sinner. He now rose to tell us that Christ had 'his rebel heart by love subdued,' and he was here, 'a brand plucked from the burning,' to testify to the truth he had so long sought to destroy. This man came out [illegible] to our open [illegible] and [illegible] new [illegible]. He became a great [illegible] and a [illegible] [illegible] in the service of Christ.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Household Cares.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Luke 10: 40. . . . . } Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her, therefore, that she help me.



YONDER is a beautiful village homestead. The man of the house is dead, and his widow is taking charge of the premises. This is the widow, Martha of Bethany. Yes, I will show you also the pet of the household. This is Mary, the younger sister, with a book under her arm, and her face having no appearance of anxiety or care. Company has come. Christ stands outside the door, and, of course, there is a good deal of excitement inside the door. The disarranged furniture is hastily put aside, and the hair is brushed back, and the dresses are adjusted as well as, in so short a time, Mary and Martha can attend to these matters. They did not keep Christ standing at the door until they were newly apparelled, or until they had elaborately arranged their tresses, then coming out with their affected surprise as though they had not heard the two or three previous knockings, saying: "Why, is that you?" No. They were ladies, and were always presentable, although they may not have always had on their best, for none of us always has on our best; if we did, our best would not be worth having on. They throw open the door, and greet Christ. They say: "Good-morning, Master; come in and be seated." Christ did not come alone; He had a group of friends with him, and such an influx of city visitors would throw any country home into perturbation. I suppose also the walk from the city had been a good appetizer. The kitchen department that day was a very important department, and I suppose that Martha had no sooner greeted the guests than she fled to that room. Mary had full confidence that Martha could get up the best dinner in Bethany. She seems to say: "Now let us have a division of labor. Martha, you cook, and I'll sit down and be good." So you have often seen a great difference between two sisters.

There is Martha, hard-working, painstaking, a good manager, ever inventive of some new pastry, or discovering something in the art of cookery and housekeeping. There is Mary, also fond of conversation, literary, so engaged in deep questions of ethics she has no time to attend to the questions of household welfare. It is noon. Mary is in the parlor with Christ. Martha is in the kitchen. It would have been better if they had divided the work, and then they could have divided the opportunity of listening to Jesus; but Mary monopolizes Christ while Martha swelters at the fire. It was a very important thing that they should have a good dinner that day. Christ was hungry, and he did not often have a luxurious entertainment. Alas me! if the duty had devolved upon Mary, what a repast that would have been! But something went wrong in the kitchen. Perhaps the fire would not burn, or the bread would not bake, or Martha scalded her hand, or something was burned black that ought only to have been made brown; and Martha lost her patience, and forgetting the proprieties of the occasion, with her sweated brow, and perhaps, with pitcher in one hand and tongs in the other, she rushes out of the kitchen into the presence of Christ saying: "Lord, dost Thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone?" Christ scolded not a word. If I were scolding, I should rather have his scolding than anybody else's blessing. There was nothing acerb. He knew Martha had almost worked herself to death to get him something to eat, and he threw a world of tenderness into his response, as he seems to say: "My dear woman, do not worry; let the dinner go, sit down on this ottoman beside Mary, your younger sister. Martha, Martha, you are cumbered and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful." So Martha threw open that kitchen door [illegible] and are a great many housekeepers [illegible] anxieties.

First, there is the trial of non-appreciation. That is what made Martha so mad with Mary. The younger sister had no estimate of her older sister's fatigues. As now, men bothered with the anxieties of the store, and office, and shop, or coming from the Stock Exchange, they say when they get home: "Oh, you ought to be in our factory a little while; you ought to have to manage eight, or ten, or twenty subordinates, and then you would know what trouble and anxiety are!" Oh, sir, the wife and the mother has to conduct at the same time a university, a clothing establishment, a restaurant, a laundry, a library, while she is health-officer, police, and president of her realm! She must do a thousand things, and do them well, in order to keep things going smoothly; and so her brain and her nerves are taxed to the utmost. I know there are housekeepers who are so fortunate that they can sit in an arm-chair in the library, or lie on the belated pillow, and throw off all the care upon subordinates who, having large wages and great experience, can attend to all of the affairs of the household. Those are the exceptions. I am speaking now of the great mass of housekeepers—the women to whom life is a struggle, and who, at thirty years of age, look as though they were forty, and at forty look as though they were fifty, and at fifty look as though they were sixty. The fallen at Chalons, and Austerlitz, and Gettysburg, and Waterloo are a small number compared with the slain in the great Armageddon of the kitchen. You go out to the cemetery and you will see that the tombstones all read beautifully poetic; but if those tombstones would speak the truth, thousands of them would say: "Here lies a woman killed by too much mending, and sewing, and baking, and scrubbing, and scouring; the weapon with which she was slain was a broom, or a sewing-machine, or a ladle." You think, O man of the world! that you have all the cares and anxieties. If the cares and anxieties of the household should come upon you for one week, you would be fit for the Insane Asylum. The half-rested housekeeper arises in the morning. She must have the morning repast prepared at an irrevocable hour. What if the fire will not light; what if the marketing did not come; what if the clock has stopped—no matter, she must have the morning repast at an irrevocable hour. Then the children must be got off to school. What if their garments are torn; what if they do not know their lessons; what if they have lost a hat or sash—they must be ready. Then you have all the diet of the day, and perhaps of several days, to plan; but what if the butcher has sent meat unmasticable, or the grocer has sent articles of food adulterated, and what if some piece of silver be gone, or some favorite chalice be cracked, or the roof leak, or the plumbing fail, or any one of a thousand things occur—you must be ready. Spring weather comes, and there must be a revolution in the family wardrobe; or autumn comes, and you must shut out the northern blast; but what if the moth has preceded you to the chest; what if, during the year, the children have outgrown the apparel of last year; what if the fashions have changed. Your house must be an apothecary's shop; it must be a dispensary; there must be medicines for all sorts of ailments—something to loosen the croup, something to cool the burn, something to poultice the inflammation, something to silence the jumping tooth, something to soothe the earache. You must be in half a dozen places at the same time, or you must attempt to be. If, under all this wear and tear of life, Martha makes an impatient rush upon the library or drawing-room, be patient, be lenient! Oh, woman, though I may fail to stir up an appreciation in the souls of others in regard to your household toils, let me assure you, from the kindliness with which Jesus Christ met Martha, that he appreciates all your work from garret to cellar; and that the God of Deborah, and Hannah, and Abigail, and Grandmother Lois, and Elizabeth Fry, and Hannah More is the God of the housekeeper! Jesus was never married, that he might be the especial friend and confidant of a whole world of troubled womanhood. I blunder; Christ was married. The Bible says that the Church is the Lamb's wife, and that makes me know that all Christian women have a right to go to Christ and tell him of their annoyances and troubles, since by his oath of conjugal fidelity he is sworn to sympathize. George Herbert, the Christian poet, wrote two or three verses on this subject:

"The servant by this clause
Makes drudgery divine:
Who sweeps a room, as for Thy laws,
Makes this and the action fine."

A young woman of brilliant education and prosperous circumstances was called down-stairs to help in the kitchen in the absence of the servants. The door-bell ringing, she went to open it and found a gentleman friend, who said as he came in: "I thought that I heard music; was it on this piano or on this harp?" She answered: "No; I was playing on a gridiron, with frying-pan accompaniment. The servants are gone, and I am learning how to do this work." Well done! When will women in all circles find out that it is honorable to do anything that ought to be done?

Again, there is the trial of severe economy. Nine hundred and ninety-nine households out of the thousand are subjected to it—some under more and some under less stress of circumstances. Especially if a man smoke very expensive cigars, and take very costly dinners at the restaurants, he will be severe in demanding domestic economies. This is what kindles tens of thousands of women—attempting to make five dollars do the work of seven. A young woman about to enter the married state said to her mother: "How long does the honeymoon last?" The mother answered: "The honeymoon lasts until you ask your husband for money." How some men do dole out money to their wives! "How much do you want?" "A dollar!" "You are always wanting a dollar. Can't you do with fifty cents?" If the husband has not the money, let him plainly say so. If he has it, let him make cheerful response, remembering that his wife has as much right to it as he has. How the bills come in! The woman is the banker of the household, she is the president, the cashier, the teller, the discount clerk; and there is a panic every few weeks! This thirty years' war against high prices, this perpetual study of economics, this life-long attempt to keep the outgoes less than the income, exhausts innumerable housekeepers. Oh, my sister, this is a part of the divine discipline. If it were best for you, all you would have to do would be to open the front windows and the ravens would fly in with food; and after you had baked fifty times from the barrel in the pantry, the barrel, like the one of Zarephath, would be full; and the shoes of the children would last as long as the shoes of the Israelites in the wilderness—forty years. Beside that, this is going to make heaven the more attractive in the contrast. They never hunger there, and consequently there will be none of the nuisances of catering for appetites. And in the land of the white robe they never have to mend anything, and the air in that hill-country makes everybody well. There are no rents to pay; every man owns his own house, and a mansion at that. It will not be so great a change for you to have a chariot in heaven if you have been in the habit of riding in this world. It will not be so great a change for you to sit down on the banks of the river of life, if in this world you had a country-seat; but if you have walked with tired feet in this world, what a glorious change to mount celestial equipage! And if your life on earth was domestic martyrdom, oh, the joy of an eternity in which you shall have nothing to do except what you choose to do! Martha has had no drudgery for eighteen centuries! I quarrel with the theologians who want to distribute all the thrones of heaven among the John Knoxes, and the Hugh Latimers, and the Theban Legion. Some of the brightest thrones of heaven will be kept for Christian housekeepers. Oh, what a change from here to there—from the time when they put down the rolling-pin to when they take up the sceptre! If Chatsworth Park and the Vanderbilt mansion were to be lifted into the Celestial City they would be considered uninhabitable rookeries, and glorified Lazarus would be ashamed to be going in and out of either of them.

There are many housekeepers who could get along with their toil, if it were not for sickness and trouble. The fact is, one-half of the women of this land are more or less invalids. The mountain lass, who has never had an ache or a pain, may consider household toil inconsiderable, and toward evening she may skip away miles to the fields and drive home the cattle, and she may until ten o'clock at night fill the house with laughing racket; but oh, to do the work of life with worn-out constitution, when whooping-cough has been raging for six weeks in the household, making the night as sleepless as the day—that is not so easy! Perhaps this comes after the nerves have been shattered by some bereavement that has left desolation in every room of the house, and set the crib in the garret, because the occupant has been hushed into a slumber which needs no mother's lullaby. Oh, she could provide for the whole group a great deal better than she can for a part of the group, now the rest are gone! Though you may tell her God is taking care of those who are gone, it is mother-like to brood both flocks; and one wing she puts over the flock in the house, the other wing she puts over the flock in the grave.

There is nothing but the old-fashioned religion of Jesus Christ that will take a woman happily through the trials of home life. At first there may be a romance or a novelty that will do for a substitute. The marriage-hour has just passed, and the perplexities of the household are more than atoned by the joy of being together, and by the fact that when it is late they do not have to discuss the question as to whether it is time to go! The mishaps of the household, instead of being a matter of anxiety and reprehension, are a matter of merriment—the loaf of bread turned into a geological specimen; the slushy custards; the jaundiced or measly biscuits. It is a very bright sunlight that falls on the cutlery and the mantel ornaments of a new home.

But after awhile the romance is all gone, and then there is something to be prepared for the table that the book called "Cookery Taught in Twelve Lessons" will not teach. The receipt for making it is not a handful of this, a cup of that, and a spoonful of something else. It is not something sweetened with ordinary condiments, or flavored with ordinary flavors, or baked in ordinary ovens. It is the loaf of domestic happiness; and all the ingredients come down from heaven, and the fruits are plucked from the tree of life, and it is sweetened with the new wine of the kingdom, and it is baked in the oven of home trial. Solomon wrote out of his own experience. He had a wretched home. A man cannot be happy with two wives, much less six hundred; and he says, writing out of his own experience: "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith."

How great are the responsibilities of housekeepers! Sometimes an indigestible article of food, by its effect upon a king, has overthrown an empire. A distinguished statistician says of one thousand unmarried men there are thirty-eight criminals, and of one thousand married men only eighteen are criminals. What a suggestion of home influences! Let the most be made of them. Housekeepers by the food they provide, by the couches they spread, by the books they introduce, by the influences they bring around their home, are deciding the physical, intellectual, moral, eternal destiny of the race. You say your life is one of sacrifice. I know it. But, my sisters, that is the only life worth living. That was Florence Nightingale's life; that was Payson's life; that was Christ's life. We admire it in others; but how very hard it is for us to exercise it ourselves! When, in Brooklyn, young Dr. Hutchinson, having spent a whole night in a diphtheritic room for the relief of a patient, became saturated with the poison and died, we all felt as if we would like to put garlands on his grave; everybody appreciates that. When, in the burning hotel at St. Louis, a young man on the fifth story broke open the door of the room where his mother was sleeping, and plunged in amid smoke and fire, crying: "Mother, where are you?" and never came out, our hearts applauded that young man. But how few of us have the Christlike spirit—a willingness to suffer for others! A rough teacher in a school called upon a poor, half-starved lad who had offended against the laws of the school, and said: "Take off your coat directly, sir." The boy refused to take it off, whereupon the teacher said again: "Take off your coat, sir," as he swung the whip through the air. The boy refused. It was not because he was afraid of the lash—he was used to that at home—but it was from shame—he had no undergarment; and as at the third command he pulled slowly off his coat, there went a sob through the school. They saw then why he did not want to remove his coat, and they saw the shoulder-blades had almost cut through the skin, and a stout, healthy boy rose up and went to the teacher of the school, and said: "Oh, sir, please don't hurt this poor fellow; whip me; see, he's nothing but a poor chap; don't hurt him, he's poor; whip me." "Well," said the teacher, "it's going to be a severe whipping; I am willing to take you as a substitute." "Well," said the boy, "I don't care; you whip me, if you will let this poor fellow go." The stout, healthy boy took the scourging without an outcry. "Bravo!" says every man—"Bravo!" How many of us are willing to take the scourging, and the suffering, and the toil, and the anxiety for other people! Beautiful things to admire, but how little we have of that spirit! God give us that self-denying spirit, so that whether we are in humble spheres or in conspicuous spheres we may perform our whole duty—for this struggle will soon be over.

One of the most affecting reminiscences of my mother is my remembrance of her as a Christian housekeeper. She worked very hard, and when we would come in from summer play, and sit down at the table at noon, I remember how she used to come in with beads of perspiration along the line of gray hair, and how sometimes she would sit down at the table and put her head against her wrinkled hand and say: "Well, the fact is, I'm too tired to eat."

Some time ago, in an express train, I shot past that old homestead. I looked out of the window, and tried to peer through the darkness. While I was doing so, one of my old schoolmates, whom I had not seen for many years, tapped me on the shoulder, and said: "De Witt, I see you are looking out at the scenes of your boyhood." "Oh, yes," I replied, "I was looking out at the old place where my mother lived and died." That night, in the cars, the whole scene came back to me. There was the country home. There was the noonday table. There were the children on either side of the table, most of them gone never to come back. At one end of the table, my father, with a smile that never left his countenance even when he lay in his coffin. It was an eighty-four-years' smile—not the smile of inanition, but of Christian courage and of Christian hope. At the other end of the table was a beautiful, benignant, hard-working, aged Christian housekeeper, my mother. She was very tired. I am glad she has so good a place to rest in. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

CUBA NEEDS OUR HELP.

Thousands of Non-Combatants Perishing of Starvation—Our Government Urges a Relief Movement and "The Christian Herald" Acts.

AFTER many delays there seems to be at last no doubt of autonomy being granted to Cuba. Captain-General Blanco, the successor of Weyler, announced in the closing days of last year that Cuba would be under autonomical government by January 1st: the new ministry to begin with the new year with offices in the Captain-General's palace in Havana. It is admitted, however, that there are many who will not be satisfied, and that this new departure will by no means end the war. The Cuban leaders will be satisfied with nothing short of absolute freedom from Spanish sovereignty. This is what they are fighting for and no scheme of local representation under Spanish domination will be entertained.

On the other hand, there is an element among the Spaniards themselves which condemns autonomy as ill-advised and a distinct surrender of Spanish dignity. This element, during Christmas week while the carnival was progressing in Havana, indulged in a riotous demonstration against the United States. Streets were filled with the shouts of "Death to America! Down with Blanco!" These rioters were dispersed by the police and mounted gendarmes, after a sharp struggle and many arrests. Another change which has marked the new official control in Cuba, is the announcement by General Blanco of an a mnesty granted to all Cuban political exiles. This will affect many American citizens of Cuban birth, who were expelled under preceding administrations, or who fled to escape the persecution by Weyler. The only persons excepted in this general amnesty are common criminals. These changes in connection with other events, have given rise to the impression that Spain is paving the way toward the final relinquishment of Cuba. It is undeniable that the Government and people of Spain are heartily tired of this long, cruel, expensive war, which has emptied their treasury and needlessly sacrificed many thousands of lives.

THE CASTLE, CIENFUEGOS, CUBA.

The tragic death of the prominent Spanish military leader, Lieut.-Col. Joaquin Ruiz, who, it is said, was shot down by the Cubans while in camp under a parole flag, is strikingly similar to the fate encountered by Gen. Maceo, the brilliant Cuban leader, who was killed by the Spaniards while under a peace flag, having been decoyed away from his command under the impression that the Spaniards wished to confer regarding peace measures. Lieut. Ruiz undertook to present the proposal of autonomy to Col. Aranguren, the Cuban leader, with the the full knowledge that orders had been issued by Gen. Gomez, that all who might come with peace propositions not based on the complete independence of Cuba, should be treated as spies. This, it is explained by the Cubans, was the cause of the death of Ruiz, and he should have been sufficiently aware of Gomez's order, since it was widely published.

A MULE TRAIN, SANTIAGO DE CUBA.

MARINA STREET, SANTIAGO DE CUBA.

In the field military operations continue with the usual activity, and with varying results. There is much suffering in both camps: in that of the Spanish, from fever and other ailments, and in the patriot camp, from hardship and privation. But the suffering of the troops in the field is far exceeded by that of the multitudes of unfortunate non-combatants, who have been victims of this protracted war. Many who have escaped have come to American ports, a number of them to Florida, where they are now living in a condition of abject poverty. Those who remained in Cuba are even worse off, the supply of food having failed in consequence of Weyler's ruinous policy of preventing cultivation of the land, or the sowing of crops.

The condition of the non-combatant population of Cuba is indeed pitiful. Their terrible privations have aroused the sympathy of the world. In a recent proclamation, President McKinley has set before the American people the sad condition of affairs in that unfortunate island, where many thousands of the peasantry are suffering for the barest necessaries of life, while hundreds have already died of starvation. In consequence of the stringent laws of the last military administration, all tillage of the ground was prohibited and for several seasons there has been neither sowing nor reaping. Famine has inevitably followed, and unless help comes speedily from our hospitable shores, the famine will claim more victims in Cuba than either fire or the sword. We are assured on reliable information that the true facts concerning the suffering in Cuba, if published, would be infinitely worse than anything that has yet appeared on the subject, or which the imagination of the reader might conceive.

Secretary Sherman, Senator Hale, of Maine, and other leading statesmen, have supported the President in laying the essential facts concerning Cuba's distressed condition before the country and pleading with rare eloquence for American aid for Cuba. This matter they have laid before the nation wholly regardless of the political questions that are now pending between this country and Spain. It is a question of humanity, exclusively. They have set the question before our people: Shall these Cuban peasants, who are practically at our very doors, be permitted to perish miserably of want while we have abundance? Spain, already impoverished, can do nothing. Europe views their fate with total unconcern. They look appealing to the United States for help in their extremity. Our Government itself, through its Chief Executive and other high officials, warmly advocates their cause, and it is announced that our Consul-General in Cuba will personally supervise the distribution of all relief funds contributed, and that all United States Consular officials in Cuba will assist in the same work, thus placing it practically under government auspices.

In view of the urgent presentation of the cause of Cuba by these high officials, and of the many requests that have come to us, by mail and otherwise, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will receive and acknowledge all contributions that may be sent to it for the cause. Such contributions will be duly forwarded to our Consul-General in Havana for distribution in the field. It is hoped that with the cordial co-operation of our readers, much misery may be relieved and many deaths averted. As a beginning to the Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has forwarded its own contribution of $1,000 to Consul-General Lee, at Havana. Let the friends of Cuba, all over the Union, send in their offerings, and the New Year will bring to the unfortunate people of that once-beautiful but now war-swept and desolate island, that alleviation and comfort in their affliction which the old year has denied them. At this season of universal benevolence and good feeling, when our hearts warm toward all men, let us not forget Cuba, suppliant and prostrate, at our feet. Let us reach out a succoring and uplifting hand in His name.

All contributions for Cuban relief should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

The Sunday School

BEGINNING OF THE MINISTRY OF JESUS.

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 16. Matt. 4: 17-25. Golden Text. Matt. 4: 16.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE ministry of John the Baptist was only preparatory: it was to "prepare the way of the Lord." It was a "baptism of repentance," and he said unto the people that they should believe on him which should come after him, even Jesus (Acts 19: 4). John taught men that they must definitely break with sin in order that they might be forgiven and prepared for the coming of the Christ. But John could not forgive, and the crisis of his ministry arrived when he could say, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1: 29). John could go no farther. Having taught men to repent and to believe on Jesus he must retire. The Gospel of the kingdom and the baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire were reserved for the ministry of Jesus. How many there are who stop with the ministry of John the Baptist! How many who repent and believe, receive the remission of sins; are willing for a season to rejoice in the light of John the Baptist (John 5: 35), and yet never go on to learn Christ, never become really "partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust" (II. Peter 1: 4).

Before our Lord entered upon his public ministry, he had a very definite and prolonged preparation. In this day when numbers of young people offer themselves for mission work at home and abroad, it is well we should inquire what were the examinations which our Lord himself passed in his preparation for the ministry. First, there was about thirty years home-life hidden away in Nazareth. As a child, in an artisan's home, he had to learn obedience to Joseph and his mother; forbearance with the other children of the house, diligence at school—for there were good schools at Nazareth in those days—and perseverance and industry in his calling as a carpenter. How many tests of patience, how much yielding up of his human will to his Heavenly Father, there may have been in this contact with the family of Joseph we know not; but this we see, that Christ himself as man must "learn obedience by that which he suffered" (Heb. 5: 8) in his own home before he could enter upon his ministry of teaching. Can any of us dispense with such a school? Have we been proved faithful in it?

On attaining his majority our Lord appears for the first time in the temple in contact with those who were outside of the family circle. There, in his questioning the doctors of the law, he left that remarkable saying which gives the only but sufficient clue to his home life. "Wist ye not that I must be in the things of my Father?" (Luke 2: 49, R. V. marg.). Those "things" being the Scriptures of the Old Testament, which were the subject of this intercourse with the doctors. With that exception the home discipline continued until he was thirty years of age (Luke 3: 23). Then it was that he went past another examination. He to whom John's witness must be true, God by himself anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power, for zeal, for love, for everything. It is an awful sin against lost souls if we substitute for the divine power of the Holy Ghost anything of our human energy or wisdom. "To them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ [is] the Power of God and the Wisdom of God" (I. Cor. 1: 24).

Again, we find that the Lord's ministry commenced by faithfulness with individuals. Before he had ever preached in public, he had called Andrew and Peter, Philip and Nathanael (John 1: 35-51). His first miracle was in the family circle at the marriage in Cana of Galilee (John 2: 1-11). His dealing with Nicodemus and with the woman of Samaria preceded any public ministry, and his first works of healing were in individual cases: the nobleman's son at Cana, in Galilee, and the lame man at the pool of Bethesda (John 4: 46; 5: 1-9). When he did begin to preach it was amongst his own townspeople in Nazareth, and not in his own words, but in the words of Scripture (Luke 4: 15-30). Even then, he waited until John was cast into prison; our Lord himself would not intrude upon the work of another. Thus prepared, thus going on from step to step, as his Father prepared him and opened the way, our Lord commenced his public ministry.

When Jesus heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee, and came and dwelt in Capernaum, not from choice, but to fulfil a word of God in Isa. 9: 1, 2. Thus, he did not make his own plans for his ministry, but simply followed the leading of his Father. "From that time," and not before, "Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," or (Mark 1: 15), "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand, repent ye, and believe the Gospel." He was not ashamed to use John the Baptist's text. He took up the thread of his faithful forerunner, and by preaching was that for which John's had been but the preparation. Now it was "the Gospel of the kingdom." Daniel had prophesied that the government and peace of the coming One should be upon the throne of David and in his kingdom to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever (Isa. 9: 7).

And yet how little were men prepared for a kingdom which should be first of all, within them! How blind they were to the fact that the patient, humble man, Christ Jesus, who spoke to them, was in himself the embodiment of the kingdom of God in a human life, the first-fruits among many brethren! He came to be, in his own person, the embodied thought of God for man; a real God-man. Now, he did more than call individuals. Andrew and Peter, whom he had already called, were busy with their nets by the sea of Galilee, and he saith unto them, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." It meant much to these men. Who was going to support them or care for their families? But these considerations did not hinder them; they straightway left their nets and followed him.

THE SHORES OF TIBERIAS, THE SCENE OF CHRIST'S EARLY MINISTRY.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

FOLLOWING the Temptation, described in the last lesson, Jesus appears to have returned to Nazareth. Thence, from some cause not explained by the Evangelists, he removed to Capernaum, which became the centre of his tours in Galilee. We learn from John's Gospel that he paid a visit to Jerusalem, where he expelled the money-lenders from the Temple and taught privately among the people. Here occurred the momentous interview with Nicodemus. Probably there was during these months no public preaching by Christ. But the imprisonment of John the Baptist appears to have changed Christ's methods of work. He at once quitted Judea, and, traveling northward, passed through Samaria, where he had the interview with the woman at the well, and, continuing his journey, reached Galilee, the country in which his boyhood had been spent. It was in those days a populous region on the great highway of commerce between Egypt and Damascus. Although no larger than the State of Delaware, it contained at that time a population of three million souls. At this point Matthew takes up the narrative and describes, in the passage on which the lesson is based, the beginning of public preaching, the earlier miracles, and the calling of several disciples.

Jesus began to preach. What a momentous epoch in the world's history! The beginning of a new era. He is still preaching. It is he who speaks by his servants in many lands, who inspires them to labor and prompts humble men and women to deeds of love and kindness. From the time "Jesus began to preach" the kingdom of God has been extending, and the temple built of living stones has been growing. The reverse of the great seal of the United States, as shown in histories and encyclopedias, and on some of the postal cards, represents an unfinished pyramid. Over it is an eye, symbolizing God's providence, and underneath the motto, "Novus ordo seculorum:" "A new order of the ages." The first preaching of the Gospel was emphatically "a new order of the ages," and its power has increased from age to age.

Follow me. There is a legend of King Winceslaus of Bohemia that carries a significant lesson. It is said that the king set out for a remote church, barefoot, one winter night. A deep snow set in, and traveling was heavy and painful. The king had a servant named Redivius who loved and reverenced his master. He set out to follow him and like his master went barefooted. But after walking some distance he was overcome with fatigue and his feet were cut and bruised by the unevennesses of the way. The king turned, and seeing his faithful retainer about to faint from pain and exhaustion, bade him follow him more closely, treading in his steps. The servant planted his feet in the tracks left by the king in the snow and finished the journey easily. The Christian finds his way through the world blessed when he treads in his Lord's steps and goes about doing good.

Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Shakespeare gives a vivid picture of the change in the character of King Henry V. on his coming to the throne of England. Idle, drunken, dissolute, the companion of Falstaff and his disreputable following, he seemed utterly unfit for the throne. The dramatist represents his father bemoaning his son's evil ways and entertaining gloomy forebodings of the evils that would befall his kingdom and his dynasty when "idle Harry" came to the throne. But when the king was near death and the young prince realized that the kingdom was at hand, he cut loose from all his follies, repudiated Falstaff when that disreputable libertine attempted to claim his friendship, and proved to be the greatest, wisest and best king of his line. Still more necessary is it for one who would enter the kingdom of heaven to abjure sin, because there is no entrance to the kingdom on any other conditions.

I will make you fishers of men. A lover of angling points out how many suggestions are furnished by the sport to the followers of Christ. One of the most important is that the bait must be such as the fishes like. The Christian worker can offer peace, joy, and the innumerable blessings comprised in the promise of eternal life. Another necessity is to keep well out of sight. The fish will not be caught if the fisherman's shadow falls on the water, nor will men be won by a worker who keeps himself to the front and is seeking his own rather than his Master's glory. Another parallel is that the fish are attracted, not driven, by the fisherman, and men must be won to Christ, not terrorized. One mode of fishing, still practised on Lake Galilee, is for two boats to go out together. Each has one end of the net, and when the fishing-ground is reached, the boats, separating, the net falls between them. A blazing torch is then held at the stern, over the water. The fish, attracted by the light, come in shoals, and the boats return to the shore, dragging the net with the fish enclosed. The church wins souls by exhibiting Christ as the light of the world.

Left the ship and their father. How much heartbreak these words may have covered! It is no light matter for a father to see the young man whom he has cared for and supported and educated and loved leave him when he grows up. It is not easy to give up the son, who, the father hopes, will be a comfort to him in his old age. Many a father's heart has been wrung when his beloved son, hearing the Master's call, decides to go to a heathen land as a missionary. The son, too, often suffers. Missionaries have often said that the saddest hour of their lives has been that when, after the college course, they have gone home with heavy hearts to tell their beloved parents that they were going to India, or China, or Africa, to preach Christ. This is self-sacrifice that costs. The story is told that the finest piece of porcelain in China cost a life. Pousa, the potter, was ordered to produce a set of cups for the use of the Emperor of China. Again and again he tried and failed to realize his conception. At last, in despair, he flung himself into the furnace and was instantly consumed in its fierce heat. When his men drew the fires afterward, it was found that the cups, which were in the fire when Pousa threw himself in, had acquired, by his immolation, the delicate texture he had previously failed to obtain.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

Man Proposes and God Disposes.

REMEMBERING the downfall of the second Napoleon, the transitory character of our hold on earthly fame and power is strikingly illustrated by an incident recorded in Queen Victoria's journal of 1855, which has been recently published.

It is a description of a journey to the tomb of Napoleon, and is written by the Queen's own hand. "There I stood, at the arm of Napoleon III., his nephew, before the coffin of England's bitterest foe; I, the granddaughter of the King who hated him most, and who most vigorously opposed him, and his nephew, who bears his name, being my nearest and dearest ally!

"The organ of the church was playing the anthem 'God Save the Queen,' at the time, and this solemn scene took place by torchlight and during a thunderstorm. Strange and wonderful indeed! It seems as if this tribute of respect to the departed and dead foe, old enmities and rivalries were wiped out, and the seal of heaven placed upon that bond of unity which is now happily established between two great and powerful nations. May Heaven bless and prosper it."

Love of Applause.

The silly folly into which one may be led by permitting the appetite for applause to grow, is paralleled in this story by the habits of wild turkeys, related by an old hunter:

The sportsman says that the gobbler always tries hard to prevent the hen's nesting. His reason for this is that he wants all her time and attention. He must have an audience for his strutting. After many attempts to escape, and more than one beating, the hen will suddenly go violently lame, with a broken limb and a queer leg. The gobbler has no use at all for a lame wife. After prancing around her for a little while, and savagely striking her with his wing, he hies himself away into the depths of the woods. His patient spouse then makes her nest in peace.

The Dust of Life.

The influence of our deeds for good or ill to add to the sum of the world's pleasure or sorrow, far beyond our own immediate presence is suggested by a story which the sailors bring concerning dust-clouds which are met at sea:

They say that in certain parts of the world, notably about the Cape De Verde Islands, there are constantly met at sea, several hundred miles away from land, thick, yellowish, red fogs, not unlike London fogs in November. These fogs obscure the atmosphere and are very injurious to navigation. While sailing through them, it is found that the ship's sails and rigging are covered with a fine impalpable powder, which falls as dry rain, and covers the surface on which it falls sometimes to the depth of two inches. In color it is a bright brick-dust hue, sometimes of a light yellow, and it feels between the teeth like fine grit, such as might be blown into the mouth on a windy day in March. It is believed by scientific men that the dust clouds of Central America are in all probability closely connected with the phenomenon of sea-dust.

The Fatal Thirst for Gold.

The power of the appetite for gold to destroy the better impulses of the soul is sadly evidenced by the testimony of a man who has just returned from the Klondike.

He was one of eight men who worked there together last year. In melting the frozen gravel they nearly always found one or more nuggets of gold in the dirt, but during the entire eight months that they worked together neither would acknowledge to the others that he had found any gold. Each of the men had a buckskin bag that was carried on the person, and the ingenuity of all was taxed to devise some scheme whereby that bag could be concealed from the rest. Every man was suspicious that every other man wanted to steal from him, and so tried to hide the fact that he had gold. They always had a man sitting up to keep the fires at night, and the rest were always afraid that he might see where they put their gold. The total indifference to the welfare of others that characterized everybody was simply horrible. The man who relates the incident was in the cabin one day reading with two men, one of whom was sick, the rest being at work. The sick man had a terrible cold and fever, and asked one of them to hand him a drink. The other man went over to the bucket in which they kept their melted snow and, with the remark, "there is no more than I want myself," drank it all. Every man was for himself, and many of them were so constantly thinking of their gold that they were driven to the verge of insanity.

Every Man in His Own Tongue.

The miracle of Pentecost, in which every man heard the Gospel in his own tongue, and the necessity of the repetition of such preaching in our modern cities, is recalled by the announcement from St. Louis of a magazine published in twelve languages.

It is the intention of the publishers to make this publication serve the interests of good American citizenship. The proprietors are men of business, who perceive that there is a field for a popular magazine among the great numbers of Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Russians, Italians, Hungarians, Louisiana French, California and New Mexico Spanish, etc., who never learn to read the English language. In the second generation many foreigners read and speak our national tongue with facility; on the other hand, there are thousands of Americans born under the stars and stripes, living in communities where only the parental tongue is used, and who never come into any useful knowledge of the English language. For these people, as well as for the newly arrived, a separate magazine in their own languages, yet all tending to explain American institutions, may become a vast power for good citizenship.

Intellectual Gourmands.

Some people are as voracious about their reading and show as little care in the selection of food for their intellectual digestion, as a codfish does about the heterogeneous mass he swallows.

Codfish not only feed on crabs of all kinds, lobsters, and star-fish, but succeed sometimes in capturing a duck. A codfish was once caught near Gloucester which weighed over sixty pounds. On dressing it, two full-grown ducks were found in its entrails. They were quite fresh, having most of their feathers on. In searching at the bottom for shells and worms, codfish often pick up objects which can hardly be regarded as nutritious. Scissors, brass oil-cans, corn-cobs, a rubber doll, and such things have been found among their captures. The finding of finger-rings, fragments of oil-clothing, the heel of a boot, and recently a watch and chain inside of a large codfish, has given a humorous fisherman apparent ground for his suggestion that sometimes they swallow the fisherman.

The Charm of Heroism.

We are all hero-worshipers. Let a man take risks for any worthy cause that ordinary men will not dare, and he becomes at once an attractive personality to noble souls everywhere. Nansen and Peary seem to be our heroes for the moment.

Lieutenant Peary is just now the lion of London. The Saturday Review says: "There is a tinge of hero-worship in the reception accorded to Lieutenant Peary which surpasses the reception of Dr. Nansen. This is as it should be. Peary is of our race and speaks our tongue, and it is only fitting that we should feel more warmly for him than for a foreigner. Moreover, the desperate courage shown by Lieutenant Peary is almost unparalleled in the splendid story of Arctic exploration."

Traces of Royalty.

The traces of divine sonship to be still found in the most wicked and discouraged man, and the precious privilege of purchasing by our self-denial and devotion these royal natures, and bringing them back again to their lost inheritance, occurred to me on reading the story of an interesting scene which was witnessed in Honolulu recently:

There was a big crowd at the auction sale in that city of the relics of royalty which were seized by the Dole government when the Queen of Hawaii was evicted from the palace. The goods consisted largely of battered silverware and crockery, but the royalists and others bid against one another so eagerly that, with the aid of curio-hunters, they ran the prices up to fancy figures.

A Pauperized Soul.

That we may have wealth, and yet be so pauperized because of our narrow and miserly nature, that we lose all the comfort and blessing of wealth has new evidence in the case of a Boston woman:

The woman died some months ago, apparently in the greatest poverty. She gave her neighbors to understand that she was almost starving, and she often received presents of money and food from the charitable among them. Some months after she was buried, money began to be found in odd places where she had stowed it away. Then money was found in chairs, trunks, and chests with false bottoms, and in odd receptacles whose existence was not revealed until the walls themselves had been partially torn away. Sixty-one thousand dollars in all was discovered.

Following Our Treasures.

The heavenly attraction which our hearts often feel to the spirit world whither our loved ones have flown, who have passed on before us, is tenderly and beautifully suggested in the story of a naturalist who undertook to tame some young humming-birds:

When the nest was taken, the mother-bird was not present, but she soon found her offspring. The young birds, two days later, having learned the use of their wings, flew to the window that faced the orange grove and clung to the meshes of the screen with their tiny, delicate claws. Their plaintive squeaking soon attracted the attention of the mother-bird, who hovered about the place for many days, endeavoring to reach her imprisoned young, and was very reluctant to fly away when some member of the household appeared.

Strange Records.

New evidence that this world is a whispering gallery, and that imperishable records are being kept of what transpires in it, comes to us from the recent discovery of fossil bird-tracks in a sandstone ledge at the foot of Mount Tom, Massachusetts:

The scientific men tell us that it is easy to imagine the circumstances under which these tracks were formed. During the Jura-Trias period there was in this region a shallow inland sea, connected by a narrow outlet with the ocean. The ebb and flow of the tide left exposed extensive flats of mud. A shower pitted the soft mud, already ribbed with ripple marks, and the sun dried and cracked it. This occurred constantly for many ages, when we find huge bird-like reptiles sauntering along the shore in search of food. The returning tides gently covered the tracks, preserving them forever; that race of reptiles passed away, and the slow deposit of mud buried of them beneath hundreds of feet of deposits.

Unconscious Deterioration.

Many changes come in our lives so slowly that we are unconscious that there has been a change, until a great transformation is wrought. Men go down into wicked habits sometimes, by such easy gradations that they are shocked at nothing until they find themselves lost in the mire. If evil was thrust suddenly upon us, with its results, we would revolt against it.

A curious case is puzzling the doctors in St. Mary's Hospital, Brooklyn. It is that of a man whose hair turned white in a night. When he went to bed in the evening his hair was brown. When he awoke next morning and looked at himself in the glass, he staggered with surprise, and well he might, for his hair and eyebrows were white as snow. The physicians could make nothing of the case. The patient felt perfectly well. The only conjecture which can be made is that the fertilizing material in which he worked had something to do with the change.

The Heroic Spirit.

The noble heroism and loyalty of which human nature is capable is often illustrated in the events of daily life among what seem to be only common-place people.

In a fire at Grand Forks, North Dakota, the other night, a Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Howe were burned to death in the Hotel Dakota. Mr. Howe was confined to his bed with rheumatism, and could not be moved in time to save him. The wife was aroused and had plenty of time to save herself, but would not leave her husband. When her friends hallooed to her and urged her to save her own life, she calmly replied that she would "stay with Al."

God's Greatness in Little Things.

God's greatness and wisdom is shown as much in little things as in large ones.

Sir John Lubbock in a recent lecture in London on "Ants," relates some very remarkable observations made by him. He found that ants watched over their young with skill and tenderness. A disease among ants was never seen in the same nest. They were very brave in the defence of their own homes. They never turned on a weak or wounded companion. One of his ants came into the world a cripple, but was carefully tended and fed by others for months.

THE CITY AND HARBOR OF HONG-KONG, CHINA.

The recent seizure of the Chinese port of Kiao-Chau by Germany, and the rumored occupation of Port Arthur by Russia, is probably the beginning of the partition of a great empire, which has endured thousands of years. Hong-Kong, formerly an integral part of China, is now a crown colony of Great Britain and the centre of British commerce in that country. Britain is now said to be contemplating the occupation of some island in the China Sea, and may operate in conjunction with Japan, which may now permanently occupy the port of Wai-Hei-Wei, which it has held since the close of the recent war.

Plenty of Denominations.

THE newspapers have recently given reports of the annual meetings of the denominations of churches. Those who have not closely observed have no idea of the great number of religious sects. I understand there are about forty different kinds of Presbyterians—Presbyterians who sing only the Psalms of David, and Presbyterians who sing anything they like; Presbyterians who like instrumental music, and Presbyterians who are shocked at sound of organ or bass viol; Presbyterians with gowns, and Presbyterians without gowns; Camphellite Presbyterians, and Cumberland Presbyterians; New School Presbyterians and Old School Presbyterians; United and Reformed Dutch Presbyterians; long Presbyterians and short Presbyterians; white Presbyterians, Black Presbyterians, and copper-colored Presbyterians. These little distinctions keep up expensive secretaryships and expensive ecclesiastical courts, and millions of dollars are wasted in running machinery that might do the work with far fewer wheels and less hands. What we want now is fewer denominations. The Methodist Church divided into the Methodist Episcopal and Protestant Episcopal, and Wesleyan Methodists and Calvinistic Methodists need to come under one banner. In villages where they have a Baptist Church and a Congregational Church, and a Methodist Church, and a Lutheran Church, and an Episcopalian Church, and a Presbyterian Church with their six editors sparsely attended, and their six ministers starving to death, they want one great church with one stout minister. As it is every man who gets a crotchet in his head wants to start a denomination, and the Cause of God is losing its power by scattering it through so many channels. Better all come together. If you quarrel about non-essentials, and make channels of communion few and far apart, in heaven with only one church, the church militant will [illegible] Congress will be too [illegible] little chapels or tag, rag and bobtail of the New Jerusalem. And to change the figure, central church become a Lapworth to the Israelitish years. No, no, that section must [illegible] would be flung out of heaven quicker as lightning. We must all there at last either in one assembling, under one divine Father and one Christ, while we sing more to voice, heart to heart, one anthem set to a tune, perhaps made up of Old Hundred, Antioch, Coronation, and The Hallelujah Chorus:" "Unto Him who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God—unto Him be glory in the church throughout all ages, world without end."

Epidemic of Crime.

WERE the newspapers ever so full of swindles, burglaries, arson, accidents? There are times when these things seem to be epidemic. One railroad disaster, then there will be four or five railroad disasters. One shipwreck, then four or five shipwrecks. One bank broken open, then three or four banks broken open. Swindle in Washington, then there is one startling New York and another startling Philadelphia, and another, Boston. How account for these? Easily. The shipwrecks easily accounted for, because vessels are caught in the same cyclone. Railroad disasters accounted for, perhaps, by wide frosts snapping the rails. But I think the epidemic of crime is a result of much newspaper-reading on that subject. The newspapers must record the crimes in order that police and sheriffs and courts may be helped in their duty and society warned against ruffianism and all forms of misdoing; but those people who gorge their minds with criminal information and pick out from among instructive editorial and cheerful news only the abhorrent and the disgraceful, are fitting themselves for like misdemeanors. Morbid natures ought by all means to stand off from such perusal. People misanthropic and disgusted with life, reading of some one who put an end to his own miserable existence, bethink themselves of the pistol. People charmed with the story of audacious crime, bethink themselves of attempting midnight adventures.

Keep your mind pure and your life pure. Dig that out of your newspaper which will make you wiser, stronger, gentler. The wheel of the printing press may roll you on to duty, or roll over you, a crushing juggernaut. The story of one skilful and captivating crime may brood fifty other crimes. This accounts for the epidemic of misdemeanors. Any one week's record of the criminal courts would make us despair of the purgation of society had we not full faith in the Gospel to rectify. On that, society is to be reconstructed, all wrongs righted, and the long, sleepless, suffocating night of the world's sin and sullering turned into a spring morning—balsamic, arborescent, and irradiated. Together the lion and the lamb. Together the vulture and the dove. Peace, universal peace, everlasting peace, heaven's prolonged echo.

Greed and Gouge.

HOW many instances we have of people who, trying to gain too much, lose all they have. Their best prototype was Ahab. He had a great empire. His palace was an ivory palace, its adornments made from the tusks of African and Asiatic elephants; stairs of ivory, pillars of ivory, fountains falling into basins of ivory. But he looked out of his window and saw a vineyard that he thought would make him a good vegetable garden. But Naboth, the owner, would not sell it. So Ahab went to bed and turned his face to the wall and pouted. His wife, Jezebel, came in and said: "What are you pouting about?" He replied, "Naboth won't sell me his vineyard for a vegetable garden, and I am too disappointed to live." "I will get that vegetable garden" cried Jezebel. So she hired two perjurers to swear that Naboth was guilty of blasphemy. For that he was killed. But the prophet said to Ahab: "As the dogs lick the blood of Ahab, so shall the dogs lick thy blood." Soon after Ahab was slain in battle; and as the dogs wanted on the dead body of Naboth, so the dogs wanted on the carcass of Ahab. That man wanted just one thing more. He lost palace, throne, empires, life itself, in getting a vegetable garden.

THE NEW YEAR.

TIME is a great underminer. Every year that passes over us sees the foundations of the house of life more and more weakened; and in some hour—which we are constantly going forward to meet—all this fair fabric of humanity will crumble into dust. Then happy will it be for those who have a building—"not made with hands"—whose foundations are in the heavens.

The season of the New Year is particularly adapted to solemn review and reconsecration, and we are led to this by various motives and for various purposes. We remember the uncertainty of our ever seeing another New Year. Job said: "When a few years are gone, I shall go the way whence I shall not return." But we have no assurance of even these few years; for who among all the sons and daughters of men hath seen to-morrow? And yet it is our privilege to stand on the threshold of the New Year and through the mist which veileth our to-come, see by faith the city of our desire—"the city where the sealed tribes are met," the "land which is very far off"—and the splendor of that resurrection morn which shall usher in the year of eternity, of whose days there shall be no end.

At the New Year, it is also good to say with the chief butler: "I do not remember my sins this day." And it is equally good to forget the sins of others. Now is the time to enter into our chambers, and say in words that are heart-deep: "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us." For this is the beginning of a new campaign against our known and besetting sins. Are we going to renew their lease and let them rot another year in our soul's guest-chamber? Or are we going to sweep and garnish it, and open the door to Him who has so long stood knocking, saying:

> Turn in my Lord, turn in to me;
> My heart's a homely place;
> But thou canst make corruption flee,
> And fill it with thy grace.

Yea, dear Lord, if it be needed, renew the miracles of old, and come in, "the doors being shut."

Good resolutions may begin with ourselves; but they cannot end there. The better we are personally, the better we shall be relatively. As soon as we resolve with Joshua: "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord," the four walls of our dwellings will be too small to contain us. We shall hunt out the ignorant, the sinful, the sorrowful, and seek to strengthen the weak hands, and guide the erring feet, and comfort those appointed unto death, bidding them

> Weep not; for unto you is given,
> To watch for the coming of his feet,
> Who is the Glory of our blessed heaven.
> The work and watching will be very sweet,
> Even in an earthly home;
> And in such an hour as ye think not,
> He will come!

For our religion is not a dreamy system of creeds and theories. It is a wondrous revelation sublimated into grand facts. And it is this union of ideas and facts that is the glory of Christianity. And thus we must prove our faith, our love, and our good resolutions by a love for all humanity, which shall be an imitation of Christ's love in its unselfishness and universality.

Redeeming the time, suffering none of the fragments to be lost, let us consider how much of this precious commodity we can save and put out at interest. Is there not many a half-hour idled away in bed after the demands of nature are satisfied? How much can be saved from vain conversation, gossiping visits, and unnecessary toilet demands? For it is well to consume the passing days as though they would never return; and if we do this, we have no fear for the future. And it is not difficult to do it; for

> So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
> So near is God to man,
> When Duty whispers low, Thou must,
> The Soul replies, I can.

What this year will bring forth is known only to Him who doeth all things well. We may consider the year before us as a desk containing 365 letters addressed to us, one for every day, announcing its trials and prescribing its employments, with an order to open daily no letter but the letter for the day. We may be strongly tempted to unseal beforehand some of the remainder; but this would be unwise, for if we knew beforehand the trials and scenes through which we should have to pass, our hearts would fail us for very fear. Yet when the events do come, we shall have been unconsciously prepared for them, and be both ready to meet them and to receive profit from them.

For, although we go on, not knowing the way we go, we are not left ignorant of what is necessary for our comfort. "He will guide us with his counsel," and we know "He is faithful who has promised." "Our bread shall be given, and our water sure." Our "shoes shall be iron and brass, and as our days our strength shall be." "When we go through the fire or the water he will be with us." Through the valley of the shadow of death he will not forsake us, and when "we awake we shall be satisfied with his likeness."

> "For, one by one
> We rise and quit the happy table spread
> With countless blessings; and we leave behind
> The warmth and brightness of our home, the dear > Familiar voices of our earthly life,
> And pass, at one quick step, into the heart—
> The sad heart of that night unknown. We feel
> The chill wind from the valley creep, and hear
> The river moan and menace us, with sound
> Of woe and change.
> "Yet see, dear friends, O see!
> How brief the darkness!—but one faltering step > Into the night—and then the Master's door
> Set wide in welcome! Joyful light and love
> Smiling upon us; radiant far beyond
> Our brightest dreams; and more than all—the Hand
> Once wounded, stretched to draw us from the night, > Forever to the home of cloudless day."

And in such trust and friendship as this, all the days of 1898 must be good days; and all its events make up the sum of a Happy Year.

BRIEF NOTES.

Some of our Subscribers are under the impression that all our Premiums are sent by mail, and complain of the non-arrival of Premiums, before they have inquired at the Express Office. Eight out of every ten complaints can be adjusted by a simple inquiry at the Express Office.

The Canadian Post-office promises to signalize the new year by carrying letters to Great Britain and British Colonies at three cents per ounce, which is now the rate of domestic postage in the Dominion.

The British and Foreign Bible Society established in 1804, has published 151,000,000 volumes at a cost of $30,000,000. The American Bible Society established in 1816, has published 63,000,000 at a cost of $27,000,000, and other societies 51,000,000; making a total of 265,000,000.

The Baptist mission work in Cuba has been at a standstill during the war. The preachers have had to leave the island, but the property is securely held for the mission. There are twenty-one preachers and helpers, and two thousand five hundred members who were scattered by the war.

Superintendent E. A. Vail of the Union Gospel Mission, New Orleans, writes us that a revival is in progress there. Open-air services are being held in various parts of the city and many souls are being won. Mr. Vail asks the prayers of our readers for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Mr. Moody has given up for the present his evangelistic work in Pittsburg. There is no building available large enough for his meetings. The Exposition Building which he expected to use cannot be properly heated. It is understood that he will return sometime this year when arrangements have been made for a more suitable place.

There are in Chicago, according to a circular issued by the Congregational City Missionary Society, 583 churches with 153,326 members. This does not include 29 Unitarian, Universalist and Jewish and 106 Catholic churches. The table shows the Lutherans in the lead in point of numbers, the Methodists second, the Baptists third, the Congregationalists fourth, and the Presbyterians fifth.

A new Home for Working Girls has been opened in New York at 210 East Fourteenth street. Mrs. Morrell, who is conducting it, is well known in rescue work in the city. Her experience convinced her that if working girls could find a cheap boarding house, conducted under Christian auspices, many might be saved from sinking into a condition in which they would need rescue. Her hope is to make the home a preventive institution.

A notable decision has been rendered by the law courts of Ceylon. An Englishman in that island announced his conversion to Mohammedanism, and soon afterward married a second wife, his first wife being still alive. When arrested for bigamy he pleaded that as a Mohammedan he was entitled to have four wives if he wished. The court held that his status in Ceylon was that of an Englishman on whom monogamy is binding.

U. S. Consul Wallace at Jerusalem reports to the State Department that, according to the consular records of his office, it appears that there are 530 citizens of the United States residing in Palestine. Of this number 438 are Jews, who are nominally Americans, having lived in the United States just long enough to obtain citizen papers and passports. The majority of these emigrated from Russia to the United States and thence to Palestine.

Rev. S. H. Chesler, now on a visit to China, writes to the Missionary Review: "If I should sign my name and title as arranged for me here, in Chinese, it would be Mei Kwoh Nan Changlao Tsoong Hwuy Pudao Shook Keh-szeteh; which, being interpreted, means, "American Kingdom Southern Presbyterian General Assembly Mission Secretary,—the man who meditates on virtue." The last two syllables, "szeteh" are the nearest approach the language affords to my name.

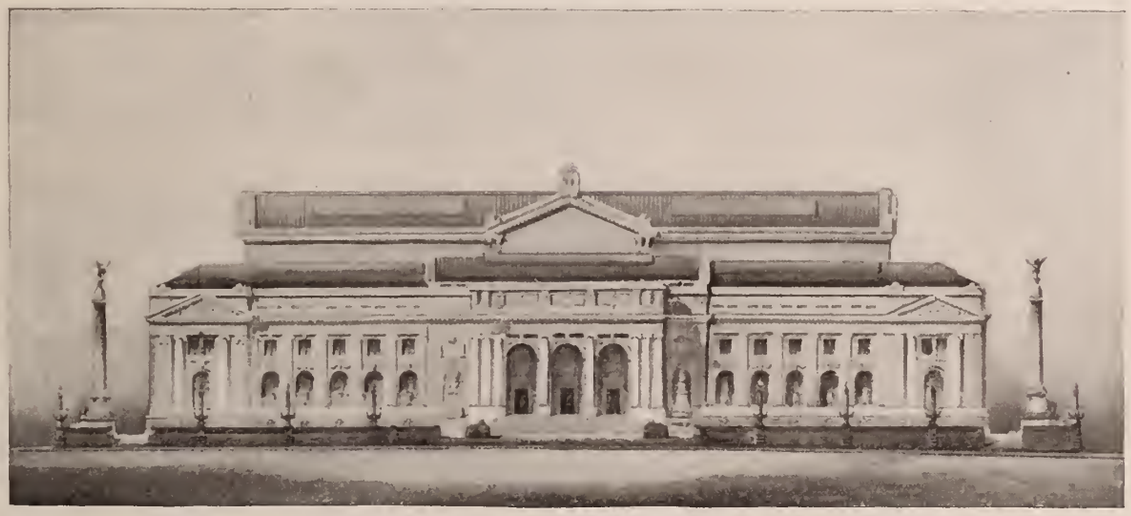
Mr. D. L. Moody has consented, at the earnest request of Christian friends in New York, to hold services in Carnegie Music Hall, West Fifty-seventh street. The first service will be held on Sunday, January 9th, at 3 P.M. In the evening at 8 o'clock a service will be held in the same place for men only. Services will be held there every day from January 10th to Friday, January 14th inclusive, at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M. On Sunday, January 16th, there will be services at 3 and 8 P.M. Everybody welcome.

An excellent address was given at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on Dec. 22, by Dr. Keskar, the distinguished Hindoo physician of Sholapur, India. Dr. Keskar's address corrected several erroneous impressions as to life in India, which are prevalent in this country, and contained much interesting information. He hopes to take back to India with him an American organ for the Sunday school at Sholapur, of which he is superintendent. About fifty dollars is needed to complete the purchase. It would gratify the worthy doctor very much if Christian friends here would help him to make up that amount.

To Build a Great Library.

THE large reservoir, familiar to all New Yorkers, which occupies the blocks at Fifth avenue and Fortieth to Forty-second streets, passed through the first stage of transformation last week in having its water drawn off. Its heavy walls are to be demolished, and on the site it now occupies, the beautiful building is to be erected in which will be gathered the art and literary treasures of the Astor, Lenox, and Tilden collections. The bequest of the late Samuel J. Tilden to the city is thus to do more than he hoped. The trustees of the Astor and Lenox libraries agreed to consolidate the three trusts into one great free library that should be worthy of the Empire city. A jury was appointed early last year to decide on the plan, and it finally chose the one of which a picture appears on this page. The designers are Messrs. Carrere and Hastings, who won the prize for the new Academy of Design. It is to be of either white marble or Indiana limestone, and will cost over two million dollars. The interior arrangements will be somewhat novel, in accordance with the suggestions of the American Library Association. The reading room will be on the floor above that devoted to the two million books in the library, and will accommodate 800 readers. This arrangement will secure a better light and greater quiet than can be obtained by the usual plan of having the readers and the books on the same floor. The plan includes a large lecture hall, picture galleries, a library for the blind, a map room, a newspaper room, a children's room, rooms for patents, manuscripts, music, periodicals, and other accommodations. The library, when it is finished, will be one of the finest buildings of the kind in the country, and when the treasures now in the Astor and the Lenox libraries are stored there, it will be a treasure-house of which any city might be proud. If the ancient philosopher who said that "of making many books there is no end," could see the two million books that will eventually be gathered there, he would be confirmed in his opinion, nor would he see reason to change the conclusion he drew:

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment (Eccles. 12: 12).



THE GREAT FREE LIBRARY TO BE ERECTED IN NEW YORK TO COMBINE THE ASTOR, LENOX AND TILDEN BEQUESTS.

Living Without a Stomach.

The story of a remarkable surgical operation, which has shed a new light on physiology, is told by Dr. Edmund C. Wendt of New York. During a recent tour in Switzerland he examined a patient who had undergone an operation by Dr. Carl Schlatter of the University of Zurich and was then living and in good health, though without a stomach. The patient was a silk-weaver, who had suffered a long time with abdominal pains. She consulted a physician who told her that she had a tumor and had better get Dr. Schlatter to remove it. She took his advice, but when the operation was performed, it was found that the whole stomach was hopelessly diseased, while the parts above and below it were healthy. To leave the stomach in place was to consign the patient to certain and speedy death. On the other hand, no one had been known to live without this vital organ. The operator, however, determined to make the experiment. He removed the stomach and connected the channel from the mouth with the intestines, closing the severed intestine, so as to form a kind of a pocket, as a substitute for the stomach. Great care was taken of the woman afterwards, and she was kept alive by hypodermic injections, but when Dr. Schlatter thought the wounds had healed, food was cautiously given. Dr. Wendt saw her three months after the operation, and she was then strong and well with a normal appetite. A human being can evidently live without a stomach, and the doctors who have held that he cannot, are clearly in error. It will yet be found that those are in error, too, who claim that there can be no life without the body. The time is coming when the patriarch's confidence will be vindicated:

Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet without my flesh shall I see God (Job 19: 26, R. V.).

An Emblematic Tombstone.

A journal of Fall River, Mass., describes a tombstone which has been set up over the grave of a prominent mill-owner of that city. It is a quaint little granite structure, looking, at first glance in the distance, like an enlarged doll's house, with windows and peaked roof, but as the visitor draws near enough to catch the view of the great stone cotton-mills in the city below, the full significance of it flashes upon him. It is a mill, a miniature copy of the larger ones which are a feature of Fall River. The old man who conceived this curious tombstone desired to have the work with which he was so long identified commemorated in this way, and accordingly the monument was erected over his grave. It is a better memorial than that which would have to be put over some graves, if it became the rule to make the tombstone of a man emblematic of his life. Some would need the model of a saloon or a gambling-den erected there. But we may hope that the mill did not represent the whole of this man's interests. Praiseworthy as industry and honest production are, they do not comprise the whole duty of man.

Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth (Deut. 8: 10).

Lost in Saving Others.

A sad accident occured in New York during Christmas week. A fire broke out in Tenth avenue and the policeman on post turned in a fire-alarm, to which an engine from the West Thirty-third street station responded. The engine swung into Tenth avenue and went up the avenue with the horses at full gallop. On the way, the engine met a surface car coming down and the driver of the engine turned out to avoid it. Just then, a lady and a child alighted from the car and not seeing the approaching engine, walked right in front of the horses. The driver shouted to them, but the lady was paralyzed by fear and stood still. The driver gave a mighty tug at his horses to avoid running over the affrighted woman and her child. For a second it seemed as if all would be well, but the front wheel of the engine struck a projecting hydrant, which threw it violently to one side. It toppled for an instant and fell over crushing the driver under its weight. The man was speedily released, but he died in a few minutes. In saving others he brought about his own death. We admire such self sacrifice even when as in this case the consequences were not foreseen; but how many forget that salvation was made possible to the whole human race, by the sublime heroism of Him of whom it was said:

He saved others: himself he cannot save. (Matt. 27: 42.)

A Deceased Defendant.

An extraordinary trial, in which the defendant was a dead man, is reported in the Chicago Record, by the Berlin correspondent of that journal. It appears that the accounts of the tax office at Schweidnitz, in Silesia, were in a confused state, and after an investigation, the Bureau Chief was arrested. It was proved that he had embezzled the funds, and had forged documents to cover the defalcation. He was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment, but soon after his sentence he became violently insane, and died a raving maniac. His widow, anxious to clear his memory, petitioned for a new trial, and her request was granted. She produced a number of experts in mental disease, who proved that at the time of the defalcation the defendant was mentally irresponsible, and that he had no corrupt motive in committing the crime. The court having heard the evidence, reversed the former decision, and pronounced the dead man not guilty. The decision doubtless gratified the widow; but the defendant himself, who is generally the one most concerned as to the issue of his trial, was not, in this case, affected by the result. The momentous question for him was not as to his guilt or innocence, but whether, through Christ, his sins had been pardoned:

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus (Rom. 8: 1).

A Drunkard's Warning.

A singular advertisement appeared in a recent issue of the Times of Chattanooga, Tenn. It ran: "I hereby acknowledge myself an habitual drunkard, and warn every man connected with the liquor trade that he violates his oath by selling, giving or allowing me to drink." It was signed by a man well known in the city as a member of a respected family. Until two years ago, he was a successful business man and was very popular among a large circle of friends on account of his personal sociability; but during the past two years he has been drinking to excess and has fallen rapidly and steadily. "I am nearly dead," he said in reply to a question about his published card; "I want to quit, but I cannot so long as I can get liquor." The curious feature of the case is that a man with so little will-power that he cannot control himself, should have been able to take a step so deeply humiliating as the publication of the advertisement. It is doubtful if it will suffice to cure him, because when he desires drink he is likely to go for it to some place where he is not known. The only effective remedy for a man who has to acknowledge that he does that he would not, is the one that the Apostle Paul adopted and recommended.

Who shall deliver me? . . . I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord (Rom. 7: 24, 25).

A Dollar in a Coffin.

A Chicago journal publishes a pathetic incident for which a clergyman in an adjacent town is the authority. He was called to conduct a funeral at the house of one of his parishioners. He had not heard of any one at the house being ill, so he was astonished at the summons. On his arrival, however, he found that the deceased was the son of his friends. The young man was the black sheep of the family and had for many years been supported away from home, so that his evil ways might not digrace his friends. His dead body had been brought to his boyhood home, and his father was going to give it Christian burial. The minister said what he could to comfort the bereaved parents and read a brief burial service. Then the relatives came forward to take a last look at the dead face. As they bent over it, the mother slipped a silver dollar into the vest pocket of the dead. The minister asked her after the service the meaning of her act. She replied that her boy had never liked to be without money in his pocket. Many a dollar she had slipped into his pocket unknown to him, and he had found it and been thankful. She did not expect he was going to need it now, or would ever know that his mother put it there; but, somehow, she would feel better if he had it. It was a touching and significant act. As the mother acknowledged, it could never be of any use to the dead, but to give it relieved her heart. There are many who have gained comfort and joy in the same way, getting as much pleasure from giving as the beneficiary does from receiving. We have Christ's assurance that the blessing is open to all:

It is more blessed to give than to receive (Acts 20: 35).

Saved by His Dog.

A press despatch from Eastport, L. I., reports the narrow escape of a physician of that town from a terrible death. Early one morning, lately, he started out in search of wild ducks. He walked a considerable distance, when suddenly he caught sight of a flock of black ducks on the marshes. He crawled along stealthily until sufficiently near for a shot, and then fired, killing one duck and wounding two others. In his eagerness to capture the wounded birds he did not notice that he was sinking at every step deeper into the marsh. Suddenly he went down nearly to his waist. Despite his efforts he was unable to free himself. Using his gun as a staff, he made a vigorous struggle, but was horrified to see that he was sinking deeper. He realized that he must have help or he would perish. Ceasing his struggles, he shouted as loudly as he could, hoping to attract the attention of some other hunter. There was no response to his cries, but his dog came and sniffed at him and went away whining. It seemed to the physician an hour, but was in reality only a few minutes before the dog returned with a man who had not heard the doctor's shouts, but inferred, from the dog's peculiar actions, that help was needed. When he saw the doctor's plight he pulled up some fence-rails and procured a plank, which he laid across them. From this improvised platform he reached over and succeeded in getting hold of the doctor's arms and dragging him out of the quicksand. Sometimes those who have morally fallen through seeking prey in dangerous places, can be delivered only by their Christian friends acting as the dog acted. They must get help where alone it is to be found.

They went and told Jesus (Matt. 14: 12).

THE LAND OF THE RISING SUN.

Japan's Rapid Development in Civilization—The Progress of Christianity in the Country and Present Reactionary Movement.

RECENT cable dispatches from Europe, as well as Asia, indicate that Japan is likely to be in the near future an important factor in international relations. She has shown magnificent self-control in yielding before superior force, and has submitted to the legitimate fruits of her victories over China being snatched from her hands; but Russia is mistaken if she thinks Japan is cowardly and will bear injustice without resentment. Russia has compelled her to give up the prizes for which she fought and suffered and conquered, but the time may come when Japan will avail herself of Russia's difficulties to right the wrong that has been done. She can afford to wait, but it is not likely that she will forget. Even now there are rumors of combined action with England which indicate her readiness to join any power in asserting her rights. The high-handed procedure of Russia and Germany in beginning the partition of China, has evidently stirred the island kingdom to the quick, and we may hear any day of her declaration that she has made a claim for a share of the prey, which she is prepared to press by force of arms.

JAPANESE ENTERTAINERS.

A YOUNG MOTHER.

JAPANESE SILK MERCHANT.

As was proved in the recent war with China, Japan would have proved no insignificant antagonist in a conflict with the huge northern power. The struggle like that of a whale and a swordfish might not be settled by sheer bulk. If Japan were alone in the fight she would probably eventually be overwhelmed, but with an ally, the issue of a struggle, in which naval superiority would be an important factor, would, at least, be doubtful.

It should not be forgotten that the census taken immediately before the war showed that Japan has a population of over forty million souls. They are scattered mainly over four large islands, the area of which is about equal to that of North and South Dakota, or to the area of Great Britain and Ireland. There are an enormous number of small islands adjacent to the main islands, all of which belong to Japan. The need for expansion of territory is therefore obvious, and the pressure will, undoubtedly, eventually be irresistible. Apart from this fact, Japan has proved herself capable of intelligent reorganization and wise government. Modern as her civilization is, her development and administrative capacity have been the wonder of the world. But there are reminders of barbarism in her policy and administration is not denied, but the marvel is not that they should be so many, but that they should be so few and comparatively so unimportant.

A recent interesting work, entitled The Call of Japan, by Harold S. Foster, A.M., Ph.D., published by the Christian Herald Co., Bible House, New York, contains a chapter on the religious beliefs and customs of the people. They show an original understanding of moral good and a quick sense of reverence and refinement, but taken all in all, the Japanese have been a people without God in the world. Since 1859, when the ports of the country were opened to foreign commerce, Japan has come in contact with the civilization of the world in a way unprecedented. In government, in social life, in trade, in the family circle, in literature and art, the same enlightened activity which has been witnessed in one department has appeared in all. The nation had originally Corea for a teacher; then she sat at the feet of China, and since 1853 she has studied under the United States and England. As Dr. Peery explains, the Japanese character is lacking in originality, and we consequently see strange results from the adoption bodily of customs and institutions from other lands. The process of assimilation has sometimes been at first a troublous one, but eventually the Japanese adapts the importation to his own circumstances, and frequently improves on the original. Dr. Peery mentions the postal and telegraph service as an instance.

The religious condition of the country is at present the cause of grave anxiety. It was not until 1859 that an organized effort was made to establish Protestant missions in Japan, and it was not until 1869 that the American Board succeeded in beginning its work. The introduction was extremely encouraging, as the beginnings of things are apt to be in Japan. There was a short period of prejudice and menace, but from the time the first Protestant convert was baptized in Yokohama in 1864 to 1873, when official resistance ceased, there was an uninterrupted progress. From that time until 1888 hopes were entertained that Japan would soon be Christianized. Protestant churches and missions multiplied, large numbers of converts were baptized, and the most prominent men of the country identified themselves with the new faith. But, in 1888, a set reaction was observed, and from that year to the present the losses in numbers have fully equalled the gains.

Rationalism and infidelity have spread like a blight through the land, and are now menacing the very existence of Christianity there. There is urgent need that American Christians pray earnestly that this very ancient and most wonderful people may be delivered from the danger that threatens them, and accept Christ, who alone can make them great and free.

The pictures of Japanese life on this page are reproduced from photographs and tell their own story. The manners and customs of the people, Dr. Peery says, present curious antipodal contrasts to our own. While we read from left to right the Japanese read from right to left In addressing a letter the top line is the name of the province, the second the name of the town, the third of the street and the lowest the name of the person to whom the letter is written. In America the precedence in society is always given to the lady; in Japan the man takes precedence and the woman must serve him. In Japan the young man seldom courts or even sees his bride before his parents have completed the arrangements for his marriage, and frequently he and his bride are the last of the family to hear of the match; we know how it is here. Japanese carpenters in using the plane and the saw draw those tools toward them. The Japanese nurse carries the child on her back. There the back rooms of the houses are the parlors, while the kitchens are in the front. At funerals the body, when not cremated, is interred in a sitting posture. To us, such customs appear awkward but we are assured that, once accustomed to them, they are as natural as our own.

How an Infidel Was Won.

AN exchange relates a remarkable story of the conversion of a professed infidel during a revival service in a little town in Indiana. As there was no church in the place, the gatherings were held in the court-house and a number of persons were converted. The Circuit court was in session during the day, and in the evening the presiding judge who was an avowed unbeliever, attended the religious services at the court-house.

One night, after an interesting service, when several prominent persons had professed conversion, and had been added to the church, the judge, a learned man, and, as the world esteems, an accomplished gentleman, said to the preacher, as they sat together in their temporary home:

"I am glad to see you successful in these meetings; though I do not believe in the Bible, the religion of Jesus Christ inculcates the best morality known."

"How is this?" said the preacher. You do not believe in the Bible nor in religion?"

"No, I do not. But I do not talk against them because of the good they do."

"Well, you believe in nature—a God of nature, a great Designer and Creator?"

"Oh, yes; he's a fool who does not."

"If there is a great Designer, a God of nature, who has made and governs such worlds, and who has also created intelligent beings like men, is it not reasonable to suppose that he would give them some revelation of himself and their relations to him, showing the purpose of their creation—how they might answer that end and be happy?"

"Yes, that is reasonable."

"This Bible, we believe, is that revelation."

"How can you prove it?"

"It tells us how: 'If any man will do his will, he shall know of the teaching.' Are you willing to do the will of your God of nature?"

"Yes, I am."

"Well, if there is such a great God of nature, is it not proper that we should acknowledge and praise him for what he does for us?"

"I admit that."

"Then let us go down on our knees."

Thus put to the test of his sincerity, they fell upon their knees. "Now you pray to your God, and I will pray to mine," said the preacher. The judge broke down when he tried to pray to God. The preacher then poured out his soul to God. The Spirit seemed to inspire the prayer.

When they rose from their knees, the clergyman said, "Now, go right on; pray for and seek light, and when you have light do not violate your conscience by neglecting to do what your judgment tells you to do."

"I am in earnest. What shall I read to settle this matter?"

"The Bible. Read it, and ask the Holy Spirit to guide and give you light."

And he did, attending the evening meetings, and studying Matthew as he could get time. When he came to the Sermon on the Mount, he studied it closely, and asked himself, "Where did Matthew get these principles? They are not found in Blackstone, nor in any human composition. They would make a happy world if they had prevalence. They must come from an all-wise and gracious God. I accept this as a revelation from Him. I believe in Jesus." Then light and joy came to his heart. He united with the church, and in after life was known as a true Christian.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

CHILDHOOD'S TRIALS.

The Toothache and the Struggle at the Dentist's Door.

OUR illustration on this page represents a scene which is more or less familiar to many readers. A mother has taken her little son to the dentist to have a tooth extracted. For days past —and nights, too, very likely—the little fellow has suffered agonies through the offending molar, the nerve of which has been irritated, or its enamel destroyed by over-indulgence in sweets, or by any one of the numerous causes peculiar to childhood, and which are liable to produce that tormenting agony known as toothache. Mother and son are at the door of the dentist's office, but here the little sufferer rebels, and for the moment the exquisite pain is forgotten in the childish terror of forceps and operating chair. If the dentist be clever, such apprehensions are quickly quieted, and the youngster is persuaded to undergo the ordeal which, in most instances, is a less severe shock to a child than to an adult.

Modern dentistry has hardly anything in common with the same calling as practiced twenty years ago. The delicate appliances, assuring the operator of quick and accurate work, the pain-relieving agencies summoned to his aid, by which the patient can escape suffering, and the remarkable progress made in the art of preserving the natural teeth, all combine to make the dentisty much more of a skilled profession than ever before. American dentists are said to be the cleverest in the world.

Our missionaries in China relate some amusing stories in connection with the native dentistry. A "Celestial" dentist is somewhat of a juggler, or sleight-of-hand performer.

It is not unusual for such professionals —especially in the rural districts, where the science of medicine and the art of dentistry are still comparatively unkown—to pretend to the ignorant patient that it is a tiny worm that causes the distracting pain. They go through a little performance, mainly mummery, and then suddenly display the little wriggling worm to the gaze of the astonished patient, who is probably so surprised for the moment that his pain is forgotten.

THE STUBBORN PATIENT.

Welcome Letters.

There are no letters so welcome as those from our dear, absent ones. Yet many a husband, while absent from home, seems to forget this. For the benefit of such negligent ones, a poet has indited this simple but eloquent plea;

Comrade, have you got a wife?
Write her every day;
Half the joy is out of her life
When you are far away.
Write her from the speeding car;
Never mind the thump and jar
Which your loving letters mar—
Write her every day.

And, however far you wander,
I am sure 'twould pay
Could you see her read and ponder
Over what you say.

Have your tablet in your grip,
Fountain pen charged to the tip—
Then don't let the chances slip—
Write her every day.

Changing a Woman's Name.

Readers frequently ask the origin of the custom of changing women's names after marriage. A writer in the Home Visitor furnishes this explanation: The practise of the wife's assuming the husband's name at marriage originated from a Roman custom, and became common after the Roman occupation. Thus Julia and Octavia, married to Pompey and Cicero, were called by the Romans Julia of Pompey and Octavia of Cicero, and in later times married women in most European countries signed their names in the same manner, but omitted the "of." Against this view may be mentioned that during the sixteenth, and even the beginning of the seventeenth century, the usage seems doubtful, since we see Catherine Parr so signing herself after she had been twice married, and we always hear of Lady Jane Grey (not Dudley) and Arabella Stewart (not Seymour). Some persons think that the custom originated with the Scriptural teaching that husband and wife are one. It was decided in the case of Bon vs. Sith, in the reign of Elizabeth, that a woman by marriage loses her former name and legally receives that of her husband.

Kindergartners to Meet.

An attractive programme is announced for the third annual meeting of the Kindergarten Union at Philadelphia, on February 18 and 19. Among the addresses to be delivered will be the following: "The Training of the Kindergarten," Mrs. Alice Putnam, of Chicago, and Miss Laura Fisher, of Boston; "Infancy and Education," Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. Addresses by Miss Susan Blow, James L. Hughes, of Toronto, and Dr. Lightner Witmer, University of Pennsylvania, on "The Kindergarten as a Psychological Laboratory." It is anticipated that between two and three hundred kindergartens will be in attendance. Miss Lucy Wheelock, Boston, Mass., is president of the Union, which is composed of upwards of thirty branch associations of kindergartners organized in as many cities of the United States. The National Kindergarten Union was organized in 1892, at Saratoga, and its second convention was held last April, in St. Louis.

As to Scolding.

Besides being most undignified as a display of bad temper, scolding seldom convinces its victims. Says an observant writer: The most deluded mortal in the world, is the woman who fancies that much is gained by scolding or whining or complaining. She may seem to gain her ends for a while (for at first one will do most anything to avoid swallowing a bitter dose), but if she would stop to consider, she would soon discover that every day she has greater cause for scolding or whining or complaining, whichever method she adopts, and that as the months roll by an ever-increasing amount is required to accomplish the better result.

The scolding woman never has things her own way without a vast expenditur of nervous strength—much more than the object to be gained is worth. Why cannot she realize that, and adopt some pleasanter method?

What One Little Girl Did.

Perhaps it may be of interest to the young readers of this paper to know something of the short life of a little girl who was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1881, and died near Columbus, Ga., July, 1897. From her earliest infancy, May Tewksbury loved spiritual things, and even in sleep would have her baby hands clasped as if in prayer. She was the child of many prayers, and her life-work testified that they were faithfully answered. While a mere child, she made confession of her faith, and was received into the first Presbyterian Church, of Columbus, Ga., where she was called "the lamb of the flock." Later, she taught a class in the mission school of her church, and labored faithfully, prayerfully, and not in vain, bringing a number to the Saviour. Her mother, a consecrated, faithful Christian, has opened a Sabbath School in Columbus, Ga., where 100 children attend, and to perpetuate the memory of May's good work, it has been called "The May Tewksbury Mission." Thus from the humble efforts of a simple, innocent child has come a movement which promises to result in a harvest of precious souls.

THE RIVER OF DROOPING EYES.

OVER the River of Drooping Eyes
Is the wonderful land of Dreams,
Where lilies grow as white as the snow,
And fields are green and warm winds blow,
And the tall reeds quiver, all in a row—
And no one ever cries:
For it's a beautiful place for girls and boys,
And there's no scolding and lots of noise,
And no lost balls or broken toys—
Over the River of Drooping Eyes
In the beautiful land of Dreams.

Over the River of Drooping Eyes
In the wonderful land of Dreams,
There are horns to blow and drums to beat,
And plenty of candy and cakes to eat,
And no one ever soils his feet,
And no one ever tires!
There are plenty of grassy places for play,
And birds and bees, they throng all the day—
Oh, wouldn't you like to go and stay
Over the River of Drooping Eyes
In the beautiful land of Dreams?

Mothers of Famous Men.

MOST of the presidents of the United States have had good mothers and have been singularly devoted to them. Washington, a lad of twelve years, was going to sea. When the cart came to the door for his trunk his mother cried and said: "George, your father is dead and I cannot bear to have you go away." He gave up his plans and remained, and obedience to his mother made the presidency possible. John Quincy Adams, till the day of his death, said the little prayer his mother taught him: "Now I lay me down to sleep." Lincoln said: "All I am on earth I owe to my sainted mother." General Grant's mother went into a room at a certain hour each day during the war to pray for her son Ulysses, and he wrote to his parents a letter every week from the field when it was possible. Garfield kissed the wrinkled face of his mother on the day of his inauguration and said: "Mother, you have brought me to this." Grover Cleveland often expressed his debt of gratitude for his Christian parents. President McKinley left the capital and the affairs of State to watch at the bedside of his dying mother, to receive her last blessing and to give her his last kiss.

There are facts connected with Mother McKinley's life more significant than those of fortunate circumstance. She was an humble, sincere Christian mother, who taught her children the principles of truth, honesty, bravery, patriotism and piety. She bore and in humble sainthood fitted for leadership the ruler of the people. It is such homes that have made the nation great. The German empire is great because German homes are good, because German mothers are industrious, economical, honest and virtuous. Great Britain is great because it has model homes, because British mothers are intelligent, virtuous and pious. In the spectacular display of the Victorian jubilee, nothing was so beautiful or so glorious as the queen kneeling at the altar taking communion, throwing her arms around her children and grandchildren as they came one after another to kneel by her side, kissing, and crying like a child over them. She never rose so high in her royalty as when she knelt, a simple mother, crying over her children at the altar of her God. English ships and soldiers, and gold and colonies, are the incidents; the real secret of a nation's greatness is a sanctified Christian motherhood. Tennyson's genius reaches its highest point when he sings of Christian womanhood. The Anglo-Saxon peoples will continue to march to the mastery of the world so long as they shall preserve the purity and piety of the home.

In these days, when there is so much said and written about the wrongs of woman and tyranny of men; in these days, when woman is compelled, in justice to herself, to enter the doorways into the new callings, into the learned professions, or business, or art, or some other employment, it might be well to remember that there is no calling so high nor so influential as that of Christian motherhood.

REV. F. C. IGLEHART.

A STORY OF A BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

Written for "The Christian Herald," by J. B. R.

THERE are few men to whom the Christian world is so much indebted as to Legh Richmond, the loving and noted author of "Annals of the Poor." It is a book that should be in every Sabbath School. He was born in Liverpool in 1772. His father was a physician, and his mother a very devoted Christian lady. In speaking of her he says: "I well remember with what care she labored to instill into my mind a sense of the being of God, and of the character of a Saviour, and his infinite merits; of the duty of prayer and the manner in which it ought to be offered up at the throne of grace." While very young his parents took him through the lake district, and thus early he learned to love the grandeur of nature. His mother on this journey sought to teach him reverence for the great Creator. At seventeen he entered Cambridge University.

In June, 1897, he was commissioned to preach the Gospel, and became the rector of the church at Brading, in Isle of Wight, England. Very soon after this, a college friend sent him "Wilberforce's Practical View of Christianity," asking that Richmond should peruse it, and give him all the information about it. As he read, he found that he was a stranger to regenerating grace, and the perusal of that book led to his conversion.

About this time a package was sent by a merchant to the vicarage, wrapped in a leaf of "Jewell's Apology." He read it, and quickly set off to Newport, hoping to find the other pages. He recovered them, and thus acquired great knowledge of the Fathers of the Reformation. For eight happy years he remained at this little town with its quaint old church with Norman pillars and its English tower. Circumstances brought to his mind the sin of cruelty to animals, and his eloquent voice was raised against it in his pulpit, and accomplished, as we believe, much good.

Bembridge was only two miles from Brading, and thither he weekly repaired to meet all who were unable to attend church. His parish was large, including five hamlets, among which was Yaverland. On Saturday afternoon it was his loving work to gather the children under the shady trees by his home and instruct them on religious subjects. Among these was "Little Jane, the Young Cottager," whose history has been so widely read, and whose grave at Brading is yearly visited by pilgrims from almost every quarter. The following letter from the present rector at Brading will be read with deepest interest. A lady told me some time ago that she saw at Brading the chair in which he sat as he instructed the little ones. Sometimes he would ask them to learn the epitaphs on the tombstones, and little Jane learned one in addition to her assigned task on the gravestone of Mrs. Berry, which I think may still be seen in the old churchyard.

But little Jane was destined to an early tomb. Consumption laid its wasting hand upon her, and the visits of her pastor to [illegible] resulted in one of the most beautiful tributes ever written. Alexis Dolgoruki, of Russia, was converted on reading the "Dairyman's Daughter," which he translated into Russian, and he translated into her language, to send over a copy of "The Young Cottager" to convert, and be admired like a heavenly lamp. As the good Richmond himself proposed [illegible] and, when visiting [illegible] Mr. Richmond's preaching [illegible] the books, as he read [illegible] and value and expense [illegible] the devotional [illegible] Little Jane's memory is [illegible] be eagerly read.

In 1822 Mr. Richmond attended a meeting of the tract society when a member [illegible] "Dairyman's Daughter" be translated into all the European languages, and this proposition was [illegible] Many souls have been converted from the perusal of his three favorite booklets. "The African Servant" seems less known than the others, but is a lovely production. Thousands of pilgrims yearly visit these scenes [illegible] by his pen. Jane's cottage is shaded by the same trees and honeysuckles as of yore. We regret that Elizabeth Walbridge's little home has disappeared, though the porch is still to be seen. Her grave at Arreton Church is marked by a stone on which there is a beautiful inscription.

It would be impossible to tell which of Mr. Richmond's tracts has accomplished the more good. Indeed, the results could never be known in this world. Once, when the loved author was addressing a school and distributing copies of "The Young Cottager," one girl fell on her knees before him, for she had been converted on reading the little story. At Newcastle his heart was gladdened by meeting two little girls who ascribed their conversion to the reading of the same tract. These are only a few instances in which a remarkable blessing has followed the little work.

During his visit to the Isle of Wight in 1822, he writes: "What scenes are these! How far removed from the pomp and vanities of the world!" He says also: "Went to Brading, showed little Jane's cottage to Fannie, called on numbers of the people. Much friendly and kindly reception at Brading, religious and devotional feeling in every direction. God grant me grace to go through all these affecting scenes—profitable to myself and others. A memorial stone was this day put up over the grave of little Jane, the young cottager, my first convert and seal in Brading. Multitudes attended. Her parents bent weeping over the grave. We then adjourned to the cottage where she lived and died, and I distributed a number of Young Cottager tracts to the inhabitants of the neighborhood, who came in throngs to receive them. A truly affecting scene! The epitaph on the gravestone was inscribed:

Sacred to the memory of little Jane, who died 30th January, 1799, in the fifteenth year of her age.

Ye who delight the power of God to trace,
And mark with joy each monument of grace,
Tread lightly o'er this grave, as ye explore
The short and simple Annals of the Poor.

A child reposes underneath this sod—
A child to memory dear and dear to God;
Rejoice! Yet shed the tributary tear,
Jane, the Young Cottager, lies buried here.

"THE YOUNG GIRL FELL ON HER KNEES."

vicar did not reside in the parish. The house built in 1707 was taken down in 1847, and the present vicarage built in enlarged grounds a little further from the church.

Mr. Richmond left Brading in 1805, but he paid a visit in 1822. A few years since a man who died at the age of ninety-six told me he remembered his preaching.

Mr. Richmond was a man of great ability as a mathematician, musician and vivid describer of scenery. He was one of the chaplains of the Duke of Kent, the father of Queen Victoria, and a pillar of the evangelical class of the Church of England. It is just one hundred years since he entered upon his duties here.

I have by me a little painting of little Jane's cottage, which I forward for your acceptance, and if you desire it, and would make a little remittance, I will forward a few photographs of Brading.

Little Jane's grave lies close by the path at the east end of the church, which is a beautiful structure, having transition Norman pillars, date 1175, and a tower about fifty years later. It is in good order. The Oglanders, the lords of the manor, have held estates here for eight hundred years.

I thank you for kindly proffers of hospitality, and I be coming I will bear them in mind. Yours very truly, E. SUMNERS.

I am, therefore, pleased through the receipt of your second letter to make what amends I am able.

In reply to your questions: The young cottager's name was Jane Squibb. The thatched cottage is still standing; it was purchased by some good ladies some years ago with a view to its preservation. Brading was originally a large parish, but, through the increase of population to the seacoast, four parishes have now been divided from it; population now, 1,500. Every one who visits Brading, which is on the highroad between Ryde and Ventnow (see map), asks for little Jane's grave. Your countrymen do, and a lady from Philadelphia has lately had the tombstones mentioned in the tract newly done. There is no record of the spiritual condition of the parents. I do not know the history of the brother. Legh Richmond lived in the vicarage because the

A FORTUNATE BLUNDER.

A Letter that Greatly Influenced a Church Conference.

THAT an accident sometimes turns out to be a blessing is shown in the following story from actual experience, related by Rev. P. S. Whitman:

In a church conference, during the singing, a newcomer stepped forward and handed his letter to the clerk. The clerk, reading it by himself, looked as if puzzled, and handed it to the pastor. He involuntarily laughed as he read it, then, straightening his face, he remarked, as if to the newcomer: "It seems there is a mistake," and asked him if he had not another paper. "No" he said, "that is all the letter I have." It was here seen that the clerk and pastor were in a secret. A certain brother, who had a great relish for anything odd, had watched every motion, and saw that there must be something in that paper; so he asked the pastor to have it read. The pastor explained by saying that the paper pertained merely to a business transaction. At this the newcomer waked up to his mistake—saw that he had brought the wrong paper. But the odd brother jumped up again and said: "Mr. Moderator, I still want that paper read. You have read it, and the clerk has read it. You seem interested, and we want to be interested, too. If the new brother has no objection, I want the clerk to read that paper."

Here the new brother, who was himself merry over the matter, said he had no objection. The clerk read it. It was the monthly bill of family merchandise, bought at the store in the place where he had lived, payment in full duly receipted. As soon as it was read, our odd brother was up in an instant; but the pastor, wishing to avoid all disorder, said: "This subject will have to be dropped, as there is no motion before the body." At this the odd brother cried, "I move that the communication just read be accepted as good testimony on behalf of our new brother as an honest man." It was instantly seconded. Whereat the pastor, with a gracious smile, said: "The motion is before you, brethren; it is in order for you to free your minds." And they did so, especially that odd brother (who is a merchant by calling). "Such a letter," he said, "is worth something; on that letter, he would be willing to trust the bearer with goods, but what merchant would credit a stranger with goods on a mere church letter, stating that A. B. is a member in good standing in that certain church? The truth is, this letter is worth a bushel of such letters as we ordinarily give and take, when it comes to the matter of one's being honest in the deal."

Some hung their heads, and before the discussion ended the whole church thought it a serious affair. The pastor said there was a providence in the new brother's mistake, and that the church might consider it an admonition to duty. It did much toward waking up that church to a certain fact in its condition—that a number of its members were becoming exceedingly careless about paying their debts.

60 Years a Sunday School Teacher.

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Dec. 22, a most interesting and instructive account was published of the fifty years' continuous service of Mrs. Mary A. Wright of Burlington, N. J., as a Sunday School teacher. Mrs. Wright's remarkable record of unbroken service—which was marked by an appropriate celebration—has brought to notice a still more surprising record, viz.: that of Miss Phebe C. Edgar of Rahway, N. J., whose sixtieth year of Sunday School service was specially honored a few days ago. On that occasion a large gathering was held in the Second Presbyterian Church of Rahway, and a handsomely engraved set of resolutions was presented to Miss Edgar, whose duties as teacher from 1837 to 1897 have been regular and unbroken. That lady, who is unusually active and vigorous for her years, accepted the gift in a speech full of interesting reminiscence, in which she alluded to the different superintendents who had occupied the platform during the six preceding decades. She also spoke feelingly of the many hundreds of children she had taught, some of them now honored heads of families and many filling positions of trust and influence and active in Christian work, while still others have "crossed the river."

CHILD-LIFE IN ALLEY AND SLUM.

Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop Graphically Pictures It as She Finds It—Often with "Nothing to Eat and Nothing to Wear."

ROSE HAWTHORNE LATHROP.

ON the first night, when I arrived in the poor district, and tremblingly took up my abode in a little tenement of a few rooms, where I thought I had every reason to expect marauders or hopelessly drunken invaders, the voices of children along the street at nine or ten o'clock, prattling close to my low windows were the first notes of that sweet element of the amenities of the poor which exists in many dark places of fortune.

The children of the poor are in many respects the blessings of the poor. We must keep fast hold of this truth in treating of the question: for, while the loveliest element to be found in poverty, as in wealth, is child-life, of course, there is nothing so sad as a suffering child, whether from disease or starvation. Also, there is nothing so shocking as a blasphemous child, and there is almost nothing so dirty as a neglected child on the east side. But do not let the rich suppose that they monopolize the exquisite happiness of parentage, or that their children are so very different in their contentment of play from the little urchins who construct their playthings for themselves and gaily sing the same song day after day, it being the only one they happen to know.

TRAINING FOR STREET ARABS.

Of course there are crowds of children, and we cannot see any good excuse for their existence. Little things of six months or a year old, even those of three years old, are tenderly loved and petted by parents who cannot support them; but when they get beyond the fascinating age of helpless infancy, they receive a wonderful amount of hard treatment, and it astonishes me to see a mother adoring her infant and very nearly swearing at her child of four years. It seems as if instinct was the only factor in the matter, and it is fortunate that God made it, because at least the babies come in for a share of gentleness.

The fresh air which the children imbibe, being turned out of doors all day to make room for their mothers' work, is not of the best, unless a good, strong wind fills their lungs. But playing out in the open air must do good, and consequently they seem merry and comfortable, even if full of naughtiness and extremely hungry.

The children of the poor also have the advantage of constant excitement. The guarded and regulated pastimes of children of higher life, however varied by individual mischief and unruliness, cannot compare with the frantic enjoyment of an east-side street. Up to a late hour in the evening, with liberty to scream and shout at the top of one's lungs, to build bonfires anywhere, to seize an abandoned wash-boiler and drag it at break-neck speed over the stones in a rabble of boys, creating a noise that strikes delightful misery to every housekeeper's heart along the route, is an outline of the fun. No apple-orchards in the country, or elaborate gymnasiums, could possibly vie in interest with back-yard sheds, over which the boys clamber at the risk of their necks, and upon which they stand defiantly as aged and much-injured men and women argue with them, fling flower-pots at them, and swear they will have their life-blood.

The staid and elaborate pirouettes of the dancing-school are wearisome in comparison to the gay waltzes of the children around the piano-organ, which is a constant visitor. Very pretty and graceful measures are footed by the girls, from little midgets of two years, up. One of the prettiest scenes I ever saw in my life, I caught a glimpse of from my back window, finding in the yard a group of little girls who had dressed themselves in tissue papers of various colors—these colored streamers and sashes making them very beautiful at a small expense. A girl of ten, one of the brightest and oldest, was director of ceremonies, and put the children through a series of elocutionary numbers and songs, in imitation of the kindergarten to which they all went. The superior talent of the smallest child, who knew her verses perfectly and sang sweetly and moved charmingly, was not more entertaining than the melancholy stupidity of an older little maid who could not be induced to say more than two lines of her "piece," which she repeated with a most amusing inefficiency. The finished manners of these little things while performing under my gaze was most surprising. One would have supposed that they had been accustomed to quiet and orderly homes. It encouraged me to believe, who deal with the higher development of children, that the barriers between the children of the poor and a true refinement are very slight and pliant. God seems to have placed this in the poor homes—whatever else Satan places there — a quick susceptibility among the children to what is beautiful and gentle.

I very soon began to long for the relief which the greetings of these small people gave me as I started out on my somewhat painful rounds of work, or came back weary from them. Their sweet voices, sincere smiles and caressing hands I thanked heaven for as much as for the glorious skies toward which I looked for a similar consolation. I have never found, in a long year, that the children failed me: they are as dear and necessary to me now as ever, and will always be kind.

I have not touched at all upon the deep problems suggested to the wise by the fact that the children of the poor are so disproportionate in numbers to the means for bringing them up. I do not believe that there is any help for that, and so it does not interest me: but I think that it is a most hopeful fact that they bring into this class its finest sentiments. As a poor woman said to me: the only consolation the poor have is to bring up their little bit of a family—meaning its dozen.

I have had occasion to notice the children of the poor, although I never expected to have anything to do with them, because they insist upon having hip disease and curvature of the spine: and try as I will to get rid of such cases without doing anything for them, the mothers prevent this convenient scheme from being carried out: and they even succeed in making me plunge deeply into the dilemmas of a godmother dragging after me the females connected in my work, because these little infants have nothing to wear and their parents nothing to eat—and, to tell the truth, because it is one of the happiest moments of my life when I know that the little child in my arms, or whom I send in the arms of one I trust, is being brought to the Lord by us.

Many children come to me with sores of graded seriousness, and please me by becoming well. Sometimes there is an exclamation in my rooms, "Where did all the babies come from!" infants and little children being collected there. I cannot step out of the door, or appear at the window, or pass along the street, without some cheerful, childish voice calling out, "Hello! hello!" and pronouncing my name with affection or politeness. The rough boys who receive from most of the population nothing less expressive or severe than pails of hot water and loud harangues of reproof as they sit smoking cigarettes upon the crowded stoops, are so good as to spring up at my entrance, with soft murmurs to each other, urging haste. To be sure, there have been times when my indignation has been so aroused at improper behavior toward some one in whom I was interested, or by profanity overheard, or the smoking of cigarettes by extremely young boys, that I have sallied forth, like some dangerous harpy, and pounced upon the first offender within reach with no sparing of a rough shake or dire threat. But this very seldom happens, and the boys never seem to like me the less for it.

The saddest side of the life of the children of the poor is their unfortunate sharing of excited broils in the family; their witnessing of gross immorality, and their familiarity with wicked conversation. I have known a family, which I first became acquainted with through drunken fights that I could not but hear, while the children cried loudly in abject terror. I meddled somewhat in the state of things several times. For many months these scenes have not recurred, and dozens of nappy incidents have been evolved during the summer in these formerly perturbed lives. The children seem happy: the parents seem gentle. Verily, it is not worth while to give up hope in any situation.

Another distressing element in the lives of the children is the necessity for their working. The law as to age is not regarded—at any rate, under some administrations—and parents and children have both told me that fifty cents has managed the difficulty of being under age if the right official is approached. Then the schooling is interfered with: the child is made old before his or her time: and, on the other hand, the parents as well as the children are supported, when, without this juvenile help, the whole family would starve. In the last year or two, when grown men and women could get no work, the children have brought in their pittance regularly. Both the children's being cognizant of immorality and every adult misdemeanor, and their proper development being retarded by being made penny-earning machines, are abominations that should be eradicated: and I consider it a disgrace that wise and good people in our government, and in the departments of thought and science, should not turn their chief attention to such poisoning and stunting of such young souls and intelligences. I am sure I cannot imagine how these abuses are to be prevented, unless by the slow but sure process of widespread personal influence. The college-settlement idea and the kindergarten idea are valiantly laboring to this end, and if men and women who could be better employed than they are now, would say to themselves that they would go as missionaries not many yards away from their own homes and interests and uplift the poor and train the children by many a night-school, many a reading-room, the ignorant misdemeanors of profanity and vituperation and personal violence would be driven out, because other ideas would be introduced. And if the poverty of the poor were studied by men and women with a quarter of the fervor which is given to the study of mathematics, the classics, and all the other paraphernalia of high-schools and colleges—studied on the ground, personally, thoroughly understood and met—the children of the poor would study more mathematics and classics, and would develop, mentally and physically, as every human being has a right to develop, after being, with no option of his own, brought into the well-seasoned happiness of human existence.

In another article I may have something to say, from personal observation, concerning the generosity of the poor toward each other, showing how true it is that "the poor help the poor."

A Grand Demonstration of American Philanthropy—Over $35,000,000 in Gifts and Bequests.

FOR several years I have had a purpose in noting the individual gifts and bequests made in the United States to religious, educational and charitable institutions. Without being led by a purpose, no one can conceive of the vast amount of money that is thus released annually. My note-taking has been confined exclusively to the acts of individuals, hence, omitting all the great sums paid by the people collectively through State, municipal, and other political governments and through the various church organizations. Again, as a minimum limit had to be fixed for my object, I have further omitted all such benefactions of less than five thousand dollars in amount. In addition to the remarkable annual totals reached under this plan, there are extra gifts of property of unspecified value, such as public library buildings, college buildings, hospitals and additions thereto, church edifices, real estate, works of art, valuable collections of books for public and college libraries, and a considerable variety of other gifts and bequests to which no accurate or even approximate value can be attached.

As a result of this survey of philanthropic effort, under the restrictions mentioned, I find that the aggregate of gifts and bequests in 1893 exceeded in value $29,000,000; in 1894, $32,000,000, in 1895, $32,800,000, and in 1896, $27,000,000.

WHAT SOME MILLIONAIRES DID.

Two of the most conspicuous features of the year 1897 were the general revival in business and the efforts of the people, slowly feeling an improvement in their financial condition, to repay obligations incurred during the depression of the preceding four years. That these obligations were not considered as due to man alone is shown by the extraordinary outburst of gratitude, evinced in gifts and bequests noticeably large in individual amounts and aggregating more than $35,000,000. What a noble thank-offering to the Giver of all good! This amount includes a few bequests made in previous years, but which, by operations of law or for other causes, did not become operative till 1897. If to this total are added the offers and pledges of gifts by thoroughly responsible persons, contingent on specific events, the amount of the residuary payments from the Fayerweather estate as finally ordered by the court, and the amount set aside or actually paid by the widow of Baron de Hirsch for the development of her husband's plans for benefiting the Jews in the United States, we will have as a gross result of the individual benevolent movement of 1897 a sum exceeding $47,000,000. The Fayerweather residuary estate, now about to be divided between the twenty universities and colleges mentioned in this will, amounts with accretions to over $3,000,000, the Hirsch benefactions in progress and projected are estimated at $20,000,000; the Widener pledges to the contemplated art gallery, scientific museum and library in West Philadelphia comprise works of art valued at $1,500,000; Mrs. Leland Stanford's provision of from $[illegible] to $[illegible],000 for the Leland Stanford Junior University, coupled on its organization under the will subject to the payment of the past due debts of the late Senator Stanford, and a further sum of $[illegible],000 placed by trustees at Cornell to aid the University in meeting the terms of Ezra Cornell's gift of $[illegible],000, and securing a full endowment of seventy-five professorships [illegible] the world.

VALUABLE GIFTS AND BEQUESTS.

The actual gifts and bequests of the year were very unequal in amount, the largest of the number of very large sums were [illegible]. Among the most noteworthy of these are the following:

Bequest of Miss B. Cozzens, of Dorchester, Mass., to local institutions and the Home Missionary Department of Dartmouth College, of an estate [illegible] exceeding $1,000,000, exceptive a number of small legacies.

Gift of John Pierpont Morgan, of New York City, for a new building for the New York Lying-in Hospital, $1,000,000.

Bequest of William Lampson, of Le Roy, N. Y., to Yale University, all of an estate of $1,000,000, excepting bequests aggregating $29,000. This will was contested by relatives, but was sustained by the court.

Gift by deed of Mrs. Leland Stanford, of San Francisco, Cal., to the Leland Stanford Junior University, her mansion on Nob Hill, valued at $250,000, and its furniture and works of art, valued at $750,000.

Gift of the widow and daughter of George W. South, of Philadelphia, Pa., to the Pennsylvania Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the George W. South Memorial Church of the Advocate, cost $1,000,000.

Gift of Peter A. B. Widener, of Philadelphia, Pa., to the city for a branch of the Free Library, his residence equipped for library purposes, valued at $600,000, and a gallery of selected specimens of purely American art, valued at $400,000. He also announced his intention of creating a combined library, art gallery, and scientific museum, and of bequeathing to it his entire art collections, and promised that Messrs. W. L. Elkins and John G. Johnson would also bequeath their art collections to the institution, making a combined art gift valued at $1,500,000.

FOR CHURCH, SCHOOLS, AND LIBRARIES.

Bequest of Lewis Crozer, of Upland, Pa., for a public library and a homeopathic hospital, with a home for incurables attached, both to be erected in Chester, Pa., $250,000 and $500,000, respectively.

Gift of Miss Serena Rhinelander, of New York City, to the Protestant Episcopal Parish of St. James, a church edifice, rectory, and parish house, cost $500,000, and the necessary land.

Gift of Mrs. Alfred Corning Clark, of Cooperstown, N. Y., for a memorial of her late husband, a model kindergarten building in New York City, designed to be the most perfect in the world, cost $500,000.

Gift of Albert J. Aiken, of Pawling, N. Y., to the Society of Friends, improved property, valued at nearly $500,000.

Bequest of Miss Winifrede Martin, of Baltimore, Md., to various Roman Catholic churches and charities in Maryland and California, with the archdiocese of Baltimore as her residuary legatee, $500,000.

Bequest of Mrs. Mary Johnson, of New York City, to various Roman Catholic institutions, an aggregate of nearly $500,000. A contest of her will is pending.

Bequest of Nathan F. Graves, of Syracuse, N. Y., for the erection in that city of a home for poor and indigent aged people, $400,000.

Bequest of Miss Elizabeth Schaffer of Philadelphia, Pa., to various Lutheran churches and institutions, $300,000.

Among the largest bequests that for various reasons did not become available till 1897 are the following.

FOR MUSEUMS, HOSPITALS, AND COLLEGES.

Henry Lillie Pierce, of Boston, Mass., to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Harvard University, Massachusetts General Hospital, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the Homeopathic Hospital, in addition to specific bequests of $50,000 each, his residuary estate in equal parts, which was found on settlement of his estate to be sufficiently large to yield each institution about $[illegible],000.

Mrs. Catharine M. Garcelon, to the City of Oakland, Cal., for a hospital, [illegible], and to Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., $[illegible].

James E. Jones, of Philadelphia, Pa., to Haverford College, Haverford, Pa., for a permanent endowment, his residuary estate of $[illegible].

Mrs. White Vose of Boston, Mass., to [illegible] and such other institutions as the trustees of her residuary estate should approve, a sum fixed by the Supreme Court at $387,166.

A pledge of the year deserving special mention was that of Washington Corrington, of Peoria, Ill., who, by executing a will containing explicit instructions, provided for the establishment in Peoria after his death of the Corrington Institute and University, with a fund of $1,500,000.

GEORGE J. HAGAR.

MISSIONARY ALMONERS.

How the Money and Grain Contributed by our Readers was Distributed among the Famine-Stricken People of India.

IN view of the confident assurance given to the public by a grossly misinformed, or extremely heartless writer, that there was "no famine nor prospect of famine in any of the fields occupied by missionaries of the Baptist Union in India," the following letter just received from Rev. W. R. Manley, Baptist missionary at Udayagiri in the Nellore district, is interesting reading. Three remittances of $500 each were sent to Mr. Manley from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund which he would doubtless have returned to us if he had been of the same mind as his writing brother in his comfortable quarters in Boston. Mr. Manley, however, kept the money, and this is the report he makes:

"With the funds you sent me I started relief works. Until my work was finished I had about three hundred persons on an average daily employed. Government did nothing, though realizing the gravity of the situation, until it became certain that the northeast rains would fail; consequently I have for months been obliged to do what I could for the suffering creatures myself. The distribution of the fund has apparently made a great impression on the Hindoos and Mohammedans who have thus had the heartlessness of their own religions put in glaring contrast with the benevolence of Christianity, and it has given me a place in their confidence which, but for this help, it would have been difficult to obtain.

"My wife and I are the only people within thirty miles, and with the exception of two other missionaries the only white people within sixty miles, otherwise I should like to have sent you some photographs of the wretched creatures whose suffering the money you so kindly sent enabled me to relieve. There would have been no lack of material if I had possessed or could have procured a camera. Not a day passes that I do not see poor creatures who are reduced to skeletons by lack of food. One poor old creature fainted yesterday [November 23] morning at the relief work recently started by the Government here. She was literally only skin and bones. I gave her something to get some food and this morning she was back at work, though so weak she could not walk without staggering. I had a little of your money still on hand, and I gave her about as much as she could earn in two days at the Government relief works, and her gratitude was pitiful to see.

"The children are the worst sufferers, and after them the aged, and the sick, and the lame, etc. What I am trying to do is to get a little money to buy grain which I can sell out at cost to those able to buy, and giving it to those who have no money, so as to make it go as far as possible. There is urgent need for such help here still, and I should be very thankful if you could send me a little more, and I would expend it faithfully in relieving the distress which at this date [November] is daily becoming worse. Thanks to that which you have already sent, I have been able to relieve the most serious cases that came to me, and have received a great many assurances of gratitude from the people thus relieved. I shall soon be quite out of funds, and it will be terrible to have to send the poor creatures away to starve unaided. On behalf of the multitudes who have thus far been fed at Udayagiri by the funds received from you I thank you most sincerely."

From an article in the Bombay Guardian by Rev. G. L. Wharton of the Christian Mission at Hurda, to whom $1,000 was sent from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund, we extract the following:

"In the disbursement of the benevolence of others, I have striven to do as I believed the Lord would have me to do, and also as the donors themselves would have done had they been present with their benevolence. I had at least one faithful Christian preacher in each place as my assistant, upon whom I could rely to honestly handle the funds, without whom I could not have undertaken such a responsibility. My Indian brethren did not disappoint me, for which I am thankful.

"We employed in various kinds of work from 400 to 700 persons for five months. We did not expect these weak and half-fed people to work much, and yet they have left a beautiful monument of the help they received. They did nearly all the work in erecting a substantial monument of the unselfishness of the religion of Christ.

"In Hurda a leper asylum consisting of seven buildings was completed, and is now being occupied by these unfortunate sufferers. "The Mission to Lepers in India and the East," of Edinburgh, furnished the extra expense for these buildings. In Timarni a native hospital is finished in which twenty-two patients were housed and treated last month. In Charwa a good well was dug and walled, affording pure water to the poor people of the village, to their great joy. Besides these, grounds have been levelled and roads made, at which over 200 persons are still engaged.

"For many months we gave food to between 200 and 300 people daily, and part of the time Miss Thompson kept a 'children's kitchen,' which supplied a meal each day to over 300. Many widows, orphans, blind, lepers, children and helpless starving men and women were supplied enough to keep them from starving to death. Clothing, medicine, food, thread, leather, bamboos, and money were given to large numbers. Before grain became so dear our preachers in Charwa and Rahatgaon bought and stored large quantities of dal, makka, jawari and mahwa, to be given out during the rains. This proved to be a most timely act which gave food to hundreds of Gonds, Korkus and others—many of whom were saved from starvation.

"We received three wagon loads of the cargo sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York. The coming of this corn, rye, and beans into our district was a sight worth seeing. On the one hand was the joy of the people; on the other the clean, beautiful grain from the homeland, in contrast with what we were used to seeing, made one more than half homesick. There was nothing more acceptable to the starving people, and no form of help we have administered was so popular with all classes. The general verdict by those acquainted with the facts was that we made it reach exactly the persons who most needed it in our district. Expressions of gratitude and satisfaction are heard on every hand from all classes, but more especially from the poorest.

"In behalf of the many poor people helped, I wished to thank again and again most heartily all the donors. They have given to the poor; they have lent to the Lord; their reward is sure."

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Cosy Firesides in Winter—Minister's Wives—Domestic Slavery—Birds on Bonnets.

HERE WE ARE again, all glad to meet, and not a bit worried by the snow falling so steadily outside and the winds blowing, for our open fire is blazing cheerily, and our lamps are trimmed, our easy-chairs drawn up to the table, and every preparation made for a cozy evening. I made that fire myself. I always fancy that I can do better with fires and lamps than anybody else, and we all know that in winter a pleasant room, well warmed and well lighted, has a great deal to do with a successful evening's entertainment.

Rosy, dear, you are the youngest, and we will let you take the footstool, since we have a crowd here already and more coming. And, grandma, this big cushioned rocker is the very place for you, where you will be quite comfortable as you beam on the rest of us through your dear, gold-rimmed spectacles. I'm glad you came, and I'm glad you brought your knitting. Mrs. Housewife, you look a little tired? No wonder, if you have been making mince-pies to-day; sit right here, in this Turkish chair, the most pillowy chair I've got, all springs and softness. And here, bless their hearts, are the minister's wife and school-marm, and a half dozen more, and now we'll begin our COUNCIL.

H. F. H. HAS SENT us a letter, and what do you think he says? "Please name six essentials of a true woman!" Now, don't everybody speak at once. Grandma, we'll ask you first.

"Sincerity is one," says grandma, rounding the heel of her stocking. "Sincerity?" Yes, and an important one, for character must have truth as its foundation, or what trust can you place in man or woman?

Well, Madam School-marm, your hand is up. What do you place next?

"Courage, if you please. Deliver me from a cowardly woman."

"Courage, the fearlessness of conviction, I suppose you mean, for I think you make a distinction between physical and moral courage. A woman may scream at a mouse, and go into a fit over a June-bug, and still be brave as a lion when it comes to a question involving principle."

"For my part," stoutly avers the school-marm, "I have no patience with any sort of a coward. My pupils do not scream at mice, nor flying-beetles, and there is no sense in letting women show that sort of silly timidity. I mean courage; courage all through, as an essential of a true woman's character."

THE MINISTER'S WIFE spoke next. "Sympathy is a requisite of the true woman," she said. "A woman who lacks this divine quality is far from being ideal in my opinion. To rejoice with those that do rejoice, and weep with those that weep is our Christian duty, and a beautiful thing in a woman's nature."

"May a man speak?" asks the deacon, who is such a favorite that we let him slip in, even when only women are holding a pow-wow. "Ladies, the crowning virtue of your sex is, in my judgment, charity!"

"Taking charity," said little Rosy from her footstool, "to mean love, it is an essential of womanliness, of course. The world would soon go to pieces if there were no love to do away with its frictions, settle its disputes, and make its desert bloom as the rose. Yes, deacon, charity, as St. Paul describes it, is a woman's greatest charm."

We all talked for a few moments, when Mrs. Housewife, who had been rather silent, exclaimed positively:

"An essential of the true woman is common sense. A character without common sense is like soup without salt. Don't cry up the other virtues, and omit this saving one."

A DEAR GENTLEWOMAN in the corner, with a grave, sweet face, and a voice to match it, here added:

"A true woman must have piety as the very warp and woof of her life. If she be deficient in this, if her relations to her heavenly Father are not right, her earthly life will be on a low plane. I cannot conceive of a true woman who is not devout, and reverential. Serving the Lord like Martha in her activities, and sitting at his feet like Mary in her prayers and meditations."

So, dear correspondent, here are our six essential characteristics of a true woman—sincerity, courage, sympathy, charity, common sense and piety.

* * *

A PERPLEXED AND indignant inquirer asks us whether a minister has a right to treat a servant as a slave. Certainly not. Neither a minister nor anybody else has the right to be inconsiderate and thoughtless in the treatment of a person in his or her employment. The best way for all people in making engagements for work and wages is to specify as nearly as possible what is required and what privileges can be granted. Then, exercise patience on both sides. Apparently the position of this friend is made difficult by her own relatives, who are rather unreasonable. Try the effect of thorough fulfilment of duty and of kind words and a gentle manner on every one concerned.

* * *

THE WEARING OF BIRDS on ladies' bonnets, of breasts, or wings, or egrets, which are the long feathers plucked from the head of the mother-bird as she sits on her nest, is a very cruel practise. I wish all my COUNCIL friends would sign petitions and send them to their State legislatures, asking that laws may be passed to protect the birds. Flowers and feathers and ribbons trim hats just as prettily as dead birds can; and girls and women would not wear them if they stopped to think of the songs hushed, the grain left to be ravished by insects, and the young birds doomed to perish by famine and neglect, all to gratify the vanity of thoughtless womanhood.

* * *

IT IS NOT VERY easy to name off-hand a round dozen of notable women of America, dear Mrs. C. A. F., but I will try. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic;" Mrs. Phebe A. Hearst, noted for wise and far-reaching benevolence; Miss Frances E. Willard, the apostle of temperance; Mrs. Ballington Booth, the angel of the prisons; Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, the friend of the plague-stricken; Mrs. Candace Wheeler, beautiful, benignant, and famous for artistic ability; Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, who has just written "The Story of Jesus Christ;" "Marion Harland," known by her pen-name all around the world, and to her friends as Mrs. Edward P. Terhune; Miss Grace E. Dodge, the constant adviser and staunch friend of the working-girl; Mrs. Darwin James, prominent as a defender of our American Sabbath, and a conspicuous worker for home and foreign missions; Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, a notable educator and former president of Wellesley College; and Miss Margaret Sullivan, the wonderful and gifted teacher of that remarkably gifted young girl, Helen Keller. On your other question, about the great tunnels of the world, you will find full information by consulting a good encyclopedia.

* * *

WITH REGARD TO what you tell me, dear Puzzled Lassie, about your fiance's apparent preference for the society of other young ladies and his indifference to your own, I can only say that I should be very much inclined to think that so negligent a lover would be far from a devoted husband. Please be very sure that you are not needlessly exacting or inclined to jealousy; but, on the other hand, remember that no bond is so sacred and irrevocable as that of marriage, and hesitate to take its obligations on yourself, unless you are persuaded that you are going to marry one whose heart and life are unalterably and entirely yours. A woman surrenders everything in marriage. A man should do no less, for these two, united in wedlock, are henceforth to be one.

Our fire burns low. It is time to say good-by till another week comes round. We have had a lovely evening, haven't we?

Dr. Hunter's Book on the Lungs.

Progress of Medical Science.

A LITTLE book, published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Lung Diseases. Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption are fully explained, their differences shown, and their cure by medicated air inhalations pointed out.

Dr. Hunter is the oldest lung specialist in America, having devoted his life, since 1851, to the special study and cure of Lung Complaints. He was the first physician to proclaim the local nature of Consumption, and to prove that it, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrhal Phthisis, endanger life solely by strangling the breathing power of the Lungs.

Dr. Hunter's treatment is applied directly to the bronchial tubes and air-cells of the lungs by inhalation. He was the father and founder of this treatment, the inventor of the first inhaling instrument ever employed in medical practice, and the discoverer of the only germicidal inhalants which have proved their power to destroy the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs, and cure consumption. In addition to applying the healing and cleansing balms to the lungs three times a day by his inhaling instruments, he anoints the chest with antiseptic oils, which surround the body with a zone of medicated air, and charges the chamber in which the patient sleeps with purifying antiseptics, thus keeping up a healing action on the lungs day and night.

This is what is meant by inhalation treatment scientifically applied to the cure of weak and diseased lungs. No other treatment in the world is so direct, common-sense, and successful. It is not sold as a nostrum, but prescribed for each case according to the nature of the disease and state of the patient.

Dr. Hunter's book contains many letters from prominent people all over the country, who have been successfully treated by him, and will be sent free to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD interested for themselves or friends by addressing him, at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Drafted into Service.*

ON Sunday morning I went to the church, which stands at the end of the village street. The service was beginning. As superintendent the postmistress was in charge. About thirty women and girls, and half a dozen boys, made up the school. The conduct of the service I thought intensely interesting. The superintendent was entirely at home in her place, and she valued the opportunity.

When the classes grouped themselves for the study of the lesson, a teacher was lacking. I was asked to take the place, and was startled at finding myself in charge of a class of village belles. What their feeling toward the arrangement was I could only guess: but it was clear that they were not accustomed to being taught by an unshaven, unshorn woodsman, in rough clothes, and boots covered with patches. But the lesson was in my favor. It was the incident of the washing of the disciples' feet at the last Passover. I soon forgot embarrassment in the interest of the text and in an atmosphere of serious study.

Last Sunday I went again to the Sunday School, where I had my former class to teach. Some preparation had been possible during the week, and the hour passed successfully. Among the announcements was one of a prayer-meeting to be held that night.

I reached the church at the hour of the evening service. I opened the door, and there sat a crowded congregation in waiting. The back seats on both sides of the aisle were solid ranks of men—lumbermen, teamsters, and tannery hands, many of them in their working-clothes. There were women and children scattered through the pews farther up, and some boys had overflowed upon the pulpit steps, but most of the company were men.

There was no one in the minister's seat; but the postmistress was in place at the organ, and as I entered she nodded to me in evident expectation of my joining her. I walked forward, and she stepped out in the aisle to meet me.

"It's time to begin," she said, quietly.

"Is your minister not come yet?" I asked.

"Oh, you're going to speak to-night, you know."

I did not know. For an instant I only knew that there was a cold, hard grip upon my heart which seemed to hold it still, and that in my brain there had begun a mad dance of all that I ever thought I knew. But from out the turmoil a sane thought emerged: This is a company of working-people, who are come to hear a fellow workman speak to them about our deepest needs." In an instant I was cooler, and a strange, unreasoning peace ensued.

I asked the postmistress to select some hymns. She handed me a list chosen with perfect knowledge of those which the congregation most enjoyed. The people were soon singing, thinly at first; but the familiar melody spread and carried with it a sense of solidarity, in which self was merged and lost, and the swelling sound rolled on deepening with the voices of the men. Soon it recalled college chapel, with the men in a mood to sing, and "Ein' Feste Burg" mounting in the majesty of that deep-toned hymn.

But more helpful to me than the singing was the sight of familiar faces. Black Bob stood towering like another Saul above the mass of men; and at his side was one of our teamsters who lives in the village, and with whom I had often loaded bark. Near the door—I was not quite sure at first, but there could be no mistake—near the door was Fitz-Adams, and not far from him Long-nosed Harry and Phil the Farmer stood together.

I was trembling when I began to speak, trembling with awful fear, a fear that was yet a solemn joy; for I had vision then of human hearts hungering to be fed, and, as a sharer in their need, I knew that it was given to me to point them to the Bread of Life.

I could speak to them now, for with greater clearness I could see these fellow workers as they were; strong, brave men who had won the mastery which comes to those who clear the way for progress; giving play in their natural living to the forces which make men free, and growing strong in heart, and in the will to do, as they grew strong of arm and caught the rough cunning of their trade. Such were they in their outward lives, the physical life within them growing in living ways and making them the true, efficient workmen that they were. But of the inner life that makes us men—that life wherein we act from choice, and must "give an account of the deeds done in the body," that range of action which we call moral, where conscience speaks to us in words of command—there they knew no mastery at all, and least of all the mastery of the moralist.

And now I could speak to them of God; of him "who is not far from every one of us, for in him we live and move and have our being;" the living God who reveals himself in all life, and who became incarnate in the Son of Man, who speaks to us in human words which go straight to our human hearts: "I am the way, the truth and the life." "And I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." "The words that I speak unto you, they are life."

"Strong Son of God!" whose living words quicken us from the death of sin and set us free. By whose grace "we are renewed in the whole man after his image, and enabled more and more to die unto sin and live unto righteousness." Who was "made sin for us, who knew no sin: that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness." Whose death was not a reconcilement of God to us, but was "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Whose Gospel is the glad tidings of this reconciliation, and we are become "ambassadors for Christ, as though God did besecch you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

And then we prayed, confessing our sinful state, our bondage, our death in sin, and pleading that we might be "transformed by the renewing of our minds, that we might prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God"

*From The Workers, the book of the year. The story of a University professor who spent two years in labor in various localities, as an unskilled laborer, in the towns and country districts from the Atlantic coast to the far West. His story of his experience is charmingly written, and is as thrilling as a romance. This extract describes a service which he led while working as a lumberman at English Centre, Lycoming Co., Pa.; price $1.25; Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, Fifth Ave., New York.

Biliousness

bosses many a body and burdens many a mind. You can't enjoy the food you like because you are bilious. You take all sorts of precautions, and yet the bilious attack leaps on you like a tiger from ambush. You know the irritability which precedes and the languor which follows the attack. It's miserable, isn't it? Why not cure the trouble? There's a pill that will cure biliousness. Dr. J. C. AYER'S PILLS are an acknowledged specific for for this derangement.

A. Swanger, Texarkana, Texas, writes: "For fifteen years I have used Dr. Ayer's Pills, and find them very effective in bilious complaints. I have yet to see the case where they have failed to cure."

They will cure you too.

CHRISTMAS AT THE BOWERY MISSION.

Five Hundred Homeless Men Fed, and Many Poor Families Made Happy.

CHRISTMAS at the Bowery Mission is always a season of great activity. At this time of the year, when the idle men in New York are numbered literally by the tens of thousands, there is an unusual amount of wretchedness and suffering. Many of the idle multitude are homeless and penniless, not knowing which way to turn for the next meal, and sleeping in empty wagons, in sheds, or friendly doorways.

As has been the custom at the Bowery Mission for several years past, a generous Christmas dinner was prepared for the homeless waifs. Dr. Klopsch, with the co-operation of many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, provided a meal for about five hundred poor men, who, on the Tuesday evening after Christmas, were regaled with turkey, pie and various other substantials. The expectant faces of these unfortunates, as they swarmed about the doors of the Mission, would have made a study for a painter. A score of nationalities were represented in the motley gathering, and all occupations, from the unemployed clerk or professional to the unskilled laborer. Old and young were there, some who had never known aught else than poverty, and others who had seen "better days." They crowded in to the feast of good things and listened to the kind words of welcome and encouragement that were spoken by the good friends who had met there to greet them. Several ladies were present on the platform, and many other friends of the Mission.

After the dinner, the hymns and the brief addresses, a vote was passed unanimously by the crowd of guests, thanking all their good friends for the pleasant entertainment and good cheer. Besides the dinner indoors for the men, the Bowery Mission made a number of homes happy by supplying them with turkeys, chickens, and other good things, by Dr. Klopsch's personal order, the cases selected being in every instance those of very poor families, where either sickness or long-continued want of employment had caused much privation and suffering.

An event of surpassing interest to hundreds of the poor little Bowery children was the distribution of gifts from Mrs. Bird's Christmas tree on the afternoon of Christmas day. To say that the little tots were made happy would be to express but weakly the delight they showed on that occasion. There was a crowded attendance, and the children fairly danced with glee when they saw the tree brilliantly lighted, and loaded with pretty presents of every description. Dr. Klopsch spoke to the children and assisted in the apportionment of the gifts. Several other short and appropriate talks were made to Mrs. Bird's proteges. A number of friends assisted at the ceremony of unloading the gift-tree.

Mrs. Bird writes us a letter about the tree, and as the letter has an interest for many readers who have a share in this beautiful work of benevolence, we give it below. It was written immediately before the distribution:

Dear Mr. Editor: Although this is the busiest day of my life, I must write a few lines. Great piles of mittens, hoods, stockings, and all manner of warm clothing are waiting to be honored by a place on our Christmas tree. My heart rejoices with gratitude, but it is useless to try to express it on paper. The last week has been one continuous song of praise and thanksgiving, and it has shown us the atmosphere of love and sacrifice which abides in the homes where your paper is a weekly guest. It is no wonder that a blessing comes to all who get entrance to its columns. Not least of all that has come to us, have been the kind words of cheer and encouragement.

Many times the tears would come as they told me of the planning and thought which was necessary if they sent us their mite. We may well count ourselves happy, as well as rich, to have such friends scattered all over this big country. From far and near have come, each day, blessings made precious by the prayers of the givers. We consider the dispensing of these charities a sacred trust. How I wish I could write a personal letter to each generous friend—especially to "Grandma," whose letter, written with trembling hand, told us of her joy as she had woven her love to God and his children in every stitch of the beautiful mittens which she sent us; to the poor widow who sent her mite; to the crippled boy who gave out of his small savings to make some child happy. But while we feel it so utterly impossible to thank personally each one of our dear friends, it is a comfort that our Father will surely, in his own way, reward a thousand-fold. Let all imagine Dr. Klopsch the most happy and the most tired man in the world Christmas night, after giving out hundreds of gifts to hundreds of children.

S. J. BIRD.

A SONG OF JESUS.

IN heavenly rest abiding,
My soul doth sweetly sing;
In Jesus I'm confiding,
My all to him I bring.

The way is growing brighter,
My path more sure and clear;
And cares becoming lighter,
With Jesus ever near.

His grace benignly filling
My life with peace and joy;
His love my spirit thrilling,
His praise my lips employ.

May naught my hold e'er sever
From him, the typic vine;
In which, abiding ever,
A fruitful branch I'll shine.

A GREAT WAR BALLOON.

Many costly experiments have been made with the object of constructing a balloon that shall be serviceable in war. After numerous failures, military experts in Europe believe they are at last at the point of success and that before long, great machines of destruction will be seen cleaving the atmosphere and moving in any desired direction with a speed hitherto unheard of. The latest of these balloon experiments recently took place near Berlin, when a great funnel shaped contrivance, (said to be made of aluminum) was tested in the open country near the German capital with great satisfaction. Its mechanism is kept a secret. When in the air, it moved about freely, at great speed, for a considerable time, going with almost equal facility either with or against the wind. Just as the demonstration was about to be concluded, some of the gearing became entangled, the machinery was blocked and the giant balloon dipped and curved slowly earthward. It alighted in a field, without serious damage, although the exposed mechanism was dismantled and somewhat twisted. The party of passengers escaped injury.

THE NEW GERMAN WAR BALLOON.

A Conversion Anniversary.

It is now customary among many Christians to celebrate in a becoming manner the anniversary of their spiritual birthday—the date of their conversion. One of these birthday celebrations was held at the Bowery Mission a few days ago, William C. Church being the celebrant. Some of those present on this occasion could distinctly recall Mr. Church's first appearance at the Mission. He was famished and some one had told him he could get something to eat there by asking for it. He did so and was satisfied, and afterward stayed through the meeting. He was dressed in an old faded and patched ulster, and he looked the roughest man in that gathering. He listened attentively to the testimonies of the converts, and at the close of the service came forward, but did not seem to get much help. For five nights he came and knelt at the mercy-seat at the invitation and found at last the peace of God "which passeth understanding." He had been a drunkard for a quarter of a century, and separated from wife and children. It was a happy wife who sat on the Mission platform beside him last week with her son and other relatives and listened to the wonderful experience of God's saving and keeping power. The members of class-meeting, of the Duane Methodist Church, including the pastor Rev. Dr. Carpenter, were present. Three other Ministers of the Gospel attended and spoke to the large gathering of the inspiration such an example as this wonderful conversion should be to believers everywhere.

The First Gospel Message.

Mr D. L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, writing of the Nativity, makes use of this beautiful passage in describing the message to the shepherds:

"Nothing could be more given to mortal ears than that Gospel message delivered to the watching shepherds on the Judean hills. There may have been a special luminosity about that night. Above, the heavens were resplendent with the glory of God, and even the dim eyes of mortals began to appreciate the beauty of the scene and get a foretaste of the joy that was coming. The noise of the busy streets in the distance was very small, and one by one the lights in houses disappeared. In the midst of all this still those who had long looked for the promised redemption gaze down upon the scene. Prophet and law-giver, king and leader, all look toward the One who shall make the atonement for their transgressions. And as the shepherds watched and waited for the morn I imagine that their thoughts and conversation were on heavenly things. It may have been that they were talking over the strange rumors which they had heard regarding the son that was born to Zacharias, and how it had been prophesied that he was to become the Prophet of the Highest. At least, their thoughts and conversation that night must have been on things above, for God reveals his best gifts to those "whose minds are stayed on him." "The time is at hand," I can imagine one saying, "the Messiah will soon be here to save us from our enemies." "Great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee," exclaims another. And thus as they rejoice among themselves there suddenly bursts upon their sight the glorious light of the other world; midnight gloom is transformed into midday brightness, and there appears before them an angel of the Lord. He proclaims the deliverance for which this world had so long yearned. With exultant shout the choir of heaven chants again the Gospel message, that first and glorious carol song.

Saving the Tenement Boys.

In a recent article, Mr. Jacob Riis, the well known philanthropist, makes this interesting statement relative to the moral effect of Church Settlement clubs among tenement-house boys:

Observation long since taught us that crime in all cities is to the largest extent a question simply of athletics, of a chance to play. The Boys' Club is the most effective antidote of the gang . . . . because it exactly meets this need. The boy wants it. If he cannot have a decent club, he will have the other kind. The gang is the club caricatured by the street . . . . The club must have its leader, too. Everything depends on him . . . . Here is a club of thirty-odd tenement-house boys. Its sessions are always preceded by an hour's romp. The boys learn to respect each other's rights.

The latter stages bring the discussion of punishment for offenses, and realization of the fact that there are grades and mitigating circumstances; with, finally, the discovery, evolved by the boys themselves, that all punishment is self-defense, not vengeance, and the natural consequence of law-breaking. . . . . The road is not all smooth, but it points right. . . . . The gang will be a tradition of the bad past. In San Francisco, of nine thousand children from the slums that went through the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association's schools, just one got into jail. The Boys' Club is the kindergarten carried into the boys' later, growing years—nothing else.

An Active Society.

The Danish Missionory Society held its annual meeting recently in Copenhagen. It comprises 600 branch societies, with an active membership of 25,000. The receipts for the past year amounted to about $27,500.

GRATIFYING RESULTS

INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS WITH THE NEW STOMACH REMEDY.

Not a patent Medicine, But a Safe Cure for all Forms of Indigestion.

The results of recent investigation have established, beyond question, the great value of the new preparation for indigestion and stomach troubles; it is composed of the digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar stomachics, prepared in the form of 20 gram lozenges, pleasant to the taste, convenient to carry when traveling, harmless to the most delicate stomach, and probably safest, most effectual cure yet discovered for indigestion, sour stomach, loss of appetite and flesh, nausea, sick headaches, palpitation of heart, and the many symptoms arising from imperfect digestion of food. They cure because they cause the food to be promptly and thoroughly digested before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood and nervous system.

Over six thousand people in the State of Michigan alone in 1894 were cured of stomach troubles by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Full sized packages may be found at all druggists at 50c, or sent by mail on receipt of price from Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. Send for free book on stomach diseases.

We direct special attention to the following remarkable statement.

For eighteen years I was not able to do any work, was confined to the house three years, eyes were weak and discharged great deal of mucous, was deaf in right ear, suffered intensely with pain in head, had fainting spells, often thought would lose my mind. Eighteen months ago used Aerial Medication, in two weeks hearing was fully restored, Catarrh gradually subsided, and in six months was entirely cured. I feel like a new person.—MRS. KATE ELLEGOOD, 2221 Walnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

GOD'S VARIETY.

THE glad New Year with its changing scenes
Will soon go fleeting by.
With some days glad,
And some days bad,
And oft the tearful eye
Will tell its silent tale of woe,
That none but God and self may know.
One day may bring thee ecstasy—
The morn may glow with sunshine,
And the evening send its rain.
And thus throughout life's pattern
No plan thine eyes may see,
Yet through it all, God leads and works
His own variety.

When the loom of life is silent,
And the pattern is complete;
With the day of toiling ended,
We shall gather at his feet;
What lasting joy shall then be brought
From out life's mystery!
In perfect pattern shall be wrought
God's own variety.

Chicago, Ill. GRANT COLFAX TULLAR.

An Eloquent Centenarian.

One of the most remarkable colored men of the day, in some respects, is Andrew Montgomery, whose photograph is given on this page. Mr. Montgomery, who is known as the "Black Beecher" of the South, has reached an age several years beyond the century mark. He comes from Atlanta, Ga., and is visiting Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and other northern and eastern States on a mission for the benefit of his race. For over thirty years he was a slave. His youngest son is seventy-four years old. Soon after his marriage, his wife was sold by his owner to another master and they never met again. Mr. Montgomery is a man of strong Christian faith, and believes that, notwithstanding his great age and bodily weakness, the Lord will carry him safely through his journey. He says:

"I'm being carried by the Lord in my travels. I told him I would go if he would help me. I told him how weak and old I was, and that I could not walk fast and get about pert, and he carries me, by his divine power, wherever I want to go. I was not afraid to start on the trip. I never could have gone if I hadn't had God to help me."

While in Washington, recently, he was introduced to President McKinley by Gen. Longstreet, and received a cordial welcome. He is really a remarkable man for his age, being tall and still erect, with bright, intelligent eyes and a ready flow of language that would not discredit many a pulpit orator. Our photograph is by W. T. Kuhns, of Atlanta, Ga.

Caring for Armenian Orphans.

The American Board of Foreign Missions has received a special report of the work undertaken by the American missionaries in Asia Minor, on behalf of the Armenian orphan children. The report states that there are upwards of twenty centres, most of them in the interior of Turkey, where children are cared for. Including the work of Germans, the Swiss, and the British, the care of above three thousand children have been assumed. A larger number is said to be still uncared for whose future is reported to be very dark. The work is undertaken in the cheapest possible way. Buildings have been in the most cases either loaned for the work or rented at a low rate, so that funds given can be used entirely for the maintenance of the orphans without any charge for administration or plant. The orphans were originally taken for only a year, in the expectation that greater plenty and cheaper living would not longer require care. Many waifs, with no one to care for their souls or bodies, continue to arrive there from desolated villages, hungry, naked, sick, and in danger of their lives."

"Peniel Mission" Opened.

PENIEL Mission is the name of a new work of rescue recently opened at No. 39 Bowery, New York. Miss Ella Shaw is the leader, and concerning the work under her charge she writes as follows:

"About a fortnight before the opening of No. 39 Bowery as a mission, four of us knelt in the then dusty, unused room, consecrating it to God and from that hour we have felt it was set apart to the service of Jesus Christ and the salvation of lost souls. Our purpose in taking the room and afterward thowing it open as a mission was expressed at that time, as we asked our Father in heaven to make it a real life-saving station where many weary, heavy laden and sick with sin, should be drawn to Jesus.

"On Sunday, Dec. 19, at three P.M. the public dedication services were held and the large hall was filled to overflowing with earnest, sympathizing Christians and many men from the street. The meeting was conducted by Rev. H. Wilson and each of the several speakers expressed the desire that it might, from the first, be a place of salvation. After many had gone in the afternoon meeting led by Rev. Mr. James, several seekers were found at the altar. The night meeting was a salvation meeting, and at its close there staggered to the front a man more than half intoxicated and a living picture of ruin and misery. With many tears he cried to God for deliverance and the answer came. Night after night he has been back since with a clean face and bright eyes testifying to the power of Christ to save, and praying at the altar with others that they may be saved as he has been.

"This is our one object in opening Peniel Mission—the rescuing of the lost. To this end there will be a Gospel Meeting every night at 7:30. One thing that we hope to make an especial feature of our work is the Noon-day prayer meeting which will be held every week-day and the Sunday afternoon meeting at three P.M. We are trusting that this other life-boat God has launched into the open sea of the Bowery, with its many life wrecks, may be able to pick up many who are sinking and perishing."

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free to all Readers.

All readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

TRIAL PACKAGE FREE!

If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years standing. Address, JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

The fact that rheumatism is caused by a morbid condition of the blood, explains the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla in curing this disease. Remember, take Hood's and only Hood's.

FOR IRRITATION OF THE THROAT caused by Cold or use of the voice, Brown's "Bronchial Troches" are exceedingly beneficial.

NO DIFFERENCE.

In an interview on the effects of tea and coffee-drinking on the system Dr. Jacques Loeb, the well-known writer, thus expresses himself. "Coffee-drinking of any kind, and tea-drinking likewise are mere habits. And they are the same as the alcoholic habit, as poisonous in a way, but not so deadly. The chemical elements in coffee and tea are exactly the same, and the effect on the nervous centers the same. They create unnatural nervous excitement. Alcohol goes a step further and paralyzes the living cells. Black coffee contains this deadly poison as surely as cafe au lait."

Everyone agrees that tea and coffee-drinking undermines the system and produces nervous prostration, dyspepsia and stomach disorders, but thousands go right on using them just the same. There is, however, a great army of people who are mindful of their health who are using Postum Cereal Food Coffee. This food drink is made of nature's grains and builds up the systems that have been impaired by the use of tea and coffee.

When boiled full 15 minutes after boiling commences it tastes like the better grades of Java. Postum is not a substitute for coffee but a pure food drink recommended by the best physicians in America. Grocers sell it at 25 cents a package.

Substitutors drug their concoctions to give them a coffee flavor. Genume packages of Postum have red seals and the words, "It makes red blood," thereon.

Can We Be Cured

Of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption?

A Test by Which the True Value of All Treatments Can be Determined.

How many thousands there are to-day who would gladly pay almost any reasonable sum to be cured of either one of the above diseases, but who, knowing of so many remedies and treatments, are at a loss to decide which one to try. It does seem a difficult task, yet becomes a comparatively easy one if the person afflicted will but use a little good judgment and common sense. In the first place every man and woman knows or should know, that the air passages were made for air alone, and that nature has so constructed these passages that moisture of any kind cannot enter the bronchial tubes or lungs. This at once precludes all possibility of a cure of these deep-seated diseases being effected by treatment requiring the use of sprays, douches, atomizers, vapors or stomach medicines. This all regular physicians admit and acknowledge that the diseased parts must be reached through the air we breathe or not at all. Not only this, a germicide must be used which will leave the air dry and yet have the power to destroy the bacilli of disease in the minutest air cells of the lungs.

This decision reached, then comes the question—Is there such a germicide? In answer to this query, thirty-eight hundred physicians and over three hundred thousand persons who have tested say YES. "HYOMEI" is Nature's own remedy, given through the only vehicle (the air you breathe) which Nature permits to enter the bronchial tubes and lungs. "HYOMEI"

Cures by Inhalation.

There is no danger, no risk. Your money is refunded if it fails to relieve.

Rev. B. N. Palmer, D. D., of New Orleans, says:—

For example, if there is atrophy of the nerve, or any other of the several afflictions to which the eye is troubled, it is due to the fact that the eye has become sluggish and dormant. The theory is to wake up that sluggish eye and make every part perform the functions which nature assigns to that part. "The treatment is to act directly upon the eye as an organ by various harmless agents applied to stimulate and to vitalize the eye; then the circulation may be restored, the blood will be thrown back on all the parts where it is needed to nourish, so there need be no disease of the eyes which cannot be reached by this treatment, thus avoiding the knife and all risk.

"I consulted Dr. Knapp, of New York, and Dr. Pope, of New Orleans, who diagnosed my case as Atrophy. After one year's treatment they pronounced my case hopeless. In July, 1896, I consulted E. H. Bemis, Eye Specialist, one eye being nearly sightless and the other only available with the aid of a strong magnifying glass. I had nothing to lose and a great deal to gain. After treatment the strong magnifying glass was discarded and glasses used years ago enabled me to read."

An average of over 6,000 treatments given monthly at the Bemis Sanitarium, and hundreds successfully treated at their homes by mail. Pamphlet free, describing treatment.

celebrates the beginning of its 38th year of continuous prosperous publication by a reduction in price.

There is scarcely any other magazine now published that has had as long and as prosperous a career. It has many people on its subscription list who have been reading it for 37 years. The reduction in price made possible by the recent improvements in engraving, printing and paper-making should greatly enlarge its constituency. No other magazine gives more for the money.

It is a magazine for the whole family. It gives as much general matter as an exclusively literary magazine. It treats household topics as fully as a strictly domestic journal. It gives as much interesting matter for young people as a strictly young people's publication. It gives as much fashion news as a strictly fashion paper. It is the only magazine that gives patterns of its fashion designs for the mere cost of postage. It is beautifully printed, beautifully illustrated, and carefully edited.

NO BETTER GIFT than a year's subscription to Demorest's Magazine can be made. By subscribing AT ONCE you can get the Magazine at the edneed price, and will also receive the handsome 25c. GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor, I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, was so called, the Austrians applying the title to him in derision, as a king whose power was kept together by the cold, but who, as he approached a warmer climate, would prove to be impotent, and his sovereignty would melt away.

W. R. H., Duncan, A. T. What is the undergirding mentioned (Acts 27: 17) as having been done to the ship on which Paul was when he was shipwrecked?

Ropes were passed around the ship, not from stem to stern, but at right angles to the length of the ship. The process is now known as "frapping." Cables for the purpose were carried by ancient ships. The object was to keep the planks from starting under the strain of a storm. Several instances in modern times of this being done are on record. One among many that might be given is reported by the Gazette, of Cornwall, England, of May 26, 1854. It states that the bark Highbury had just come in from Australia, with a cargo of copper, gold and wool. She had experienced rough weather on her voyage, and it had been necessary to "have a chain cable passed around the ship's bottom to hold her together."

J., Atlanta, Ga. Do the Scriptures sanction divorce on the ground of desertion?

This is a disputed question. The only passage dealing with it is 1. Cor. 7: 10-15. Whether the apostle there means that the person who, he says, "is not in bondage," is entitled to marry again during the lifetime of the deserting partner, is doubtful. It seems unreasonable, however, that a man deserted by his wife, or a wife deserted by her husband, should be precluded from making a second marriage by the misconduct of another. It generally happens, too, that there is good reason for suspecting that desertion is not the only offense against the marriage tie that the deserting partner has committed, but as it is sometimes impossible to furnish proof of the fact, while desertion can be easily proved, most of the churches sanction divorce for desertion; but direct and explicit sanction from the Scriptures there is none.

Epworth Leaguer, Circlegreen, O. Is it possible for a truly regenerate person to fall away and be lost?

We believe that when a Christian falls into sin, God, by his providence, leads him to repentance, and that eventually he is restored; but it would be unwise, as well as wicked, for any man to test in his own person the possibility of being finally cast away. It is a terrible thing for a man who has made profession of Christ to fall away. It brings reproach on the name of Christ, and shows base ingratitude to him. In being willing to receive and restore backsliders he shows divine magnanimity. If such love and tenderness is despised we should doubt whether the man has ever been really regenerated.

E. H. M., Lebanon, Pa. 1. Is it consistent to hold business sessions of a church society on the Sabbath Day? 2. If not, when should they be held? 3. Does the drawing of an order constitute the payment of a bill, and is it not wrong to pay bills on Sunday? 4. Is it not entirely in line with Christianity to do away with, just as much as possible, the consideration of any problem on the Sabbath Day that would invite the criticism of the outside world? 5. Does not, in your judgment, much of the business that is carried into the Sabbath sessions partake of the worldly, and for this reason make it particularly wrong to have a session on that day?

1. No; there is no reason why all purely business matters should not be attended to during the week; leaving the Sabbath wholly devoted to the purposes for which it was ordained. 2. There are six other days from which to choose. Select the evening most agreeable to a majority of your people. 3. It is secular business and out of place on the Sabbath. We can imagine rare and excusable exceptions, however. 4. Not exclusively so. There may be questions of public moment that demand consideration, even on the Sabbath. 5. Such sessions, to be spiritually helpful, should not mingle worldly affairs with sacred things. In all these matters, however, it is well to remember that there may be occasions which justify a departure from the general rule. Individual cases should be considered in all their bearings before passing judgment, otherwise injustice might be done.

J. H., New Salem, Kans. Will you please state briefly what is required to constitute men and women Christians?

Faith in Christ. (See Acts 16: 31). If you ask what kind of faith, we should say further, that it is the kind that issues in a Christ-like life. The mere belief that Christ lived and died is not the kind of faith we mean; but such a belief in him as a Saviour that you look to him for salvation from sin and for the power to live a holy life, that you steadfastly seek to be like him, to obey his precepts in all things, and that you make public confession of him before the world. The change in you that this faith works will be so great that Christ described it as being born again. You will be a new man, because your principles, aims and manner of life will be radically changed.

Mrs. S. P. S., Foxvale, Mass. 1. What would be the cost of keeping one child in India? 2. Are not most of the Armenians Roman or Greek Catholics?

Mrs. M. H. A., Battle Creek, Mich. When and by whom was Jerusalem first destroyed, and when was its last destruction?

There is no record of the history of Jerusalem prior to that furnished by the Jewish historians. It is first mentioned in the Bible as having been overcome by Joshua when its King, Adonizedek, entered into an alliance against the Hebrews, but whether it was then razed is uncertain (see Joshua, 10 chapter). Laler (about 1500 B.C.), it was captured and burned (see Judges, 1: 1-8), though the conflagration does not seem to have been general in the city. About 588, B.C., Nebuchadnezzar, after a three years' siege, took the city, razed its walls, destroyed its temple and palaces with fire and made it a ruin. In A.D. 70, it was captured by the Romans, and the whole city, except three towers and a part of the western wall, was demolished, the temple included. Since that time, it has undergone many sieges and its defences have been repeatedly cast down, but never to the same terrible extent as in the disaster in the first century of the present era.

A. L., Lancaster, O. My father left property to be divided equally between his seven sons and two daughters, and one farm for the support of his widow. For sixteen years I devoted myself to the care of my mother, and as she was paralyzed during the last seven years of her life, the burden was a heavy one. Ought the property, especially the farm, to be sold and equally divided, or have I not a claim for my services to our mother?

It would not be right for us to give an opinion without more complete knowledge of the circumstances. We presume, however, that the executors have no alternative, but must obey the directions of your father's will, and sell the property and divide it share and share alike. You have a moral claim on your brothers and sisters for the services you have rendered, but only a lawyer with the will in his hand could tell you whether you have a legal claim.

Constant Reader, Tallahassee, Fla. Is it true that a large proportion of notorious criminals are fine Bible scholars, who were cognizant of the Bible when they committed their crimes?

We are not aware of there being statistics showing what proportion of criminals had a religious education. Forgers, embezzlers, swindlers, and such classes of criminals are generally men of education, and may be presumed to know the teaching of the Bible, Probably the majority of burglars and the lower type of criminals know less about it. Mere intellectual knowledge of the precepts of the Bible does not have much influence in keeping men from crime. It is the man who tries to obey them and govern his life by them who feels their deterrent power.

Reader, Brooklyn, N. Y., informs us that in the traditional "Book of Jasher," it is said, the name "Ado" is given to Lot's wife.

J. Z. M., Greentown, Ind. How should manuscript for a book be prepared for a publisher?

To answer in detail would require considerable space. Briefly, let us say: 1. Write clearly on one side of the paper (type-writing is preferable to hand-writing). 2. Put title and author's name on first page. 3. Have the whole divided into chapters, numbered and titled. 4. Make a simple list of contents, leaving the pages opposite each chapter to be filled in by the printer. 5. Send MS. to the publisher by mail flat, between boards, and neither rolled nor folded. 6. Send your own name and address also, with postage stamps for return of MS.

Student, Brooklyn, N. Y. Will you please give the boundaries of Decapolis during the time of our Lord; I have the boundaries of the other four provinces, but cannot get the correct ones of Decapolis. Also give the name of the ten cities contained therein?

1. The district or province of Decapolis included ten cities and their adjacent villages or suburbs, situated in the neighborhood of the Sea of Gennesaret near the eastern side of the Jordan, and in the Roman province of Syria. The limits of the territory were not very clearly defined, and ancient geographers speak of the province somewhat indefinitely. Pliny names Damascus, Philadelphia, Raphana, Scythopolis, Gadara, Hippos, Dion, Pella, Gelasa and Canatha as the ten cities. Josephus excludes Damascus, and other authorities make other differences in the list. For full information as to wheat, write the Agricultural Department, Washington, D. C.

G. F. L., New Brunswick, N. J. Please tell me if the word "Dree" is in the Bible, and where?

No. It is a Scottish word, and means to suffer, or endure, deeply—to drink the dregs of remorse.

Inquirer, New York. 1. Is it wrong for a person to take the communion on Sunday, who does not live a Christian life during the week? 2. Does the Bible state or imply that the Apostles observed Sunday as the Sabbath? 3. Which day should be kept as the Sabbath? 4. In which part of the year should Christmas be observed?

1. The wrong is in not living a Christian life during the week. He who takes the communion thereby avows himself a follower of Christ. He who nameth the name of Christ should depart from iniquity. 2. One instance is Acts 20: 7. 3. Sunday should be devoted to God. It is not necessary to keep it as the Sabbath because the Sabbath meant a day of complete rest, whereas the Christian would do well to make it a day of service. 4. Prof. Andrews, who has made an exhaustive study of the question, thinks that Christ was born in December.

Old Subscriber, Randolph, Vt. Who was John Boyle O'Reilly? 2. Did he publish a volume of poems? If so, from what publishing house should I purchase a copy?

1. He was an editor, poet, and general writer of note. 2. You can purchase a volume of his poems from Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

M. T., Brooklyn, N. Y. Does the Lord actually create evil as he is said to do (Isa. 45: 7), or is the passage wrongly translated?

The passage is correctly rendered. If you read the whole chapter you will perceive the prophet's meaning. He represents God as present in all things. The things which seem untoward come from him, as well as things which add to our comfort and happiness. It is easy to believe that God made the light, but the prophet assures us he made the darkness, too. He sends peace, and we praise him; but can we, like the patriarch, praise him when he sends trial and say, "Shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord and shall we not receive evil?"

F. A., Casewill, Wis. 1. Who was the first to see Christ after his resurrection? 2. From what part of Palestine did he ascend to heaven? I want to believe and be a Christian, but there are many parts of the Bible that do not seem clear to me.

1. Mary Magdalene appears to have been first. (See Mark 16: 9.) 2. The Mount of Olives near Bethany. (See Luke 24: 50.) Do you not think that you are worrying yourself about matters that do not signify? If you want to be a Christian why do you not look to the living Christ and ask him to give you power to live the Christian life. It is of no importance to you whether this or that one saw him first. What you need is life and power, and if you wait till all your difficulties are solved you may never get them. It is like insisting on understanding the physician's prescription and where the drugs he prescribes come from and how they are to operate on the organs of your body and heal the disease, before you take the medicine. You might die before you learned all. The sensible man is he who trusts the physician whom he decides to intrust with his case, and takes the medicine he prescribes.

THE FAMOUS MAGNOLIA AVENUE, RIVERSIDE, CALIF.

This magnificent Avenue has been justly called "California's Pride." It is between seven and eight miles in length, and its glorious palms and pepper trees, planted at regular distances along its entire length, make it look beautiful and imposing. The wide drive is a popular resort. Riverside is a comparatively small town, but it produces the best oranges in the State. Last year's crop of the golden fruit was estimated to be worth a million dollars.

LET ALL HELP POOR CUBA NOW!

60,000 Starving and 200,000 Already Dead of Hunger

OUR GOVERNMENT APPOINTS A CENTRAL RELIEF COMMITTEE.

Hon. C. A. Schieren, of the New York Chamber of Commerce; Stephen E. Barton, of the Red Cross; and Dr. Louis Klopsch, Proprietor of "The Christian Herald," Selected by the President to Conduct the Relief Movement. A Frightful Condition of Affairs at Our Very Doors.

THE LANDING-PLACE, SANTIAGO DE CUBA.

CUBA'S piteous appeal for succor, as presented in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has touched the hearts of the people of our Union, and the government at Washington, recognizing the terrible urgency of the case, has taken prompt action to make the relief movement a national one. Following the publication of the facts about Cuba in our last week's issue, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in behalf of its readers, telegraphed to Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of State, tendering the Christian co-operation of this journal in any relief work to be undertaken, and at the same time contributing one thousand dollars to aid the work at the outset. On the following Saturday, the managers of the Red Cross Society in Washington held a conference with the State Department officials and immediately thereafter Assistant Secretary Adee, in behalf of the Government, proposed the appointment of a central or executive committee of relief to consist of three gentlemen, under whose direction the movement should be conducted throughout the whole country. The committee, as it now stands complete, is as follows:

STEPHEN E. BARTON, American Red Cross, Chairman.
Hon. CHAS. A. SCHIEREN, New York Chamber of Commerce, Sec. & Treas.
Dr. LOUIS KLOPSCH, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

This committee held its first session in the Bible House, New York, on Jan. 3, 1898, and organized for practical service. It was determined to invite the co-operation of the various Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade throughout the country and to take all necessary steps to enlist the sympathies of the entire nation.

The State Department in Washington has issued the following:

"The Secretary of State has the pleasure to announce to the charitably disposed public of the United States that, through the co-operation of the American National Red Cross and the Chamber of Commerce of New York, and in connection with the generous offer of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, heretofore made public, a Central Committee of three has been organized in the City of New York for the reception and forwarding of money and supplies for the relief of the suffering people of the island of Cuba, in whose behalf the Secretary of State appealed to the benevolent people of the United States on the 24th of December.

"The Central Cuban Relief Committee, as now organized, is composed of Mr. Stephen E. Barton, Second Vice-President of the American National Red Cross; Mr. Charles A. Schieren, a member of the Chamber of Commerce and representing that body, and Mr. Louis Klopsch, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York.

"The Central Cuban Relief Committee will shortly make public appeal for money and supplies to be sent to Cuba for the relief of the destitution and suffering now existing and which so nearly appeals to every generous sentiment of the American people, who have never turned a deaf ear to a cry for help from their needy and afflicted brethren in other lands. In the meantime, and with a view to encouraging the promptest aid from any and all quarters, contributions and supplies may be forwarded to New York, addressed to any one of the three members of the committee, with the assurance that they will be duly acknowledged and sent at once to the Consul-General at Havana."

Simultaneously with the appointment of the Central Cuban Relief Committee, comes the news from Cuba that over sixty thousand native non-combatants are even now absolutely dying of starvation. An article in the Diario, a leading journal of Havana, which had been approved by the official censor, gave the following startling facts concerning the suffering in a single province of Cuba:

"According to the latest census the population of the Province of Matanzas on Dec. 31, 1897, was 253,616 persons. The order of concentration compelled 99,312 persons to abandon their homes, which were destroyed. They were herded in the towns without any resources. Up to Nov. 30 the frightful number of 20,044 of these hapless beings had died of hunger, and 17,456 had disappeared and have probably died. To-day 61,812 persons, of whom 17,199 are men, 20,404 women, and 24,209 children, are starving. Sixty per cent. of them, according, to the physicians, will surely die from the diseases produced by famine. If we consider what has happened in other provinces of Cuba, more populous than Matanzas, it is not an exaggeration to say that 200,000 pacificos have died of hunger and 200,000 more will surely die of it."

Starvation and its concomitant diseases are claiming more victims than Spanish shot and shell. One correspondent telegraphs:

"The pacificos are dying by scores of famine and smallpox."

The American people owe it to themselves and to the religion of Jesus Christ, which they profess, to reach out the hand of succor to these helpless and dying Cubans. Any aid rendered to these unfortunates who have been left to starve and to perish of disease, will be a service done in his name, whose whole life on earth was a ministry of helpfulness to those who were down-trodden, despised, and neglected. The high sanction of the United States Government has been given to this humane work, and the urgent appeal of the State Department should not be permitted to pass unheeded. We trust that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, ever prompt and cheerful in enterprises of humanity, and whose glorious benevolences have already gone abroad "to the utmost ends of the earth," will take the cause of Cuba to their hearts and respond liberally and promptly to the call. Subscriptions will be received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and every contribution, no matter how small, will be acknowledged in its columns. All moneys contributed and all clothing and provisions sent will also be duly acknowledged. Contributions should be sent addressed:

CUBAN RELIEF FUND,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York.

For the guidance of those who may wish to contribute clothing or provisions the following list, showing the character of the articles needed, has been supplied by Consul-General Lee at Havana:

"Summer clothing for women and children, medicines for fevers, principally quinine; hard bread, flour, cornmeal, cereal preparations, bacon, rice, lard, potatoes, beans, peas, salt fish, canned goods, particularly nourishing soups; meat extracts, blankets and large quantities of condensed milk."

THE HARBOR OF SANTIAGO DE CUBA.

Horticulture as a School Study.

A movement to introduce the study of horticulture into our rural schools is one which heartily recommends itself to all practical educators. At the recent meeting of the Northern Illinois Horticultural Society, a speaker advocating this movement asks: "How shall it be taught?" and answers: "Let the work be practical. Do not depend altogether on books. Let it be taught in our public schools."

Jewish Colonies in Palestine.

They are Growing and Prosperous, and Promise to be Permanent.

WHEN the persecution of the Jews became severe in Roumania, in 1879, they naturally turned to the Holy Land, and in the following year two agricultural villages, Zichron-Ja'akob and Rosh-Pinah, were established, says a writer in Harpers. These colonists suffered many privations and hardships at first, for few of them knew anything about agriculture, as they had been merchants and mechanics in their former home; but gradually they adapted themselves to their new life, and at present these villages are most prosperous. There are a thousand persons living on the five thousand acres of land belonging to Zichron-Ja'akob. The chief products are wine, sesame, and barley, fruits, honey and silk. The latest improvements in agricultural methods have been adopted. The village has bought and uses in common a steam-plow and steam-mill. It has its own water-works; the streets of the town are paved; it has a nursery for raising young plants, and large cellars for the storage of wine. Near it, and almost a part of the larger settlement, is Tantura, where thirty families live, supporting themselves chiefly by laboring in a large glass factory, but also cultivating the soil to some extent. The four hundred colonists of Rosh-Pinah cultivate over sixteen hundred acres of land. Besides the universal vine and mulberry tree, they pay special attention to acacia trees, the blossoms of which are used in the large perfumery factory here. Here, too, is the centre of silk manufacture, the silk-worms from the other colonies being brought to the steam-mill of Rosh-Pinah for spinning and weaving. Doubtless colonization in Palestine would have advanced very slowly had it not been for anti-Semitic persecutions. The year 1881 saw Russia in the throes of Jewish oppression, and some of the exiles turned hopefully towards Palestine. The abandoned land of Pethach-Thikvah was reoccupied, and a new colony, Rishon l'Zion, founded in 1882. Both of these colonies are now thriving, making more than half a million gallons of wine every year, besides having thirty thousand mulberry trees for the silkworms, and thousands of trees bearing figs, apples, pomegranates, almonds and oranges. Organizations were now started in Russia itself to aid in opening more settlements. A society of the students of the universities of Odessa, Moscow, St. Petersburg and Harkov was formed, which resulted, in 1884, in the colony Gadarah, or Katra, where some hundred students engaged in the cultivation of the vine and fruits and other manufactures. It has become an intellectual centre, producing more than one valuable contribution to letters and science, written in classical Hebrew. An international Russian society was also formed, Ohave Zion (Friends of Zion), whose chief purpose is the support of the Palestinian colonies. Hardly a year passes without the foundation of one or more colonies, until now there are twenty-three of these agricultural settlements. There are about six thousand colonists, who have a hundred thousand acres of land under cultivation. While the chief products are wine, silk and fruits, each colony has some specialty. Jessud-Hama'alah, for instance, cultivates roses for the manufacture of perfumery; Merom has 24,000 olive-trees; another devotes special attention to cattle-raising, and those colonies east of the River Jordan raise large quantities of wheat.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Good and Bad Club-Houses.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: II. Sam. 2: 14. . . . .

Let the young men now arise and play before us.

THERE are two armies encamped by the pool of Gibeon. The time hangs heavily on their hands. One army proposes a game of sword-fencing. Nothing could be more healthful and innocent. The other army accepts the challenge. Twelve men against twelve men, the sport opens. But something went adversely. Perhaps one of the swordsmen got an unlucky clip, or in some way had his ire aroused, and that which opened in sportfulness ended in violence, each one taking his contestant by the hair, and then with the sword thrusting him in the side; so that that which opened in innocent fun ended in the massacre of all the twenty-four sportsmen. Was there ever a better illustration of what was true then, and is true now, that that which is innocent may be made destructive?

At this season of the year the Club-houses of our towns and cities are in full play. I have found out that there is a legitimate and an illegitimate use of the club-house. In the one case it may become a healthful recreation, like the contest of the twenty-four men in the text when they began their play; in the other case it becomes the massacre of body, mind, and soul, as in the case of these contestants of the text when they had gone too far with their sport. All intelligent ages have had their gatherings for political, social, artistic, literary purposes—gatherings characterized by the blunt old Anglo-Saxon designation of "club."

If you have read history, you know that there was a King's Head Club, a Ben Jonson Club, a Brothers' Club, to which Swift and Bolingbroke belonged; a Literary Club, which Burke and Goldsmith and Jonson and Boswell made immortal; a Jacobin Club, a Benjamin Franklin Junto Club. Some of these to indicate justice, some to favor the arts, some to promote good manners, some to despoil the habits, some to destroy the soul. If one will write an honest history of the clubs of England, Ireland, Scotland, France, and the United States for the last one hundred years, he will write the history of the world. The club was an institution born on English soil, but it has thrived well in American atmosphere. Who shall tell how many belong to that kind of club where men put purses together and open house, apportioning the expense of caterer and servants and room, and having a sort of domestic establishment—a style of club-house which in my opinion is far better than the ordinary hotel or boarding-house. But my object now is to speak of club-houses of a different sort, such as the Cosmos, or Chevy Chase, or Lincoln Clubs of this Capital, or the "Union Leagues" of many cities, the United Service Club of London, the Lotos of New York, where journalists, dramatists, sculptors, painters and artists, from all branches, gather together to discuss newspapers, theatres, and elaborate art; like the Americus, which camps out in summer time, dimpling the pool with its hook and arousing the forest with its stag hunt; like the Century Club, which has its large group of venerable lawyers and poets; like the Army and Navy Club, where those who engaged in warlike service once on the land or the sea now come together to talk over the days of carnage; like the Travellers' Club, the Blossom Club, the Palette Club, the Commercial Club, the Laurel Club, the Stable Gang Club, the Amateur Boat Club, the gambling clubs, the wine clubs, the clubs of all sizes, the clubs of all grades, clubs as good as good can be, and clubs as bad as bad can be, clubs innumerable. During the day they are comparatively lazy places. Here and there an aged man reading a newspaper, or an invalid resting on a sofa, or a clerk writing up the accounts, but when the curtain of the night falls on the natural day, then the curtain of the club-house hoists for the entertainment. Let us hasten up, now, the marble stairs. What an imperial hallway! See! here are parlors on the side, with the upholstery of the Kremlin and the Tuileries; and here are dining halls that challenge you to mention any luxury that they cannot afford; and here are galleries with sculpture, and paintings, and lithographs, and drawings from the best of artists, Cropsey, and Bierstadt, and Church, and Hart, and Gifford—pictures for every mood, whether you are impassioned or placid; shipwreck, or sunlight over the sea; Sheridan's Ride, or the noonday party of the farmers under the trees; foaming deer pursued by the hounds in the Adirondacks, or the sheep on the lawn. On this side there are reading rooms where you find all newspapers and magazines. One blackball amid ten votes will defeat a man's becoming a member. For rowdyism, for drunkenness, for gambling, for any kind of misdemeanor, a member is dropped out. Brilliant club-house from top to bottom. The chandeliers, the plate, the furniture, the companionship, the literature, the social prestige, a complete enchantment.

But the evening is passing on, and so we hasten through the hall and down the steps and into the street, and from block to block, until we come to another style of club-house. Opening the door, we find the fumes of strong drink and tobacco something almost intolerable. These young men at this table, it is easy to understand what they are at, from the flushed cheek, the intent look, the almost angry way of tossing the dice, or of moving the "chips." They are gambling. At another table are men who are telling vile stories. They are three-fourths intoxicated, and between twelve and one o'clock they will go staggering, hooting, swearing, shouting on their way home. That is an only son. On him all kindness, all care, all culture have been bestowed. He is paying his parents in this way for their kindness. That is a young married man, who, only a few months ago, at the altar, made promises of kindness and fidelity, every one of which he has broken. Walk through and see for yourself. Here are all the implements of dissipation and of quick death. As the hours of the night go away, the conversation becomes imbecile and more debasing. Now it is time to shut up. Those who are able to stand will get out on the pavement and balance themselves against the lamp-post, or against the railings of the fence. The young man who is not able to stand will have a bed improvised for him in the club-house, or two not quite so overcome with liquor will conduct him to his father's house, and they will ring the door-bell, and the door will open, and the two imbecile escorts will introduce into the hallway the ghastliest and most hellish spectacle that ever enters a front door—a drunken son. But I make a vast difference between clubs. I have belonged to four clubs: A theological club, a ball club, and two literary clubs. I got from them physical rejuvenation and moral health. What shall be the principle? If God will help me, I will lay down three principles by which you may judge whether the club where you are a member, or the club to which you have been invited, is a legitimate or an illegitimate club house.

First of all I want you to test the club by its influences on home, if you have a home. I have been told by a prominent gentleman in club life that three fourths of the members of the great clubs of these cities are married men. That wife soon loses her influence over her husband who nervously and foolishly looks upon all evening absence as an assault on domestic joy. How are the great enterprises of art and literature and beneficence and public weal to be carried on if every man is to have his world bounded on one side by his front door step, and on the other side by his back window, knowing nothing higher than his own attic, or nothing lower than his own cellar? That wife who becomes jealous of her husband's attention to art, or literature, or religion, or charity, is breaking her own sceptre of conjugal power. I know an instance where a wife thought that her husband was giving too many nights to Christian service, to charitable service, to prayer-meetings, and to religious convocation. She systematically decoyed him away until now he attends no church, and is on a rapid way to destruction, his morals gone, his money gone, and, I fear, his soul gone. Let any Christian wife rejoice when her husband consecrates evenings to the service of God, or to charity, or to art, or to anything elevated; but let not men sacrifice home life to club life. I can point out to you a great many names of men who are guilty of this sacrilege. They are as genial as angels at the club-house, and as ugly as sin at home. They are generous on all subjects of wine suppers, yachts, and fast horses, but they are stingy about the wife's dress and the children's shoes. That man has made that which might be a healthful recreation an usurper of his affections, and he has married it, and he is guilty of moral bigamy. Under this process the wife, whatever her features, becomes uninteresting and homely. He becomes critical of her, does not like the dress, does not like the way she arranges her hair, is amazed that he ever was so unromantic as to offer her hand and heart. She is always wanting money, money, when she ought to be discussing Eclipses, and Dexter, and Derby Day, and English drags with six horses, all answering the pull of one "ribbon."

I tell you, there are thousands of houses in the cities being clubbed to death! There are club-houses where membership always involves domestic shipwreck. Tell me that a man has joined a certain club, tell me nothing more about him for ten years, and I will write his history if he be still alive. The man is a wine-guzzler, his wife broken-hearted or prematurely old, his fortune gone or reduced, and his home a mere name in a directory. Here are six secular nights in the week. "What shall I do with them?" says the father and the husband. "I will give four of those nights to the improvement and entertainment of my family, either at home or in good neighborhood; I will devote one to charitable institutions; I will devote one to the club." I congratulate you. Here is a man who says, "I will make a different division of the six nights. I will take three for the club and three for other purposes." I tremble. Here is a man who says, "Out of the six secular nights of the week, I will devote five to the club-house and one to the home, which night I will spend in scowling like a March squall, wishing I was out spending it as I had spent the other five." That man's obituary is written. Not one out of ten thousand that ever gets so far on the wrong road ever stops. Gradually his health will fail, through late hours and through too much stimulus. He will be first-rate prey for erysipelas and rheumatism of the heart. The doctor coming in will at a glance see it is not only present disease he must fight, but years of fast living. The clergyman, for the sake of the feelings of the family, on the funeral day will only talk in religious generalities. The men who got his yacht in the eternal rapids will not be at the obsequies. They will have pressing engagements that day. They will send flowers to the coffin-lid, and send their wives to utter words of sympathy, but they will have engagements elsewhere. They never come. Bring me mallet and chisel, and I will cut on the tombstone that man's epitaph, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." "No," you say, "that would not be appropriate." "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." "No," you say, "that would not be appropriate." Then give me the mallet and the chisel, and I will cut an honest epitaph: "Here lies the victim of a dissipating club-house!" I think that damage is often done by the scions of some aristocratic family, who belong to one of these dissipating club-houses. People coming up from humbler classes feel it an honor to belong to the same club, forgetting the fact that many of the sons and grandsons of the large commercial establishments of the last generation are now, as to mind, imbecile; as to body, diseased; as to morals, rotten. They would have got through their property long ago if they had had full possession of it; but the wily ancestors, who earned the money by hard knocks, foresaw how it was to be, and they tied up everything in the will. Now, there is nothing of that unworthy descendant but his grandfather's name and roast beef rotundity. And yet how many steamers there are which feel honored to lash fast that worm-eaten tug, though it drags them straight into the breakers.

Another test by which you can find whether your club is legitimate or illegitimate—the effect it has on your secular occupation. I can understand how through such an institution a man can reach commercial successes. I know some men have formed their best business relations through such a channel. If the club has advantaged you in an honorable calling it is a legitimate club. But has your credit failed? Are bargain-makers more cautious how they trust you with a bill of goods? Have the men whose names were down in the commercial agency A 1 before they entered the club, been going down ever since in commercial standing? Then look out! You and I every day know of commercial establishments going to ruin through the social excesses of one or two members. Their fortunes beaten to death with ball-players' bat, or cut amidships by the front prow of the regatta, or going down under the swift hoofs of the fast horses, or drowned in large potations of Cognac and Monongahela. Their club-house was the "Loch Earn." Their business house was the "Ville du Havre." They struck, and the "Ville du Havre" went under.

A third test by which you may know whether the club to which you belong, or the club to whose membership you are invited, is a legitimate club or an illegitimate club, is this: What is its effect on your sense of moral and religious obligation? Now, if I should take the names of all the people in any audience and put them on a roll and then I should lay that roll back of the organ, and a hundred years from now some one should take that roll and call it from A to Z, there would not one of you answer. I say that any association that makes me forget that fact is a bad association. Now to many of the cities there are two routes, and you can take the Pennsylvania Railroad or the Baltimore & Ohio, but suppose that I hear that on one route the track is torn up, and the bridges are torn down, and the switches are unlocked? It will not take me a great while to decide which road to take. Now, here are two roads into the future, the Christian and the unchristian, the safe and the unsafe. An institution or any association that confuses my idea in regard to that fact is a bad institution and a bad association. I had prayers before I joined the club. Did I have them after? I attended the house of God before I connected myself with the club. Since that union with the club, do I absent myself from religious influences? Which would you rather have in your hand when you come to die, a pack of cards, or a Bible? Which would you rather have pressed to your lips in the closing moment, the cup of Balshazzarean wassail or the chalice of Christian communion? Who would you rather have for your pall-bearers, the elders of a Christian church, or the companions whose conversation was full of slang and innuendo? Who would you rather have for your eternal companions, those men who spend their evenings betting, gambling, swearing, carousing, and telling vile stories, or your little child, that bright girl whom the Lord took? Oh! you would not have been away so much nights, would you, if you had known she was going away so soon? Dear me, your house has never been the same place since. Your wife has never brightened up. She has not got over it; she never will get over it. How long the evenings are, with no one to put to bed, and no one to tell the beautiful Bible story! What a pity it is that you cannot spend more evenings at home in trying to help her bear that sorrow! You can never drown that grief in the wine cup. You can never break away from the little arms that used to be flung around your neck when she used to say, "Papa, do stay home to-night—do stay home to-night." You will never be able to wipe away from your lips the dying kiss of your little girl. The fascination of a dissipating club-house is so great that Sometimes a man has turned his back on his home when his child was dying of scarlet fever. He went away. Before he got back at midnight the eyes had been closed, the undertaker had done his work, and the wife, worn out with three weeks watching, lay unconscious in the next room. Then there is a rattling of the night-key in the door, and the returned father comes upstairs, and sees the empty cradle and the window up. He says, "What is the matter?" In God's judgment day he will find out what was the matter. Oh, man astray, God help you!

The influence which some of the club-houses are exerting is the more to be deplored because it takes down the very best men. The admission fee sifts out the penurious, and leaves only the best fellows. They are frank, they are generous, they are whole souled, they are talented. Oh, I begrudge the devil such a prize! After a while the frank look will go out of the face, and the features will be haggard, and when talking to you, instead of looking you in the eye they will look down, and every morning the mother will kindly ask, "My son, what kept you out so late last night?" and he will make no answer, or he will say, "That's my business." Then some time he will come to the store or the bank cross and befogged, and he will neglect some duty, and after awhile he will lose his place, and then, with nothing to do, he will come down at ten o'clock in the morning to curse the servant because the breakfast is cold. The lad who was a clerk in the cellar has got to be chief clerk in the great commercial establishment; the young man who ran errands for the bank has got to be cashier; thousands of the young men who were at the foot of the ladder have got to the top of the ladder; but here goes the victim of the dissipating club-house, with staggering step and bloodshot eye, and mud-bespattered hat set sidewise on a shock of greasy hair, his cravat dashed with cigar ashes. Look at him! Pure-hearted young man, look at him! The club-house did that. I know one such who went the whole round, and, turned out of the higher club-houses, went into the lower club-houses, and on down, until one night he leaped out of a third story window to end his wretchedness.

Let me say to fathers who are becoming dissipated, your sons will follow you. You think your son does not know. He knows all about it. I have heard men who say, "I am profane, but never in the presence of my children." Your children know you swear. I have heard men say, "I drink, but never in the presence of my children." Your children know you drink. I describe now what occurs in hundreds of households in this country. The tea hour has arrived. The family are seated at the tea-table. Before the rest of the family arise from the table, the father shoves back his chair, says he has an engagement, lights a cigar, goes out, comes back after midnight, and that is the history of three hundred and sixty-five nights of the year. Does any man want to stultify himself by saying that that is healthy, that that is right, that that is honorable? Would your wife have married you with such prospects?

Time will pass on, and the son will be sixteen or seventeen years of age, and you will be at the tea-table, and he will shove back and have an engagement, and he will light his cigar, and he will go out to the club-house, and you will hear nothing of him until you hear the night-key in the door after midnight. But his physical constitution is not quite so strong as yours, and the liquor he drinks is more terrifically drugged than that which you drink, and so he will catch up with you on the road to death, though you got such a long start of him, and so you will both go to hell together.

The revolving Drummond light in front of a hotel, in front of a locomotive, may flash this way, and flash that, upon the mountains, upon the ravines, upon the city; but I take the lamp of God's eternal truth, and I flash it upon all the club-houses of these cities, so that no young man shall be deceived. By these tests try them, try them! Oh, leave the dissipating influences of the club-room, if the influences of your club-room are dissipating! Paid your money, have you? Better sacrifice that than your soul. Good fellows, are they? Under that process they will not remain such. Mollusca may be found two hundred fathoms down beneath the Norwegian seas; Siberian stag get fat on the stunted growth of Altian peaks; Hedysarium grows amid the desolation of Sahara; tufts of osier and birch grow on the hot lips of volcanic Sneehattan; but a pure heart and an honest life thrive in a dissipating club-house—never!

The way to conquer a wild beast is to keep your eye on him, but the way for you to conquer your temptations, my friend, is to turn your back on them and fly for your life.

Oh, my heart aches! I see men struggling against evil habits, and they want help. I have knelt beside them, and I have heard them cry for help, and then we have risen, and he has put one hand on my right shoulder, and the other hand on my left shoulder, and looked into my face with an infinity of earnestness which the judgment day will have no power to make me forget, as he has cried out with his lips scorched in ruin, "God help me!" For such there is no help except in the Lord God Almighty. I am going to make a very stout rope. You know that sometimes a rope maker will take very small threads and wind them together until after a while they become ship-cable. And I am going to take some very small, delicate threads, and wind them together until they make a very stout rope. I will take all the memories of the marriage day, a thread of laughter, a thread of light, a thread of music, a thread of banqueting, a thread of congratulation, and I twist them together, and I have one strand. Then I take a thread of the hour of the first advent in your house, a thread of the darkness that preceded, and a thread of the light that followed, and a thread of the beautiful scarf that little child used to wear when she bounded out at eventide to greet you, and then a thread of the beautiful dress in which you laid her away for the resurrection. And then I twist all these threads together, and I have another strand.

Then I also take a thread of the scarlet robe of a suffering Christ, and a thread of the white raiment of your loved ones before the throne, and a string of the harp cherubic, and a string of the harp seraphic, and I twist them all together, and I have a third strand. "Oh!" you say, "either strand is strong enough to hold fast a world." No. I will take these strands, and I will twist them together, and one end of that rope I will fasten, not to the communion table, for it shall be removed—not to the pillar of the organ, for that will crumble in the ages, but I wind it 'round and 'round the cross of a sympathizing Christ, and having fastened one end of the rope to the cross, I throw the other end to you. Lay hold of it! Pull for your life! Pull for heaven!

A CORNER IN THE OFFICES OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

TO REDEEM THE CITIES.

The Evangelical Alliance for the United States Initiates an Educational Movement for the Development of Christian Patriotism.

(See Portraits on First Page).

EVERY citizen who intelligently and sincerely offers the prayer, "Thy kingdom come," must wish godspeed to the movement just inaugurated by The Evangelical Alliance for the United States. Its object is to induce Christian citizens who have hitherto held aloof from politics, to unite in an effort to secure good government. The need for such a movement is obvious to evereyone who knows anything of public affairs. In many of our great cities Christian men abstain from all participation in politics. Some do not vote except in the Presidential years, and of those who do vote a large proportion never attend the primaries or make any effort to secure the nomination of honest, God-fearing men. The consequence of their indifference is that when they go to the polls they find the party tickets made up of men whom they would not employ in their business—men of notorious evil life, unprincipled, corrupt and irreligious.

ENTRANCE TO THE HEADQUARTERS.

Believing that in every community in the United States the majority of the citizens prefer good government to bad, the Evangelical Alliance is making an appeal to all Christian men to unite in their respective districts for the purpose of exercising a purifying influence on political life. It does not suggest their running for office, or intriguing to secure a nomination, but to induce them to exercise their rights in helping to make the nominations and to stand together in a resolute phalanx insisting on the nomination of legislators who will legislate in favor of morality and of administrative officers who will enforce the laws. If the Christian men in any city thus held together, there is no convention of either party that would dare to nominate men of bad character for any office, because they would know that every such name would be scratched at the polls and his rival would be elected. There would be no need of any change of party affilations. The Evangelical Alliance is not moving in the interest of any political party, but is urging men of all parties to use the influence within their party that properly belongs to them as members of it. That such influence has not hitherto been generally used we know from the character of the legislation in the State Legislatures and in Congress and from the numerous scandals which have been uncovered in many of our cities.

The Evangelical Alliance is adopting a novel method to stir the conscience of Christian men in this matter. It is printing and publishing a series of pamphlets on the duty of the Christian citizen, which it hopes to get into the hands of persons who have hitherto been indifferent. Four pamphlets of convenient shape have already been issued. They are "The Duty of a Public Spirit," by Pres. E. Benjamin Andrews, D.D.; "Good Citizenship," by Bishop F. D. Huntington, LL.D.; "The New Patriotism," by Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D., and "The Co-operative City," by Prof. John R. Commons. A fifth is in hand by Dr. Washington Gladden, and others in the same series may be expected from Hon. Carl Schurz, Prof. Woodrow, Richard Watson Gilder, Dr. Albert Shaw, E. L. Godkin, Prof. Jesse Macy, Prof. E. J. James, Dr. E. E. Hale, Hon Theodore Roosevelt, Dean George Hodges, Bishop Mallalieu, Charles Dudley Warner, and Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst. It is proposed to circulate these pamphlets by the aid of the young people's Societies of Christian Endeavor, the Baptist Union, and the Epworth League. If the pastors of any State or district who are anxious to influence legislation or to secure the election of honest, conscientious men to office, would divide the territory into sections, it would be easy for the young people to reach every section and distribute the pamphlets.

This is a work which comes legitimately within the province of the Evangelical Alliance and the fact that it has undertaken it is another proof of the value of an organization which unites the good men of all the churches without distinction of creed. The Alliance has now been doing excellent work in the United States for thirty years, and it is over fifty years since it was organized on the other side the Atlantic. The idea of such a union cannot claim nationality by birth. To an Englishman it owed its first vague inception, and to an American it owes its practical formation. In 1842 the idea of such an organization was first launched. John Angell James, the author of the famous little work which has been the means of leading thousands to Christ—"The Anxious Inquirer Directed," suggested that some kind of inter-denominational association might be arranged for mutual counsel and edification as well as for aggressive work. Thomas Chalmers, the great Scotch divine; Dr. Merle D'Aubigne, the eminent Swiss historian, and other leaders endorsed the idea, and in 1845 a meeting was held in Liverpool to consider the subject. Clergymen and laymen representing twenty different denominations were present.

The meeting appointed a committee to call a representative assembly in London in the following year. The call was issued, and in the summer of 1846 the Evangelical Alliance became an accomplished fact. Eight hundred delegates, representing fifty denominations, attended, and were in session fifteen days. It was discovered that with all their mutual antagonisms, the delegates were in accord on many subjects. The Alliance was organized "for the defence of religious liberty, and promoting the unity of all believers in the essentials of Christianity, and their co-operation for its progress."

The organization quickly took root in England. The American members, however, realized that membership in the parent organization would not be sufficient to cover the ground which might advantageously be occupied by the united forces of the Evangelical churches. There were problems peculiar to ourselves with which Christians ought to deal, in which European Christians were not vitally concerned. Problems like the Indian question, Mormonism, Immigration, and the attempt to desecrate the Lord's Day, were pressing, and local united action was needed. In 1867 a meeting was held in the Bible House, New York, at which an Evangelical Alliance for the United States was organized. The late Hon. William E. Dodge was elected President, and Dr. Josiah Strong, the author of "Our Country," subsequently became its secretary. On the first page of this journal are portraits of its present President, Secretary, and three of its prominent members. Other countries followed the example thus set, until now there is an Alliance in twenty-seven different lands besides the parent organization.

The Sunday School

THE BEATITUDES.

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 23. Matt. 5: 1–12. Golden Text. Matt. 5 : 14.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE Sermon on the Mount is a precious sample of the teaching of the Lord Jesus. He had lived, before he preached, all that he was about to teach others. "Seeing the multitudes he went up into a mountain, and when he had sat down, he called his disciples to him, and he opened his mouth and taught them." In his teaching, human eloquence, imposing attitude, impressive gestures were wholly absent: it was the word which did the work, not the human channel through which it came. His own life had been already a light, "the light of men," and now in the very fact of his teaching his disciples in the presence of the multitude, he makes them an object lesson. The life of every child of God who is willingly and thankfully in the school of God is an object lesson to all who know him. Many of the tests which God permits us are meant as much to teach others who are watching us, as ourselves; not one is superfluous in God's economy.

The first utterance of our Lord on this occasion went exactly counter to all ideas of self-sufficient, self-seeking, fallen nature. The very life of self consists in the desire to be something or somebody; to be rich, great, influential, honored; this is the ambition of the flesh. All the system of caste in India, of aristocracy in western lands, of priestcraft, whether heathen, Roman Catholic, Greek Church or Protestant, comes from the same source—esteeming self and despising others. Fanaticism springs from the same root; men, whatever their religion may be, want to be great saints that they may prove their superiority to others. In our schools, in the cricket-field and in foot-ball, pre-eminence is the passion of all. In Christian work, how much there is of the same spirit, each one seeking to be greatest. And our Lord cuts the ground from under our feet when he says, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 1). "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes and to make them to inherit the throne of glory." (1. Sam. 2 : 8, 9).

The poor cannot be lifted out of the dust until he has taken his place there, and known himself in his utter filthiness and misery. The pride of the human heart is counted by God disgusting. The apostle Paul learned this when, speaking of his natural advantages, he said, "What things were gain to me, these have I counted loss for Christ. . . . for whom I suffered the loss of all things." (Phil. 3 : 7, 8). His high birth, his circumcision, his religious prestige, his zeal, his very righteousness was loss in his eyes, as in the eyes of his God. He had learned a lesson which the Lord Jesus had already taught: "That which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God." (Luke 16 . 15). In the school of God, the rich man must rejoice 'in that he is made low." (James 1 : 10).

It cannot be otherwise. The life of Christ is death to our own self-life. The flesh cannot amalgamate with the life of Christ, the two are utterly opposed. Our self life is under the curse. "All flesh is as grass . . . the grass withereth, the flower fadeth because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it." But the withered, faded, dying flesh makes room for the plant which the Lord hath planted and which shall flourish in the courts of our God. (Psalm 92 : 13). Our Lord does not say: Blessed shall be, but, blessed are the poor in spirit. Look at the faces of proud, self-sufficient, self-glorifying men. Are they happy? They are filled with anxiety about their own reputation and importance. Jealous, sensitive, captious; far removed from blessed. Look at the faces of such who, poor in spirit, wonder how God can be so gracious to them; who marvel that he can have come so low as to consider even them; men who count everything too good for them, and every blessing from God's hand utterly undeserved. Are they happy? Yes; their faces are full of light, the joy of the Lord fills them; they have nothing to care for; they know that he careth for them. Blessed indeed and blessed always are the poor in spirit.

Blessed also are they that mourn. The flesh loves enjoyment, exaltation, excitement, merriment, laughter, amusement, and hates that tenderness of heart which brings a recollected spirit, which causes a ready acknowledgement of being in the wrong, a readiness to take rebuke, and a broken heart under God's dealings. The flesh stands upon its rights, and believing in itself, takes for granted that it must be in the right. But the humble and contrite heart where he dwells who inhabiteth eternity, instinctively yields to the smallest hint of the Holy Spirit, and mourns to grieve him. It hurts such to grieve God. As the Holy Spirit himself is very sensitive, so he makes sensitive to God those in whom he dwells. They learn to tremble at his word (Isa. 66 : 2), and to lay to heart what he says to them. (Mal. 2 : 2).

"Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Such as can neither assert their rights nor retaliate any injury are God's meek ones; destined to rule over a renewed earth. Our Lord himself learned obedience before even he could as a man sit at God's right hand and reign till his enemies become the footstool of his feet. He conquered death by submitting to it, (Heb. 2 . 14); he conquered his enemies by his meekness; "when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." (1. Peter 2 : 23). A meek man never defends himself, but commits his cause to God; such always become a power, because God is behind them. "They shall inherit the earth," and rule because they have learned to submit. The truly meek are always "merciful." Having learned their own lessons they can have patience with others who are learning the same; and they shall obtain mercy, if not from man yet from God. A meek man cannot be harsh in his judgment of others, and according to the measure which we mete, God measures to us again. (Matt. 7 : 2).

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness," not only in their own souls, but in the church and in the world. There is a terrible danger in the Laodicean state of the church at the present day that we should become accustomed to a condition of lukewarmness, and accept it as inevitable. God forbid! We are in danger of accepting also as inevitable the national sins of our countries, thinking that we, as individuals, can do nothing in the matter: we are sorry, but we cannot help it. When, in Ezekiel's time, like evils existed in Jerusalem, God opened the eyes of his servant to the unseen world, and the prophet saw God's reporter with his ink-horn by his side, putting a mark upon the forehead of such as sigh and cry for all the abominations which are done in the city. (Ezek. 9 : 2–4).

HATTIN, THE TRADITIONAL MOUNTAIN OF THE BEATITUDES.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE circumstances under which this remarkable discourse was preached, have to be taken into account in order to duly appreciate its character. Christ having chosen twelve men to propagate his doctrines he gives a resume of his teaching for their use, as well as for the general audience surrounding him. The chief characteristic of his sermon is that which still needs to be impressed on the people. It is that true blessedness or happiness, true fitness for membership in his kingdom is to be found in character, and in character only. The Jews were looking for a Messianic deliverer, who should restore their nationality. Religious men were honoring the leaders who were particular about observances, who tithed the minutest trifles of property, whose devotions were long and conspicuous, and whose charity was ostentatious. All these things are swept away by this sermon. Christ's kingdom, he tells them, is made up of the men of all nations who are of his spirit. Ritual, gifts, observance, all count for nothing. To be eligible for membership in the kingdom a man must be certain things, not do certain things. This, as Christ shows, is a deeper righteousness than the overt acts required by the law. The law said, thou shalt not kill: Christ's legislation forbade the angry feeling out of which murder grows. Eight characteristics of the men eligible for the kingdom are the subject of the lesson.

The poor in spirit. These are people conscious of their need. The only people Christ is able to help are those who know that they need help. Those who think highly of themselves, the people we call "know it-alls," cannot be helped. The story is told of an eminent teacher of the violin that he used to ask every new pupil if he knew anything of the instrument. If the pupil said he did know anything of it, or that he had been taught by some one, the teacher demanded a fee of double the amount required of a pupil who confessed utter ignorance. He gave as his reason that he would have a more difficult task than when he started from the beginning.

They that mourn. There are some people who know they are wicked, and are not sorry about it. Christ cannot help them. True blessedness comes when a man grieves over his wrong doing, and wants to abandon it. There is a legend of a hermit who was so good that he was fed by angels. He grew proud, and the angels fed him no longer. Whereupon, he thrust his staff into the brook by which he sat, and took a solemn vow never to leave the place until his staff blossomed. Month after month he waited, and no blossom came. Among his visitors was a thief, whose conscience was at work. Hearing what the hermit had done, he, too, thrust his stick into the brook, making the vow that he would steal no more, and would make restitution. Instantly, the legend says, the thief's stick blossomed, and he went away rejoicing to fulfil his vow. The hermit was angry at the thief gaining the blessing denied to him, and was further than ever from righteousness. He stayed until the brook grew to a flood and swept him away.

The meek. We generally admire those who stand up for their rights and insist upon being treated with deference. Christ's idea of blessedness is of the other kind. A man of great skill in swordsmanship was taunted with cowardice after his conversion. One of his assailants went so far in proving the charge as to spit upon him. The insulted man quietly wiped away the saliva, remarking: "I should kill you if I could wipe your blood from my conscience as easily as I wipe away your insult from my person."

They who hunger and thirst after righteousness. It is not the righteous on whom the blessing is pronounced, otherwise many could not hope for it; but on those who passionately desire to be righteous. Every one can strive after it, and it is promised to those who do strive, "they shall be filled." A man was seen tugging at a rope attached to the top of a high wall, which had been part of a building destroyed by fire. "Do you think," he was asked, "you can ever pull down that wall?" He answered, "It does not seem likely, but the boss told me to keep on pulling, and that is what I am going to do." Meanwhile, unseen by him, men were undermining it, and soon he felt it vibrate, and in a short time, it fell.

The merciful. An eminent preacher tells of pleading with his wife to forgive a servant whom he had seen in tears over the fragments of a valuable china vase she had broken. "I have borne with her clumsiness long enough," replied the mistress; "now she must go; she does not deserve to be kept on any longer." The clergyman said, gently: "I wonder if my Master ever feels that way about my work. I hope he does not, though I certainly deserve to be discharged. Better let Mary have another trial," and the wife yielded.

The pure in heart. These will see God, not those in whose hearts ambition, selfishness and spite are cherished. Mr. Spurgeon was looking, in his younger days, for a lodging near London. One of the boarding-house keepers took him to a window of the room he was thinking of occupying, and pointed out the beautiful view. He said, "On a Sunday you can see St. Paul's from here." Mr. Spurgeon asked, "Why can you see it on Sunday better than other days?" "Because," said the man, "the factories are not running on a Sunday and there is no smoke." It is the smoke and the impurity of our lives that prevent our seeing God.

The peacemakers. A popular writer tells the story of a quarrel between a minister and one of his deacons. The minister called upon a good woman of the parish and came away saying: "That woman is against me; she did nothing but tell me of the deacon's good qualities and make excuses for him." The deacon, hearing that the woman was on his side, went to see her and left grumbling: "It is not true; she praised the minister and insisted that he is a good man." But each thought better of his enemy after the talk with the woman, and when they met, each taking the woman's estimate of the other, they were reconciled. The peacemakers are rightly called the children of God.

They who are persecuted for righteousness sake. A glorious reward is promised to all such. The Emperor Tiberius hearing that a certain prince had expressed the hope that Caligula might soon come to the throne, stripped him of his robes, clothed him in rags, loaded him with chains and thrust him into a loathsome dungeon. When Tiberius died and Caligula became emperor, Caligula's first act was to take the prince out of his dungeon, give him a royal robe and give him gold of the same weight as the fetters he had worn.

A POOR BOYS' REPUBLIC.

The Farm School for Indigent Lads on Thompson's Island in Boston Harbor—Young Waifs Trained to Self-Supporting Christian Citizenship.

BOSTON, like New York, and many other leading American cities, is a great philanthropic centre; the wealth and far-reaching sympathies of its people giving support and encouragement to a multitude of charitable and benevolent enterprises. Nowhere on this continent is greater solicitude shown for the welfare of the rising generation among the very poor, and the orphans and waifs are gathered, housed, trained, and educated in a great number of institutions, in order that maturer years may not find them worthless members of the idle and dissolute class and burdens upon the community, but sober, industrious, self-supporting members of society. One of the oldest of Boston's charitable institutions is the Asylum for Indigent Boys, which was incorporated in 1814. An outgrowth of that venerable charity is the Boston Farm School Society, which was formed in 1832, and soon afterward purchased Thompson's Island, in Boston harbor. For many years the Asylum and Farm School for Indigent Boys has been one of the best known of the city's benevolences. Very poor orphans or half orphan boys of good moral character, between the ages of seven and twelve, are admitted, each being fully consigned to the home until the age of twenty-one is reached, unless it can be shown meanwhile that some friend or guardian can provide a suitable and permanent home for the boy. When the lad has been fairly educated and taught a trade, a place is found for him by the society, which continues to exercise a watchful care over him. He is usually launched on the world under its auspices in his fifteenth or sixteenth year.

Our photographs give some slight idea of the active and energetic life the young charges lead on the school farm. Thompson's Island is an ideal site for such a place. The buildings are good and substantial and the surroundings all that a boy fond of outdoor exercise could desire. Beautiful meadows and wide pastures for playgrounds; fruit-laden orchards, boats for sailing and fishing; poultry-houses, corn-houses and barns, besides good school-houses and industrial buildings, and bright, attractive dormitories. There are usually about one hundred boys in the farm school. The lads are from many different States, and nearly all take the manual training course, which includes drawing, carpentry, wood-turning and wood-carving; and all in turn are employed upon the farm and perform some part in the household duties, including cooking, baking, making and mending of clothing, washing, etc. Boys are selected according to their capacity to receive instruction in blacksmithing, cobbling, painting, printing, and typewriting, and to assist in the care and management of boats. Each boy's time is divided between study work, and recreation, in such a manner as best to develop natural aptitude and latent ability, strength, and character, that he may go forth equipped for the practical duties of life.

One of the features of home life on the island is "Cottage Row," which consists of twelve small wooden structures, each capable of seating a number of persons comfortably. These were practically built by the boys themselves, and form a sort of miniature settlement—a little republic —governed by the boys. The officers of this petty government consist of a mayor, board of aldermen, clerk, chief of police, street commissioners and jury. There are besides, an assessor, judge of the municipal court, and other officials. The boys elect their own officers, make their own laws, and govern themselves with due decorum and a full sense of the responsible privileges they enjoy.

The farm and the industrial department are two very interesting features of the work. The educational system is suited to the needs of the boys, and is in charge of competent teachers. There is a compact library, which is well patronized. The boys set up and print a neat little eight-page monthly journal called The Beacon, to whose pages all are free to contribute. In the intervals of study and work there are abundant opportunities for recreation, both summer and winter.

Over all, there is a kindly Christian spirit, which makes the place a real home to the poor lads. The religious side of the work is one of its brightest and most attractive aspects. Church is always well attended and the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor societies are the means of kindling spiritual life among the young people, and many have given evidence of a desire to lead Christian lives. Many of the letters received from former inmates of the farm school, who are now out in the world, show that the training they received there has influenced their careers and helped to make them honorable, God-fearing, law-abiding, worthy men.

The officers of the Farm School are: President, Alexander S. Wheeler; Vice President Arthur Dexter; Treasurer, Alfred Bowditch, and Secretary, Tucker Deland. There is also a full board of managers.

Every branch of the work is conducted with the most thorough system that long experience can devise. With larger resources at command the work could be greatly expanded and correspondingly increased results secured.

THE EIGHT BLESSINGS.

It is significant that the new dispensation should open with the word, "blessed." The last word of the prophets had been the word, "curse." God's new message comes to tell the world how it may be happy. Penalties, prohibitions, and punishments had done their work, and now men were to be met on a higher plane. They were to learn that the God whom they had known as their Ruler was their Father, with a father's desire for the welfare of his children, not that the standard of conduct was lowered, but the motive power was different. Righteousness under the new dispensation had its old meaning and went even deeper than before. God had not changed his character, but as a father pleads with his son, who has grown to manhood, in a different way from that he had used in enjoining him in his boyhood, so now Christ delivers the message of blessing. Men are seeking happiness in various ways, and he tells them how they may attain it. The quest of Ecclesiastes had been the quest of many another, and like him they had found only disappointment; now divine guidance is given. It is to be found, not in wealth, not in power, not in pleasure, not in learning, but in character. Happy are the poor in spirit, the pure in heart, the meek, the peacemakers. These of whom the world had taken no account, are the really blessed people. They are spared the inward conflicts of the man whose outward conduct is not in accord with his inward life. The law had been content with the saying, "Thou shalt not kill," but the man who wanted to kill and refrained in obedience to the law, would be apt to be sullen and discontented. Christ goes deeper. There must be no anger in the heart. When he is obeyed the mental conflict ceases, and the man, no longer torn by contending impulses, realizes that he is blessed. The same principle applies to each of the beatitudes. Illustrations of all will be found under the head of "Lesson Points" on page 26 of this issue.

A Tribute to our Missionaries.

In his recent work entitled: "Transcaucasia and Ararat," James Bryce, the distinguished author, pays this tribute to our American missionaries.

I cannot mention the American missionaries without a tribute to the admirable work they have done. They have been the only good influence that has worked from abroad upon the Turkish Empire. They have shown great judgment and tact in their relations with the ancient Churches of the land, Orthodox Gregorian, Jacobite, Nestorian and Catholic. They have lived cheerfully in the midst not only of hardships, but latterly of serious dangers also. They have been the first to bring the light of education and learning into these dark places, and have rightly judged that it was far better to diffuse that light through their schools than to aim at presenting a swollen roll of converts. From them alone, if we except the British Consuls, has it been possible during the last thirty years to obtain trustworthy information regarding what passes in the interior. Their sympathies have, of course, been with the cause of reform. But they have most prudently done everything in their power to discourage any political agitation among the subject Christians, foreseeing, as the event has proved, that such agitation would be made the pretext for massacre.

Good Management.

ON the Saturday preceding Christmas every one of the $1,000 premiums ordered up to noon of that day were shipped by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD without a single exception. Notwithstanding this commendable promptness on our part, there were many who did not receive their premiums on time, but that was owing solely to the absolute inability of the express companies to handle with their usual promptness the tremendous volume of holiday shipments that were heaped upon them. They claim to have been literally snowed under. The unavoidable delays that have in consequence ensued will prove an object lesson to those who disregarded our repeated requests to send in their orders before the holiday rush began. In order to reduce to a minimum the possible number of disappointments, we had special arrangements with the various express companies, under which special instructions to agents in all parts of the country to deliver on Christmas day, were printed and attached to every belated package, and thousands owe to this wise precaution exemption from sore disappointment. In no previous year were we in such excellent shape for the prompt dispatch of orders, and we worked our enormous facilities unceasingly day and night for the benefit of our great army of subscribers.

Treasures Imperishable.

HOW long before we will learn that there is no such thing as sure and safe investment? Men gather up their fortunes, get everything insured, have United States bonds or first mortgages, and boast themselves as independent. A few years pass along, and you meet them on the street with distressed look and dilapidated apparel. What is the matter? They have lost all. But there are investments that never fail. Wall street stock may go up or down, trust companies may sink and Jay Cookes suspend payment; storms may twist off the roofs of ships and drown the harvests of a continent; fires may whelm Chicago and Boston; but they who build on the Rock of Ages have a structure that can stand any tempest—they who have Christ for a pilot will certainly come into the harbor—they who have treasures in Heaven shall find them unharmed by moth, or rust, or time, or eternity.

Premiums Without Cash Payment.

A GREAT many inquiries have been addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as to the terms upon which subscribers can earn, without the expenditure of any cash, certain premiums now offered by us. Owing to the intrinsic value of our premiums, in every case and without any exception exceeding the amount asked for them, we find it almost impossible to allow any compensation whatever for the procurement of new premium subscribers, and therefore have heretofore steadfastly declined to entertain any proposition of this character. This year, however, we are determined to make strenuous efforts to increase the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to a quarter of a million copies weekly, and in order to accomplish this we stand ready to make large financial sacrifices. Therefore we have prepared the subjoined table of inducements which we feel sure will prove strong incentives to our friends to cooperate with us in bringing about this gigantic result, which will more firmly secure for the ever popular CHRISTIAN HERALD the proud distinction it already enjoys as the leader of the religious press of the world. Let it, however, be plainly understood that our stock of Minion International Teachers' Bible is only large enough to meet the requirements of our present subscribers, and that therefore no subscriptions with the Minion Bible Premium can be received under this offer.

* * * * * *

To earn a Minion Teachers' Bible, red under gold, Divinity Circuit binding, you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a Long Primer Teachers' Bible, red under gold, Divinity Circuit binding, with Thumb Index, you must secure three new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn an Art Bible, London Edition, red under gold, Divinity Circuit binding, with Thumb Index, you must secure seven new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a Christian Herald Library, ten beautiful volumes, artistically bound in cloth, aggregating 3,200 pages, all contained in an attractive bookcase—the greatest attraction ever offered by us—you must secure three new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a copy of Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's great book, "Stepping-Stones to Happiness," nearly five hundred extra large pages, beautifully illustrated, and very handsomely bound in cloth and gilt, you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premiums.

* * * * * *

To earn Wm. M. Thayer's stirring book, "Onward to Fame and Fortune," concerning which hundreds of letters teeming with highest praise have been received by us—four hundred and fifty extra large pages, exquisitely illustrated with many original costly wood engravings—a book actually worth its weight in gold—you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

We cannot supply any more copies of any of the following books, our supply being completely exhausted:—

"FROM MANGER TO THRONE,"	of which we sold	125,000	copies.
"THE PATHWAY OF LIFE,"	" "	75,000	"
"GOSPEL HYMNS CONSOLIDATED,"	" "	50,000	"
"THE HOME OF THE BIBLE,"	" "	30,000	"
"HOME LIFE MADE BEAUTIFUL,"	" "	40,000	"

Please be sure to remember this, as orders for any of these books will oblige us to return the order and the remittance, involving needless trouble and expense.

* * * * * *

It goes without saying that no compensation other than the premiums mentioned above can be allowed on subscriptions received under this proposition, and that, therefore, every order must be accompanied by the full amount in cash without any deduction whatever. All these special offers will positively be withdrawn March 1st, and any of them may be closed sooner should our present stock of that particular premium be exhausted, in which case opportunity will be given to select some other premium, or, if preferred, all the orders and remittances will be promptly and cheerfully returned.

* * * * * *

All books, without exception, are sent all charges fully prepaid to any part of the United States and Canada.

* * * * * *

Please do not wait until you have the required number of subscribers before you begin to send in. This would entail delay and disappointment. Send each subscription just as soon as received, always, of course, accompanied by the full amount required, and give your own full name and address, at the same time being careful to state what particular premium you are striving for.

* * * * * *

As soon as we get that information, we will credit your account with each subscription received and reserve the premiums for you, so that as soon as the required number have been secured and turned in, your premiums may be started without a moment's delay.

* * * * * *

Please remember that this offer will positively be withdrawn on March 1st. Hence, immediate action on your part will be necessary to assure success. Don't wait until it is too late, and then write asking us to make an exception in your case. Better start now, and have us reserve what you want a little ahead of time, than to wait awhile, only to invite disappointment at last.

BRIEF NOTES.

Tangier is the only town on the Moorish coast in which Europeans reside where slaves are openly sold in the streets, although the traffic is supposed to be forbidden.

"One of the sights of Burmah," writes a lady there, "is Mr. Brayton, a Baptist missionary, who has worked there for sixty years. He told us that he was 'eighty-nine years young.'"

Evangelist S. Hartwell Pratt has just concluded a series of meetings in Salem, Mass. The attendance was large from the first, and the great power of the Spirit was manifest. Mr. Pratt began union meetings at Rhinebeck, N. Y., Jan. 2d.

Rev. W. A. Bodell, of Crawfordsville, Ind., began evangelistic meetings at St. Joseph, Mo., the latter part of November. Mr. Bodell is working in connection with the Y. M. C. A., but has the support of the ministers of the city, who attend the services and aid in the work.

The Church of the Strangers in New York, of which Dr. Asa Blackburn is pastor, expects to begin holding services in its new location in Fifty-seventh street at the end of this month. It is expected that about two hundred members of the church whose property it has acquired will join the Church of the Strangers.

A press dispatch from Wabash, Ind., says that at a revival recently at the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Lakestone, the preacher urged all who had wronged their neighbors to make restitution before uniting with the church. So far, the property restored consists of several pigs, a cow, two chickens and a log-chain.

Rev. Alexander Patterson held Bible Institutes this Fall in Dayton and Springfield, Ohio, in Danville, Ill., and at the University of Illinois and conducted the Bible studies at the State conventions of Kansas and Missouri. He reports great interest as shown by large attendances and close attention even to the more difficult studies.

The Rev. Dr. Wylie of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, Ninety-sixth street, New York, has arranged for a series of Sunday evening sermons on "The Unity of the Church of Christ," by representative ministers of different denominations. The Rev. Dr. James M. King preached the first sermon of the series, presenting the Methodist Episcopal point of view.

Dr. J. Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, will have the sympathy of our readers in a sad bereavement which has befallen him. His beloved daughter, the wife of Rev. J. Coulthard, missionary at Wun-chau, China, is dead. She was born in China, and after being educated in England returned to China in her seventeenth year, and was active in mission work there until her death.

A Boston philanthropist, Mr. Benjamin C. Clark, did a thoughtful and kindly act at Christmas time. He went to the general post-office and undertook to pay the cost of releasing all packages held for deficient postage. The packages, which were chiefly Christmas presents, were at once forwarded to their addresses, and Mr. Clark paid the sixty dollars of deficiency. He has done this in former years, but this is the first time he has been identified.

French Protestants are making earnest efforts in behalf of Christians in Madagascar, who are suffering so much at the hands of Jesuits. The Missions Evangeliques de Paris have, since August of last year, sent fifteen men and thirteen women as missionaries to that country, and two of the men have been assassinated. But it is encouraging to learn that two Protestant missionaries have been appointed to superintend two of the normal schools which had been seized by Roman Catholic priests.

The Boston Keswick Conference, held in the Berkeley Temple, has been well attended and has proved a blessing to many. The Congregationalist gives the following report of the gathering: "The interest taken in the 'Keswick' convention, held in this city last week, was greater than has been anticipated. The effort to imitate in this country the great English convention, where the teaching is that of entire dependence upon God for both spiritual and material blessings, will probably result in its establishment here in America."

Rev. B. I. Daimond, a returned missionary from Morocco, who is now studying medicine in New York with the view of qualifying for medical mission work in Morocco, would be glad to deliver a lecture on scenes and life in that land to any church in the city, or within easy reach of it. He knows the country thoroughly and is anxious to arouse interest in missions to the Moors, as well as to earn a little money for the purchase of books, instruments, etc. His address is care of A. Attias, 1548 Madison Ave., New York.

The physicians of the Presbyterian Hospital, New York, report that Mrs. Ballington Booth, is "suffering from an aneurism of the aorta, and her condition has been, and is, serious. She is confined to her bed, not allowed to see any visitors except her husband and secretary, and is absolutely forbidden to do any work. Mrs. Booth's condition continues to improve." This statement has been issued as an authoritative reply to insinuations which have been made or misconstrued in a published interview as to the critical nature of Mrs. Booth's illness.

The American Board is sending a deputation to visit the mission stations of China. This is in response to an invitation from the missionaries who desire the officers of the Board to see the work for themselves. The deputation will consist of Dr. Judson Smith, Col. Charles Hawkins, and Mr. Samuel Shapleigh. Every mission will be visited and, as far as practicable, every station in each mission and enough out-stations to make the deputation familiar with the methods of work and with the native laborers and the homes of the native Christians.

A note in The Missionary Review describes the sudden suppression of an incipient riot at Chuningchow, China, in which the missionaries were menaced on the usual false charge of murdering children. The mob threatened the lives of the missionaries and the destruction of mission property. It was dispersed, however, by the issue of a warning in which the Governor said briefly that he did not wish to kill any man until he had been warned; so he sent out the notice, and after its issue, if any false reports about the foreigners were circulated, he would take the heads off the slanderers without further warning.

CHINA'S CRISIS.

CHINESE complacency to her "great and good friend" Russia is apparently about to bring a hornets' nest about her ears. In compliance with the terms of an agreement between the two powers, China dismissed Mr. J. McLeavy Brown, the Englishman, who was customs' agent in Corea and has half-promised to dismiss Sir Robert Hart who is Director of the Imperial Maritime Customs of China. Both officials are to be replaced by Russians. The programme has, however, been interrupted by the arrival of a British fleet in a Corean harbor, and the presentation of a strong protest against the Russianizing of China. It is reported that China has compromised the Corean matter by making the Englishman and the Russian joint agents, but whether that step will satisfy England is not known. In the meantime, France is steadily pushing her borders northward on the south, and Germany suddenly concerned about the safety of her missionaries in China, has seized a Chinese port. Besides these powers, China has to reckon with her victorious enemy Japan who is naturally unwilling to see other nations take possession of the country to which she considered herself the natural heir. The various Governments protest that they have no design on the integrity of China and that the partition of the vast Empire is not impending: but their actions belie their words. The presence of the fleets, the seizure of the ports and their discussion of the "hinterland" questions, all suggest that China is threatened with the fate that has befallen Africa. It appears that the Emperor of China has another cause for apprehension, which is giving him even greater concern than the approach of his hungry enemies. An imperial decree has been issued curtailing the ceremonies at the approaching New Year. The decree refers to the fact that the Board of Astronomy prognosticates an eclipse of the sun to take place on January 22, which is the first day of the new year in China, and as this betokens impending calamity, the Emperor, following the custom of his predecessors, will humble himself in order to avert the wrath of heaven. All the court attendants are to clothe themselves in mourning, the customary banquets are to be omitted and prayer is to be made everywhere for forbearance and mercy. If the Emperor knew more of science he would feel less alarm about the eclipse but probably more apprehension of his real danger. It is to his credit that in his extremity he resorts to prayer, whether his alarm is caused by the facts, or whether, like the ancient prophet, he recognizes the eclipse as a portent.

When I shall put thee out, I will cover the heavens and make the stars thereof dark: I will cover the sun with a cloud and the moon shall not give her light, and I will vex the hearts of many people when I shall bring thy destruction among the nation (Ezek. 32: 7-9).

Fire for the Germs.

A radical preventive measure for the protection of children, has been adopted by the School Commissioners of Webster City, Iowa. Last year, there was an outbreak of diphtheria in the school, and the doctors of the town notified the Commissioners that the school-house must be disinfected. This was thoroughly done and the building was completely renovated. It was noticed that rabbits had burrowed under the building, but they were driven out and their holes were stopped. This year, the rabbits made new runs under the school-house, and, it is supposed, carried the germs with them. Diphtheria broke out among the children again, and four of them have died. Every measure that the doctors had suggested for the disinfection of the school-house, having already been taken, it was decided to make no further attempt to renovate it, but to burn the building. This extreme step has been taken and the building is now a charred ruin. It is much to be wished that in dealing with the evil of sin, people would adopt measures as radical, instead of trying to reform in their own strength:

That the body of sin might be destroyed that henceforth we should not serve sin (Rom. 6: 6).

Disease-Proof Garments.

One of the recent improvements in cloth manufacture, remarks the Boston Commercial Bulletin in a recent review of textile interests, is an ingenious method of preparing goods so as to insure to the wearer less liability to the contraction of diseases from exposure to infection. In carrying out this idea, the plan pursued is to mix three parts of quinine or antipyrine with one hundred parts of water, the yarn for the fabric being passed through this solution and dried. For the warps, from one to three per cent. of the quinine or antipyrine is added to the sizing materials before their passage through the size, and in the treatment of fabrics the same proportion of the drugs named is added to the finishing mixture: in fact, this method of treatment assumes that the proportion of any substance capable of acting adversely to fevers may be increased or diminished according to the nature of the one used. If this process proves to have the effect claimed for it, it will be very valuable to persons who are in hospitals and places where they are liable to contract contagious disease. There will not be the same difficulty in getting them to use the garments so treated as there sometimes is in persuading people to take upon them the robe which Christ provides to keep them from the pollution of the world:

To her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints (Rev. 19: 8).

Saved by the Night-Stick.

One man in New York has reason to be thankful that the proposal of the late Board of Police Commissioners to deprive the patrolmen of their deadly night-sticks was not carried through. So many prisoners have been brutally clubbed by the police that there seemed no way of protecting the public from outrage but by forbidding the men to carry the murderous weapon. While the question was still pending a fire broke out in the night in a store in Delancey street. The inmates of the upper floors were got out safely, but when the whole front of the building was burning fiercely and the flames were steadily eating their way to the rear, two men were heard shouting for help at a rear window of the ground floor. Their escape by the front door was cut off by the fire and they were prevented getting out of the rear window by the iron bars over it. Two policemen made their way to the window and using their night-sticks as levers wrenched the iron bars from their fastenings and helped the men out. So narrow was their escape that their hair was singed and the clothes of one of them were on fire. Unquestionably both the men would have perished if the policemen had wasted a minute in looking for an implement to wrench off the bars. Thus the weapon that has so often done injury became a means of saving life. This is not the only thing that has been used for opposite effects. Poisons are often used with good effect as medicines, and in spiritual matters the Gospel is not uniformly a blessing to all who hear it.

To the one we are the savor of death unto death and to the other the savor of life unto life (II. Cor. 2: 16).

Took a Dead Man's Name.

The deathbed confession of a man who died in a hospital in West Superior, Wis., a few days ago has been published. It contains the surprising statement that he has been living for more than thirty years under a name to which he was not entitled. When the war broke out he was in the fur trade in St. Paul, in partnership with his cousin, whom he resembled in appearance. He had squandered his share of the profits of the business as fast as he received them, while his partner had invested his share and was worth a considerable sum. In 1862 he determined to sell out and join the army, and his partner, who was sincerely attached to him, went with him. He went safely through two years, but in 1864 he was severely wounded in the battle of Spottsylvania and was carried to the hospital. On his recovery he found that he had been entered among the killed, and his partner on the list of wounded, a mistake having evidently been made in the identity of the two men. He ascertained that his partner had really been killed in the battle and buried under his name. As he was, as usual, without funds, he found it convenient to let the mistake go uncorrected. He received his partner's rents and dividends and continued to bear his name. Several letters received from common friends, referred to his death, but none of them expressed any regret. He found that his partner had enjoyed much more than he the respect of the world, and altogether that he would profit by retaining the other's name and identity. He did so until his recent illness, when, learning that he could not recover, he made a full confession of the deception he had practiced for thirty-three years. He had been willing to sacrifice his own identity to get a better name, reputation, and property than he possessed, though in doing so he incurred the risk of detection and punishment. It is sometimes difficult to persuade people to make the same sacrifice, though by doing so they may gain eternal blessedness.

I have suffered the loss of all things, that I may win Christ and be found in him, not having my own righteousness, but that which is through the faith of Christ (Phil., 3: 9).

Learning to See.

A patient of Dr. Duclot, the eminent French occulist, is having a novel experience. She is twenty years old, but only within the last few weeks has she looked upon the world around her. She was born blind, but Dr. Duclot has performed an operation on her eyes, and now she can see distinctly. Previous to the operation she had an equisite sense of touch, and could describe minutely anything that she could pass her hands over. But now that she can see, she is unable to recognize by sight the things she knew by touch. A number of objects were shown to her, but she misnamed most of them, mistaking a dog for a cat, a feather duster for a bunch of chrysanthemums, etc. When blindfolded she correctly named all the objects about which she had been mistaken. Gradually she is learning to apply the sense of sight to the forms of objects, and to realize how any object the form of which she was familiar with by the sense of touch, will appear. Of color she had previously no conception, and it is now a continual mystery to her. It is curious, too, to see how puzzled she is by the sense of distance. She reaches out her hand for objects several yards away, and when a hand was held near to her face, and she was told to touch it, she felt for it at arm's length. Formerly, she had walked confidently about the house, but since the operation, she stumbles and hesitates, and in crossing a level floor walks as if she were going upstairs. The doctors say she will gradually learn to see as a baby learns. Her eyes see as do those of other people, but the brain being unaccustomed to receive impressions from the optical nerves, is not able to use them with intelligence. There are some people similarly affected as to spiritual vision, which does not come by nature.

The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned (I. Cor 2: 14).

A Fatal Tether.

A singular fatality, involving the death of a well known citizen, is reported by South Carolina journals. A prosperous farmer living near Clifton in that State wanted one of his men to go on an errand to the city, and, searching for him, found that he was driving one of his cows from one pasture to another on the opposite side of the farm. The servant promised to go on the errand as soon as he had taken the cow to the proper pasture, but the farmer was in a hurry and would not wait. He said that he would take the cow himself to her pasture so that the man could start at once for the city. The servant was reluctant to see his employer engaged in a duty of that kind and protested against it. Besides this, he warned the farmer that the cow was difficult to manage, but the farmer would not listen. He fastened the rope attached to the cow's horns to his own wrist and thus secured against the danger of having it dragged from his hands he started on his unaccustomed duty. A part of the way lay near a railroad track and as they came upon it an express train came thundering along. The cow was frightened and started to run across the track. The farmer unable to extricate his wrist was dragged after her, in front of the train and was cut to pieces. In that dire moment when the farmer was vainly trying to extricate his hand from the tether, how he must have wished that he had not made it so secure! It would be well if every Christian took care to avoid a similar danger in respect to his property. He should not allow his affections to entwine themselves about it too firmly. The time may come when it would be better to sacrifice it rather than lose his soul.

Sell whatsoever thou hast and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and take up the cross and follow me. And he was sad at that saying and went away grieved: for he had great possessions (Mark 10:21).

PALESTINE IN MOSAIC.

Recent Discovery of a Map of Palestine in a Buried Pavement Supposed to have been Laid Fourteen Centuries Ago.

BY REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

CABLE despatches were received recently from the Holy Land, announcing an important discovery confirmatory of the Scriptures. This was a pavement, apparently of a church, which for centuries has been hidden under a pile of rubbish and earth, now being removed to make way for improvements. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received from a correspondent in Jerusalem, a photograph of this mosaic, which is reproduced on this page. It is deeply interesting, not only as a work of ancient art, but as showing how little, four hundred years after Christ, Palestine had changed from the country described in the Gospels and the Acts. The story of the discovery of the mosaic, the very existence of which had not been suspected, is remarkable. Workmen were clearing away the stones of an old temple in Madeba, Palestine, to make room for the foundations of a new Greek church, when they came upon the pavement, the significance of which they did not understand, till Father Cleophas, the librarian of the Greek convent at Jerusalem, examined it, recognized its importance, and preserved the fragments which had not been broken. Unhappily, some parts had already been destroyed, as will be seen by the vacant places in the picture. The mosaic bears no date, but those best able to judge believe the curious pavement was laid in the year 450 of the Christian era. This date is about a hundred years after Eusebius had written his two volumes on "The Places Mentioned in the Sacred Writings," only one volume of which has come down to us—the one including the places of Palestine mentioned in the Scriptures. At about the time the mosaic was laid, Jerome had furnished his Latin translation of the volume. It is more than likely that the information and inspiration received from this volume of Eusebius on sacred geography, and its translation and improvement by Jerome, prompted the author to lay his stone map of Palestine in the church floor of Medeba. A careful examination of the map will show that much of the information it gives was derived from the onomasticon of Eusebius. It has a wider range, however, than the volume of Eusebius, including places not mentioned in the Scriptures. The map reaches from Zebulon on the north to a region past the limits of the Holy Land on the south. The extreme southern point represents a portion of Egypt, with the delta of the Nile. It doubtless included the territory between the desert and the Mediterranean Sea. The Jordan is very plainly marked, and so is the Dead Sea, into which it empties. Boats can be seen on the Dead Sea, because boats plied its waters, but no fishes are seen, because they could not live in its waters. Fishes appear in the Jordan, because there were fishes there.

One with the slightest knowledge of Greek, can make out much that is entertaining and instructive on the map. He will read "the lot of Simeon," "the lot of Dan," "the lot of Judah," "the desert of Sinai, where the manna and quails were sent," Rama, "a voice was heard in Rama," "Gilgal the place of the twelve stones," "The hot springs of Calirrhoe." Most of the towns of any sacred importance are located and named on the map. Sometimes objects are made to indicate the town, as a cluster of palm trees to mark Jericho, the City of Palms. The picture has many church buildings and shrines because at the time the Mosaic pavement was made, Christianity was dominant in Palestine, and churches were scattered over the land. The tombs of Joseph of Elisha, of Zacharias are indicated on the map, and also the tomb of Jonah which would indicate that the author did not consider the old prophet such a ghostly or imaginary character as some students of the Scriptures maintain.

The author did his best work in his representation of "The Sacred City of Jerusalem" which shows very plainly on the map. The wall about the city is clearly marked. At the extreme north there is a southern entrance, the Nablous Gate, with a tower on either side leading to a large court marked by a single tower. On the west is the Jaffa Gate by the side of which is a very high tower called the Citadel of David. At the extreme south is a single gate near to which on the east are two other entrances. On the east side are two gates answering to those in use in the Jerusalem of to-day. There is a long straight street in the middle of the city running almost the whole length of it from north to south which appears to be the principal one in the place. It has a continuous porch on either side of the street. There is another important street on the east side which is not so long or so straight as the main one. Fine churches can be distinguished all through the city, the one in the middle of the main street on the west side is the Martyrium of Constantine, that at the extreme south whose porch and roof can be plainly distinguished is the Church of Zion. A building which is doubtless the Pretorium can be seen on the east side.

Medeba, the town in which the mosaic was found, is situated about six miles south-east of Mount Pisgah and a dozen miles from the nearest point on the Dead Sea. It was one of the oldest and most important cities of Moab. Its houses were full of people and its streets alive with trade three thousand five hundred years ago. Moses parcelled out the district containing it to the tribe of Reuben. Joshua says (Josh. 13: 16): "And Moses gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben inheritance according to their families. And their coast was from Arore that is on the bank of the river Arnon and the city that is in the midst of the river and all the plain by Medeba." It is questionable whether the Reubenites ever got possession, as it appears to have been a walled city, peculiarly well fortified, and to have been constantly occupied by the Moabites and by their conquerors. During David's reign, Medeba, as we are told, fell into the hands of the Ammonites. Flushed with their successes the Ammonites insulted and defied David who sent Joab with the flower of his army against them. They secured a large number of Syrian soldiers as mercenaries and made their stand for the decisive battle at Medeba. (See II.Sam. 10: 6-13). Joab, just before entering the engagement, made an address to his soldiers worthy of any nation or age. In it he says: "Be of good courage and let us play the men for our people and for the cities of our God." The battle was terrific. Joab achieved a glorious victory and Medeba witnessed the breaking of the alliance between the Syrians and the Ammonites and the humiliation of the enemies of Israel.

When the Roman Empire embraced Christianity, Medeba became an important Christian city. It was the residence of one of the thirty-five bishops of Arabia. The stones of the ruins to-day show that by far the most imposing structure in the city was the Christian Church under whose foundation the mosaic was discovered. The traveler of to-day as he stands on the round-top hill above Medeba notices the relic of the Roman road over which horses and chariots swept in pride to Heshbon. As he walks around the mile and a half circuit of ruins with not a single perfect house and scarcely any inhabitants, he might appropriately read from the prophet Isaiah (15: 2): "Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over Medeba. In their streets they shall gird themselves in sackcloth. On the tops of their houses and in their streets every one shall howl, weeping abundantly."

MAP OF PALESTINE IN MOSAIC FOUND AT MEDEBA.

There is nothing about the mosaic to indicate who its author was. He belongs to the great army of the unknown, to the myriads of those who have gone down under the flood of years. But the discovery of his map suggests the immortality of thought and influence. The spade has done splendid work recently digging up the treasures of the past. The one which unearthed the stone map of the Holy Land deserves the gratitude of the students of ancient geography and of the sacred Scriptures.

Renounced the Romish Church.

Abbe Charbonnel, the Distinguished Cleric and Author, Turns His Back on the Papacy—A Religious Bombshell in Paris.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

PARIS, Dec. 12.—Like a bolt of lightning from a clear sky came the announcement recently that the Abbe Victor Charbonnel, one of the most distinguished clerical writers of France, and a shining light in the Roman Church, had cast off his allegiance, and declared that in future he would worship God untrammelled by the restrictions and regulations created by the Romish hierarchy. It was while endeavoring to put through his project for a Congress of Religions in 1900, similar to the one held at the Chicago World's Fair, that this earnest worker realized the wide gulf which separated the Catholicism of today from the principles laid down by the poor and humble Nazarene. Let me quote his own words from his letter published in all of to-day's newspapers, addressed to Cardinal Richard, the archbishop of Paris:

YOUR EMINENCE:—In devoting my life to the church, in the ardent sincerity of youth, I had hoped to devote it at the same time to my God. But a long and sad experience has brought to me the disappointing conviction that to serve the church, or rather the men who are to-day controlling it, is not a service to my Maker. I cannot, with a clear conscience, continue to keep up my connection with an ecclesiastical organization that uses religion as an instrument for governing the minds of men, as a dominating force, a means of exercising intellectual and social oppression, a system of intolerance—all this to supplant its true mission, which is to elevate the soul, to seek a divine ideal, to furnish a moral support, a principle of love and brotherhood among men; in brief, I oppose a system that turns religion into a matter of miserably human politics, instead of a divine faith!

Loyal to my conscience, and for the peace of my soul, I am impelled to announce to Your Eminence that I am no more a member of the Catholic clergy; I am no more of the Catholic Church!

There is an old familiar ring about these words; for a moment they take us back to the days of the Augsburg confession, and of the old historic protests against the encroachments and tyranny of Rome. I said just now that this open repudiation of the church by Abbe Charbonnel had come like a thunderbolt. This statement needs to be qualified. The general public not being prepared for the announcement, were in a measure taken aback. Those, however, who, like myself, have been following Charbonnel's recent writings, could without even reading between the lines, have foretold the event. I was much impressed by an article of his published in the Revue Chretienne, the leading Protestant periodical of France, with regard to the extraordinary case of Leo Taxil, that accomplished fumiste, or mystifier, who for twelve long years deluded thousands and thousands of Catholics all over the world by pretending to disclose the rites and artifices of a secret order.

Leo Taxil, whose real name is Gabriel Jogand, was for many years a dabbler in sensational literature, much of it of an anti-clerical nature, as may be inferred from the fact that he published a most scurrilous parody on the Scriptures, when the notion seized him one day to make a pretence of becoming converted to Romanism. Here was a triumph for the the church! Taxil then attacked Freemasonry. This suited a certain portion of the Catholic hierarchy.

Having whetted the appetites of a credulous class for further revelations, Taxil brought upon the scene a young woman, whom he called Diana Vaughan, an associate and like himself, a convert to Rome.

At last, fearing eventual discovery and prosecution for false pretenses, he publicly acknowledged at a special meeting, at which the writer was present, that the whole business had been a hoax from beginning to end, and that for twelve years he had experienced the pleasure of fooling the best part of the Catholic world of Europe from the Holy Father down. Taxil's confession brought a storm around his ears. For weeks after, the clerical press endeavored to explain away its own gullibility, while showering invectives on the bogus convert's head. Not so with Victor Charbonnel, who saw in this incident a probably long desired opportunity to preach a sermon to those of his co-religionists who allow their superstition to dim the bright beacon of Scriptural truth. Here are the strong and telling words that summed up his presentation of this most extraordinary episode.

It would be superfluous to attempt an explanation of this adventure between the impostor and his victim. It would be merely entering once more into the psychology of human rascality and human stupidity. One remark is however in order. For some years back Catholicism has unfortunately been accomplishing a visible evolution, which must naturally end in the worst of deceptions. Apparitions, pilgrimages, so-called supernatural revelations, prophecies, new rites and forms of devotion, psychic manifestations, mystico-sensual hallucinations—these are the elements that seem to hold the highest place in the life and activity of the church. One begins by believing in the Virgins of La Salette and Lourdes, and one ends by accepting Diana Vaughan la Couesdon, and the Virgin of Tilly-sur-Seulles. What our Catholicism really needs is some injection of the Protestant spirit. Some Catholics, imbued with this spirit, we find in America for example.

The event leading up to Abbe Charbonnel's renunciation of Papal authority was his idea of convening the leading theologians of the world to a general assemblage during the year of the Paris Exposition. It was in vain that he appealed to his Catholic brethren in France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, and even in tolerant Scotland, to help him maintain the theory of the "equal dignity of every form of religious belief based on honest conviction," another way of expressing the theory of religious tolerance. The word was passed around, and his lay adherents suddenly withdrew from his support. This young and brilliant writer, whose name had lent an unusual eclat for the past ten years to the religious literature of modern France, at last decided to sever the ties that bound him to the Catholic hierarchy. The Gospel of Christ undefiled is his guide hereafter, without the mockeries and flummeries created by man!

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

PLEASURES OF THE SNOW.

City and Country Pastimes in Winter. Frozen Crystals Under the Microscope.

THE season has come again when nature has covered the brown earth and leafless trees with a soft, white mantle. The fields in the country are covered with snow, and nothing is seen to remind one of the beauty that is gone save the few remaining leaves on the oak trees and the brown dress of the evergreens. In the country the snow is always picturesquely beautiful, while in the city the universal desire is to be rid of it as soon as possible, for the traffic, amid slush and deep snow, is anything but pleasant.

Our illustration shows a familiar phase of rural life in winter. The little maid and her brother are going to school, and two mischief-loving boys are about to snowball them. One boy assumes an innocent air as he endeavors to conceal the ball he has made, while the other urchin openly and defiantly forms a hard ball on his knee. The brave little maid tries to appear indifferent, but she knows only too well that she and her brother will soon be the target for their assailants unless they are lucky enough to escape by flight. City children cannot realize the enjoyments of winter as country children can. The sports of the latter are many and varied: skating on pond and river, while the cheeks glow and the eyes sparkle in the bracing breeze; sleighing and coasting, with the merry voices chiming to the jingle of the bells as the sleighs go dancing over the glistening snow. Then there is rare sport in building snow-men and snow-houses, and especially in snow-battles for the boys. City amusements in winter are more limited, but when "the ball is up," large parties of merry skaters board the cars and go off to the parks and lakes for an afternoon's fun on the ice. Curling parties are also becoming popular, and afford much healthful sport for the grown folks.

The snow has always been a favorite theme with the poets, and as the first buds of Spring seem to stir the poetic imagination, so the earliest fleecy flakes of earth's white mantle set the bards a-singing. Longfellow's beautiful poem on the coming of the snow will be remembered by many:

Out of the bosom of the air—
Out of the cloud-folds of her garments shaken,
Over the woodlands brown and bare,
Over the harvest-field forsaken,
Silent and slow
Descends the snow.

In the eastern lands snow is seldom seen, except in mountainous regions. The sacred historical books contain only two references to snow actually falling (II. Sam. 23:20, and I. Maccabees 13:22), but in the poetical and prophetic books it is mentioned frequently. At Jerusalem, at the season of the year, snow sometimes falls to the depth of several inches, though it seldom lies long. Nazareth being in a vine-hilly country, is subject to heavier snow-falls.

Under the microscope the beautiful snow crystals are seen in all their variety of designs and never fail to excite the admiration of the beholder. These crystals, photographed and enlarged, are far more exquisite than any design by a human artist, being of an endless variety of forms, simple and combined. One scientist describes ninety-six varieties of combination, but there are hundreds more, all so rich in artistic structure and so perfect in their minute loveliness that some commentators have concluded that Job must have referred to these multitudinous variations in form when he used the expression "treasures of the snow" (Job 38:22).

Edison's High Opinion of Women.

Thomas A. Edison, the famous electrical inventor, declares that women have more quickness and insight about machinery than men have and he prefers to employ them in carrying out the details of his electrical inventions. He is credited with saying, "Women have more sense about machinery in a minute than men in a lifetime," and he shows his faith in them by keeping 200 women on his pay roll.

In many callings women are found to be more acceptable, and often, even more capable, than men. Of the 422,929 teachers in the public schools of the United States in 1890, 270,910, or 64 per cent., were women. The United States census for 1880 reports 17,392,000 persons engaged in various professional and industrial occupations, of whom 2,647,000, or 14 per cent., were women. In 1893, 2,500 women were practicing medicine, 6,000 were post-office clerks, 275 were preaching. In the city of New York alone about 27,000 were reported to be supporting their husbands. This growing position occupied by women, this admission of her equality with man, and the growing readiness to grant her any and every position and work of which she proves herself capable, is a very modern thing, a product of Christianity. This admission of the equality of woman has in its turn a very powerful influence on the moral life of the people. The future moral development of Christendom is to be very largely in the hands of women themselves. When once they unite to suppress the foes of the home, intemperance in all its forms will be doomed.

A THREATENED ATTACK.

An Eskimo Child-Party.

Probably the oddest children's party ever known was that described by a writer in an exchange. A company of men were far north in the Arctic regions at Christmas time, and they could not help thinking of their families at home, and longing to be with them. But they knew it would not do to be homesick, for it would unfit them for their work, so they chose the best possible cure for it, they made other people happy. The little Eskimo children around them had never even heard of a Christmas tree, and the men of the ship's company went to work to make one. "Make one? Why, trees grow!" Certainly, but they do not grow in the Arctic lands, for these explorers were far north of the tree line. But they took bones of the whale, walrus, and other animals, and tied them together so as to make a trunk with branches. That was the tree. A Christmas without candy would seem strange to you, but instead of candy, they made balls of whale fat, or blubber, of which the Eskimo children are as fond of as you are of chocolate drops or peanut brittle. They hung these on the tree, and prepared some little presents of buttons and beads, and that was all. But it was enough for a delightful time for the little Eskimos, and their pleasure made the men so happy that they forget their loneliness and homesickness.

Give the Little Folks a Chance.

Don't be impatient because your little son or daughter do not "measure up" to the full station of your expectations in all respects. Wisdom comes with the years. Give a child a chance. Suppose he has not done exactly right. Do not nip the tender bud of regret by the harsh breath of blame. Make the child happy when it is possible. In the sunshine of joy the little human plant develops naturally, harmoniously. In grief and anger and sullenness he is chilled, thwarted, distorted.

Home Qualities.

It is a great error says a thoughtful writer, to suppose that because a woman is domestic in her tastes she must therefore be dull, old fashioned and out of date in dress and notions. She need not be a mere domestic drudge, whose thoughts and conversation are confined wholly and solely to her household duties, the servants, and care of the nursery; who can take no interest in art, literature, politics or society. It is quite possible, even in these days of rush and hurry, as many women have proved, to take a personal and practical interest in home and belongings, and at the same time keep in touch with the deeper, fuller life of the outside world. To look well after her own household is the duty, and should be the pleasure of every woman. Even those who have to leave the shelter of their homes to work in the busy world outside, need not neglect their homes, for it is not so much time that is necessary for the smooth working of a household as thought, method, and punctuality.

OUR HEROES.

Here's a hand to the boy who [illegible]
To do what he knows to be right,
When he falls in the way of temptation
He has a hard battle to fight.
Who strives against self and its comrades
Will find a most powerful foe.
All honor to him if he conquers.
A cheer for the boy who says "No!"

There's many a battle fought daily
The world knows nothing about.
There's many a brave little soldier
Whose strength put a legion to rout
And he who fights single-handed
Is more of a hero, I say,
Than he who leads soldiers to battle
And conquers by arms in the fray.

Be steadfast, my boy, when you're tempted,
To do what you know to be right.
Stand firm by the colors of manhood
And you will o'ercome in the fight.
"The right," be your battle cry ever
In waging the warfare of life.
And God, who knows who are the heroes,
Will give you the strength for the strife.

—PHOEBE CARY.

Marriage in Japan.

UNDER the peculiar conditions in which Japanese women are placed, it is no wonder that the words "courting," or "courtship" are not to be found in their vocabulary. Indeed, the signs and tokens of affection, without which we cannot even imagine the word love, are unknown quantities. Marriage, says a writer in the Home Magazine, is made a convenience between two families. A father imagines that it is about time that his son shall marry. He may consult his wife about the matter, but this is not often the case. When he has made up his mind, he employs an ama, or go-between, to learn what families of corresponding rank have marriageable daughters. The ama reports the names of suitable young ladies, a selection is made, and she is authorized to make the wishes of her employer known to the father of the intended bride. The latter receives the request, and promises to consider and to return an answer within a given time. Most frequently the parents are old acqnaintances, perhaps old friends, but decorum or etiquette forbids a personal mention of the matter, except when they should meet after the proposal has been made. Then the bride's father must say: "Allow me to thank you for the undeserved honor you have conferred upon my humble house," to which the youth's father will return an equally deprecatory answer. But the two parties most interested in the matter are not to be consulted at all. In most cases they are wholly ignorant of what our boys and girls would call a conspiracy, and it is not likely that they are acquainted. But if the respective fathers, after due deliberatian, have come to an agreement, the date is set and each informs his child.

There is never any remonstrance. Such a thing as questioning a father's authority would be unheard of. Directions are issued, and the bride's father sends an invitation to the groom's family. This is the first time, probably, that the prospective husband has seen his intended, and vice versa. Stolen and perhaps frightened glances are cast. But obedience has been so ingrained that this visit of ceremony comes to an end without producing a change in the programme. Presents are made and returned, and on the day set for the wedding the bride is escorted to her father in-law's house.

The ceremonies are few. No priests, no bridesmaids, no orange-blossom, or wedding presents. A few cups of sake are drunk in a prescribed manner, and the bride has entered her husband's family. She is no longer a member of her own. She must obey above all her father and mother-in-law, her husband and his brothers. She has been taught to revere and to serve all these new relations.

Little by Little.

Just a little every day—
That's the way!
Seeds in darkness swell and grow,
Tiny blades push through the snow,
Never any flower or May
Leaps to blossom in a burst,
Slowly—slowly—at the first
That's the way!
Just a little every day.

THE CHILD IN JERUSALEM.

BY FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY.
Author of "Titus," "Stephen," and "Paul," etc.

THE lamb—a pretty creature, innocently white and soft, its nostrils and ears showing pink amid its snowy fleeces, bleated piteously as the man litted it to his shoulders.

The man, tall, dark, grizzled, yet withal of a certain benign and reverend aspect, looked down with a thoughtful smile at the lad who stood at his side. This lad, more than a child, less than a man in stature, was possessed of a countenance indescribable. One might say that the pure oval of his cheek glowed with the sun-kissed olive of southern Palestine: that his eyes were clear and deep, like crystal pools reflecting the age-long beams of distant stars; that his hair fell about his shoulders a cloud of passionate light; that his mouth was strong, tender, sweet, yet touched with a mysterious prescience of infinite sorrow. But alas! when all has been said, one cannot see him as he was.

"Thou shalt come with me to the temple," said the man, after a pause, "that thou mayst witness the solemn paschal sacrifice. Thou art now 'a son of the law,' and so must thou perfect thyself in all things pertaining to the law."

The boy had fixed his large, gentle eyes upon the lamb, which had ceased its struggles and lay submissively across the broad shoulders of its bearer. His small brown hand stole upward and rested tenderly for an instant on the soft white head, then he followed the long strides of the man in silence.

Jerusalem was thronged from wall to wall with pilgrims; and outside the walls also, in the winding valleys of Kidron and Hinnom and on the gentle slopes of the surrounding hills, were they encamped by the thousand thousands, their tents and booths of wattled branches interwoven with leaves nestling in every available nook and corner.

As the man, Joseph, and the child passed through the crowded streets their ears were filled with the hum of countless tongues, speaking in every language under heaven. And not all were pilgrims; merchants, squatted cross-legged in their stalls, blatantly besought the attention and patronage of the devout; water-carriers cried aloud of the waters of Jerusalem, of the sacred fountains of Zion, pure as the heavens, cold as the dews of midnight; beggars, lame, blind, or sick with loathsome diseases, thrust their hands imploringly into the faces of the passers-by. Once the two were crowded back against the wall of the narrow street to make way for a platoon of Roman soldiers, from whose burnished shields and spear-points the sun struck sparks of dazzling splendor. Joseph's brow contracted with righteous anger as the advance guard swept his mailed arm rudely against the child, bidding him back, on pain of his life!

"Ay, the heathen exalt themselves," quoth a white-bearded Jew from the wilderness, who had observed the action. "When Messiah shall come, son of Abraham, what thinkest thou, shall these things be?"

Joseph lifted his eyes to the great white towers of Hippikus, Phasaelus and Mariamne, which looked down upon the sacred city, the visible sign and seal of the iron power of Rome. "When Messiah shall come," he responded with a sigh, "but how long, oh Lord, how long!"

"The time is at hand!" cried the other, exultantly. "This, thy little lad, may yet march in the victorious armies of the Prince."

Then the impatient multitude surged back into the space made vacant by the Roman soldiers, the friendly Arab drifted with the current, while Joseph and the lad pressed steadily on towards the temple. They presently found themselves in the midst of a great throng of pilgrims, all bent upon the same errand as themselves, for every man bore a lamb upon his shoulders. These innocent babes filled the air with loud, tremulous, insistent beseechings.

Now three mighty blasts of the ram's-horn trumpets announce the opening of the gates. The waiting crowds sweep in, the loud chorus of the Hallel, chanted by the attendant priests, mingling with and subduing the piteous plaints of the paschal lambs:

> Praise, O ye servants of Jehovah,
> Praise ye the name of Jehovah!
> Blessed be Jehovah's name
> Henceforth and forever!
> From sunrise unto its setting
> Praised be Jehovah's name!

Joseph, with the lad, had been among the first to find entrance into the holy place of sacrifice: the lamb, presented in silence for the ceremonial inspection, is pronounced clean, without spot or blemish, according to the law, while the chanting bursts forth anew in a loud wailing chorus:

> The cords of death encompassed me,
> The pains of hell gat hold upon me,
> I found distress and trouble.
> Then called I on Jehovah's name,
> "Alas, Jehovah, deliver my life!"

The lamb had ceased both its struggles and its complainings, its innocent eyes were dim with fear, its innocent throat outstretched: a quick flash of the priestly knife, a bright flow of life-blood into the golden bowl of sacrifice, and the paschal lamb was slain.

Return, O my soul, to thy rest!

rang out the pleading voices—

> For Jehovah hath requited me.
> For thou hath delivered my life from death,
> Mine eyes from tears, my feet from falling.

Like one in a dream the child beheld the blood poured upon the altar, the strange, prophetic words of Isaiah sounding in his ears above the loud halleluias of the worshipers. "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he was brought as a lamb to the slaughter; and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth."

Did the child, Jesus, divine even then the age-long mystery of the paschal sacrifice? Did strange, mysterious questionings visit that innocent soul, so girt about with heavenly intelligences, as he witnessed the solemn details of the feast that followed; the haste and silence; the care lest a bone of the innocent victim should be broken; the stakes of pomegranate wood thrust crosswise through its tender body; the unleavened bread, the bitter herbs, the blood red wine of sacrifice, mingled with water in "the cup of blessing?"

The feast was eaten after the old, old custom, the old, old questions were asked and answered, and few of all the myriads of feasters in and about the holy city but spoke with his neighbor of that later and greater deliverance promised Israel with the coming of the long-awaited Prince of Peace. And, lo! that Prince was in their very midst, lifting up his childish voice in the mighty exultant hymn of thanksgiving:

> Praise Jehovah, all nations!
> Laud him, all people!
> For mighty is his love upon us,
> And the truth of Jehovah eternal!
> Hallelujah!

Midnight in Jerusalem, the blackness made visible by the red flare of myriads of smoking torches; a dull trampling of countless beasts of burden; cries, blows, execrations, passionate disputes; the shrill wailing of children; anxious voices of women calling, beseeching, urging; a mad, hurrying, tumultuous flood of humanity, now surging in dense masses between breathless city walls, or pent beneath black, stifling archways, only to pour with rapid, resistless tide through the yawning gates, gradually to widen into peaceful streams and rivulets in the wider darkness without.

On the crowded highway a woman suddenly stopped short, straining wide, anxious eyes into the night. "My child!" she cried, tremulously; "where art thou, O my child?" And again and again, "Where art thou?"

Shrill voices answered her out of the dark, but his voice answered not.

"My child is lost," she said; "we must return and make instant search for him."

"My beloved."—and the man who walked at her side laid his broad palm soothingly over her trembling fingers—"surely, the child is with our kinsfolk, who tarry because of the throng."

"But if an enemy hath dealt foully with him," murmured the mother, faintly. "Thou hast not already forgotten—"

The man was silent for a moment, then he spoke, slowly, emphatically, and with frequent pauses: "'Behold they are dead which sought the young child's life. Return ye unto the land of Israel.' It is the word spoken unto me by the messenger of Jehovah. The child is precious in the sight of heaven; and shall he suffer hurt in this holy city of Jerusalem?"

The woman listened attentively, but she trembled the more at his words, though why she knew not; nor could she understand how it was that the fateful words of Simeon, spoken long years ago, but never forgotten, sounded perpetually in her ears like a cry of woe.

Nevertheless she went her way submissively with the others of their company; but at the dawn when they looked carefully for the lad among all the straggling groups at the wayside they found him not.

"He is with our acquaintance, who yet tarry behind us on the road," quoth Joseph, confidently. "We shall find him at the noontide encampment."

But they did not find him at noontide, nor yet at evening when the pilgrims gathered for the evening rest. And when the matter was noised abroad many of the women of Nazareth gathered themselves before the tent of Joseph and Mary, his wife, to condole with them.

"Alas! daughter of Abraham," quoth certain of these, rolling up their eyes and wagging their heads dolorously, "the lad was too wondrous good for humble Nazareth. An evil eye hath lighted upon him; or, a beast hath trodden him under foot; or perchance he hath sickened by the way; or, again, thieves have stolen him away in the darkness. Alas, alas!"

But Elizabeth, the mother of John, when she heard what had befallen, came to Mary and spoke strong words of comfort and cheer. Also she reminded her of the wondrous words of the angel: "Thou shalt call the child Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

And Mary arose in the strength of that word and went with Joseph all the way back to Jerusalem, asking of every one by the way: "Hast thou seen a little Nazarene lad, breast-high, wearing a garment of white wool, with an abba also, striped with blue and white?" And one said that he had seen no such lad, and another that he had seen him riding on a camel with a wild man of the desert; and yet another declared that the lad had passed that way five days before with a company of Egyptians.

And when they were come at length to the city, they went to the house where they had lodged during the days of the feast, but no one there had seen the child. And there also they found many tongues to tell of the dangers of Passover time, and of divers evils and misfortunes which had befallen the child of this one or of that in days past. The neighbors also came by twos and threes to offer counsel, and to stare at the white face of the mother and the bowed head of the father, hurrying home again to count their own children with jealous care and joy.

"We will go up to the temple that we may lay the matter before Jehovah," said Joseph, at length: "for there is neither comfort nor wisdom in man's words."

And Mary, silent and despairing, rose up from her place, and the two went up to the temple, that they might lay the matter before Jehovah.

There were not many in the court of the women that day, for the matrons and maids of Jerusalem were busy setting their houses to rights after the great influx of Passover visitors; therefore it was that a certain venerable rabbi saw the mother of Jesus as she prayed, imploring the mercy of God with tears and sobs. And when she had done praying and had risen to depart, being strengthened and comforted of her sorrow, he asked her why she wept as she prayed. And she said to him, "Sir, I have lost my son, and though his father and I have sought him carefully and with tears these three days we have not found him."

And the rabbi answered her: "Is the lad breast-high, ruddy and well favored of countenance, and doth he wear a garment of white and an abba striped with blue?"

"Oh, sir, it is he!" cried Mary, clasping her hands: "I beseech thee to tell me where he is."

Then the good rabbi told her that on the day after the feast a young lad, a stranger, had come into the schools of the rabbis, which also were held in the temple. And when the master of the school asked him who he was and whence he came, he made answer that he was called Jesus, and that he had come to his Father's house to learn of his Father. "And the lad hath tarried with us now these three days," continued the rabbi, "both asking and answering questions, amazing us every one with his understanding and wisdom."

Then Joseph was called, and the three came to the place where the great rabbis and masters of the law were accustomed to teach the young sons of Israel; and there, seated upon the ground, in the midst of a circle of men both wise and reverend of aspect, they found the child, his great eyes shining with solemn joy.

When they were come out of the temple his mother chided him, albeit in all tenderness, saying, "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing."

And he made answer, "How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house?"

"But they understood not the saying which he spake unto them. And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth and was subject unto them. But his mother kept all these sayings in her heart."

HOW THE PEOPLE WERE FED.

Reports from Missionary Distributors in India of the Relief Administered through the Generosity of American Christians.

OUR readers will be glad to see on this page the portrait of the eminent Baptist Missionary of Kanigiri in the Nellore District of India, from whose eloquent letter we gave extracts two weeks ago. Mr. Brock is one of those noble Christian workers who bear the burdens of the people around them "and so fulfil the law of Christ." The suffering of the people, as he wrote us, was terrible to witness, and it was a great relief to him when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent him a remittance from the funds so generously supplied by its readers. He set the starving people to work, and he sends a photograph, which we reproduce on this page, of the scene when he paid them their first day's wages. At that time few persons knew that he was prepared to employ the starving people, and the gathering was small. But the news quickly spread, and it was not long before great crowds came entreating to be allowed to earn a little money to keep themselves alive. Mr. Brock was at no small pains to make the money go as far as possible and reach the right kind of people. He and his helpers distributed relief in thirty-six villages, giving money or food to the aged and sick, and employing the able-bodied in digging wells and other work which would be a permanent benefit to the communities.

Mr. Brock went to India, from Canada, about six years ago, under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Union. He was assigned to a field covering over a thousand square miles, with a population of 140,000. He is assisted in his work by twenty-seven native preachers and helpers, and so had at hand a staff of ready and capable workers to aid him in his famine-relief measures.

A recent letter from Rev. E. Bullard, of Kavali, another Baptist Missionary in the the Nellore District, contains expressions of gratitude for funds received indirectly from this journal. It appears that Mr. Manley and Dr. Boggs, who are laboring in that part of India, knowing that Mr. Bullard was in need of help, spared a portion of the funds sent to them by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and sent him the money, that he, too, might have the joy of participating in the Christ-like work of feeding the hungry. With the money thus received Mr. Bullard fed two hundred of the worst cases, during the most trying period of the famine, choosing the aged, the children, the sick, and infirm, as the recipients of the fund. "We have hoped," Mr. Bullard writes, "that the month of November would bring some rain, and so give an opportunity for getting in the seed, but November is past and no rain to speak of has fallen. I was in the country during the great famine of 1877, and not even then were the indications of severe suffering and destitution so unmistakable as at the present tme. Thousands around me are suffering sorely, and will need to be helped for a year or more. If you can send me more money it will be most gratefully received. I will take care that it is wisely distributed to the most needy and deserving persons." Evidently from this letter, and from others received, the famine which is relieved in other parts of India is still pressing in the Nellore District.

Rev. T. S. Johnson, of Jabulpur, who has been indefatigable in the work of famine relief during the whole period of the suffering, and has labored almost night and day in the work of distributing the funds and grain which our readers enabled us to send to him, sends the welcome news, under date of December 1, that the famine was sensibly abating and the prospects in his neighborhood were brightening. His chief concern now is the support of the famine orphans whom he received at the Mission during the terrible months of hunger and death. Mr. Johnson says that he finds he can support, feed and educate an orphan for fifteen dollars a year in that part of India, and he begs us to suggest to our readers the plan of providing for one or more by individuals, so that he may not be compelled to turn the poor little rescued children out to beg or starve.

Dr. Johnson incloses in his letter the following extract from the report of the local famine relief committee describing the method adopted in the distribution of its share of the American grain from the cargo of The City of Everett:

"The distribution was effected in every case under the control of a famine relief officer, and I [J. B. Fuller, Commissioner of Jubulpur division], can testify to the work having been well carried out. The general plan adopted was, first, to choose a village where the inhabitants were aborigines, or were known to be specially poor. The Mansion house relief list of the village was scrutinized, and the poorer tenants selected. A signed ticket was then given to the tenant for twenty or thirty seers, or as the case might be, and he was told to go to the central store, where the grain was kept, present his ticket and receive his dole. Tickets of different colors were issued for different quantities of grain, so that the illiterate people might know the value of their tickets and get supplied with the right amount.

"This was the usual procedure, though local officers occasionally departed from it according to local circumstances. The cultivators were ready to walk long distances to the central store to get their supply, and as in the rains almost the only means of transport in this district is by coolies, the cultivators did the carrying themselves, and thus saved cost."

Another Famine Relief Officer, Mr. Sharp, of the Ramnagar Circle in the Mandla District, whose report Dr. Johnson encloses, writes: "When I left Mandla, the grain was going off fast at that centre; at Ramnagar the stock was soon exhausted, and bearers of cheques had to wait till fresh boat-loads came up the Nerbudda; at Bichhia I disposed of almost the whole stock in two days, and have sent for more. The people hail the grain with delight, and are astounded at the sizes of the maize and beans. The poorer sort of cultivators, to whom it has been given, are determined to reserve a little for sowing, as they wish to see if such fine grain can be produced here. Nor was the grain circulated merely among villages near the centres. I have sent 'hack tenants' laden with it to Cholu Aturia Ranjhipuri, the very limits of the Circle. One of the most experienced of my Relief Officers, has told me that the people were keener about the distribution of the grain than about any other kind of relief. It was the form of charity which appealed to them most, and I can testify from my own experience to the gratitude with which it was received."

Another officer says: "One truck was made over to the Church Missionary Society at Kutni for distribution amongst the poor cultivators. The Mansion House Fund had not been sufficient to adequately supply them with food grain during the rains, when they were ploughing their fields and the distribution of the American grain was therefore very timely."

REV. G. H. BROCK'S FIRST DISTRIBUTION OF MONEY FROM THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Supplies for Klondike Miners.

MANY stories have been circulated about short winter routes to the Klondike. The most likely one seems to be that recently followed by Messrs. George W. Otterson, Frank Bailee and R. H. Fitzhugh, who have come through by Teslin Lake, Telegraph Creek and Spicken River. From a point above Wrangell the river is frozen smooth and solid, assuring excellent sledding as far as Telegraph Creek. From this point there is a good trail to Lake Teslin, and on to Klondike the sledding is perfect. By this route, it is said, one can reach Klondike in twenty days. In some places the ice is smooth enough for skating. Along this route there are excellent facilities for camping and an abundance of firewood. It is quite probable that the provisions to be sent by the United States Government for the relief of the miners, may go over this route. Capt. Brainard, who is making arrangements to sent the relief to the Klondike, thinks it best not to send canned and concentrated foods. In a telegram to Secretary Alger, he says the nutritive quality of these foods is to some extent exaggerated, and that such foods as flour, peas, beans, coffee, tea, chocolate, sugar, and a little butter and condensed milk would be much more satisfactory. These articles, with the exception of the last two, require no extra packing, and consequently would be much lighter and more easily handled than the others, which are packed in tins and cases.

William A. Kjillman, Assistant Superintendent of the Government reindeer, has notified the War Department that he has secured in Norway all the reindeer necessary for the expedition. Lieut. Devore and Dr. Sheldon Jackson, are now on their way to Norway with the necessary funds to pay for the deer.

Preaching to the Life-Savers.

As the storms and gales of winter increase in severity, the work of the Life-Savers' Mission conducted by Rev. J. Ashley Cake, along the coast from Sandy Hook to Cape May, becomes more and more arduous and perilous. For ten months of the year, the men employed on these stations are deprived of all church privileges, and were it not for the unselfish labors of this missionary who carries the gospel up and down among them freely and faithfully, they would be almost as great strangers to its blessed teachings as are the heathens themselves.

Rev. Mr. Cake has encountered much official opposition in the work at different times, but the feeling among the men at the stations is one of great anxiety that the work should be continued. Appeals have been received from the stations at Bridgewater, Cape May, Absecom, Beach Haven, Egg Harbor, Little Egg Harbor, and other places, asking that the restrictions should be removed and the the free preaching of the Gospel allowed. A number of the lighthouse-keepers have petitioned Congress to the same effect.

A Church of Sealskin.

THE ingenuity missionaries sometimes have to use to make the most of the materials within their reach, is illustrated by an interesting incident mentioned in the latest report of the Church Missionary Society. It appears that news has now come from Messrs. Peck and Parker, two missionaries who were sent two years ago to the bleak and inhospitable shores of Baffin's Bay to work among the Esquimaux at Blacklead Island, which is above the sixty-fifth degree of north latitude.

Though it was in the month of August, the "pack" of ice, which is said to have been a hundred miles in extent, detained the little brig from reaching Blacklead Island for several days. A house eighteen feet by twelve was built, and made a fit dwelling for an arctic winter. The confidence of the Esquimaux was gained, and the children came gladly for instruction. It was not long before there were thirty who could read and who had a fair knowledge of Scripture history. The message of the Gospel evidently met the needs of these people who lead lives of such utter blankness. One woman said, "Yes, let us hear something better, something more satisfying than we have hitherto heard."

The need of a place of worship was soon felt, and inasmuch as there were no trees there or other vegetation, a house was constructed with supports of whalebone and covered with dried sealskins, forty of which were sewed together and stretched on the frame. Old provision-boxes and some boards were used for seats, and two lamps were hung from the roof. This tabernacle had a singular ending, for it was eaten up by dogs. A storm, accompanied by fifty degrees of frost, prevented the catch of seals, and the Esquimaux had not food enough for themselves, much less for their dogs. These dogs broke through the snow walls one day and got hold of the sealskin tabernacle and ravenously devoured it. Afterward, as there was nothing else to assemble in, a circular wall of snow about six feet high was built to keep out the piercing winds. The seats were made of square blocks of snow placed close to the wall. Mr. Peck writes: "Our service consisted of hymns, prayer, and then I told them some simple Scripture truths. What a strange sight these walls of snow with nothing above us in that upward direction but the blue heavens! Surely the angels of God might look down on such a gathering with wonder and joy!"

How Lincoln was Awakened.

Discussing the processes by which saving faith operates in the heart of man, W. B. Parker, relates this instructive incident in Lincoln's career:

In his pioneer days he was a sceptic. Both Lamon and Henderson say that up to the time Lincoln went to Washington as President he was not a professing believer in any Christian faith. But during the days of the war, when Lincoln bore tremendous burdens of action and anxiety, embodying and enforcing the will of the nation, he became thoroughly religious. It was told that in 1864, when the tension was at its highest, and Lincoln's life was like the action of the heart of the whole people, in that time the President was found more than once on his knees at prayer. Lincoln's faith did not come to him by reasoning, but in the stress and strain of life. He laid hold upon certain great truths with the grip of a hungering and thirsting nature. It is in this way, I believe, that the strongest faith is attained. With his whole nature stretched to its highest tension, no man can avoid conviction. So long as he merely rests, remains inactive, passive, he may get along without faith; but when his soul is awakened and his feeling is aroused, believe he must.

Loaded with 2,000 Pretty Gifts

The Christmas Tree of the Bowery Mission Bore a Goodly Harvest of Gay Fruit—Mrs. Bird's Grateful Letter.

MANY readers of this journal, who have been actively interested in the Christian work among the New York East Side waifs will read this grateful letter from Mrs. Sarah J. Bird with a kindly interest:

"Christmas has come and gone, but the memory of our Christmas tree in the Bowery Mission will linger long. After hours of happy work by the boys of the Mission, there stood the tree, heavily laden with hoods, mittens, toys of all kinds for boys and girls, and by its side were great heaps of all manner of warm clothing, hats, caps, coats, etc. These gifts represented the loving hearts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, living in almost every State of the Union. The contents of these kind letters have come, not only as a blessing to the children, but as an inspiration to the workers, who are sometimes overwhelmed and almost discouraged by constant contact with sin and misery. The news of a wonderful Christmas tree in the Bowery Mission soon spread all over the East Side, and long before the appointed hour the street in front of the Mission was densely crowded with a mass of shivering, half-clad little waifs, and for once this army of children had not only taken full possession of every available spot in the Mission, but their numbers in the street actually obstructed and controlled all travel on the big Bowery. Even the motorman had to bring his car to a halt and await the movement of these little ones—the least of all God's children.

DISTRIBUTING GIFTS FROM THE BIG CHRISTMAS TREE AT THE BOWERY MISSION.

"Each had brought his brothers and sisters, and every mother had two or three extra babies for the occasion, so your readers may readily imagine the stampede for the presents. We succeeded in seating about five hundred children in the mission, and the police reported one thousand more outside, all begging for admittance. Most of the benches were filled with two rows of heads, the older holding the younger in their laps. We could not but admire the persistency with which they plead for everything before them. Often one would say, 'My mother don't have any hood;' 'Jack hasn't got no mittens,' and 'My baby sister didn't get no doll.' Even the smallest tots were so worldly wise that they expected to carry off a supply not only for themselves, but for the whole family. One little girl was crying bitterly because she had lost her pillowcase which she had brought, to take home to her mother all she could gather up. But we were not at all alarmed, for Dr. Klopsch had sent us word days before to 'go ahead' and give the children a grand good time, and we did go ahead, and had expended about two thousand gifts for distribution. I do wish I could write a personal letter to each of the generous givers to this Christmas tree.

"Although not prearranged by the workers, there was no mention of a Santa Claus, but all were made to realize that it was the Christ-love which had brought all our gifts, and which was also with us in our happy time." SARAH J. BIRD.

Once Sweeper, now Evangelist.

How "Wops the Waif" Became an Instrument to Bring Souls to Christ.

FACT has its romances more wonderful in their varied and dramatic changes than any that are found in the realm of fiction. Fifty years ago, a child lived in a wretched home in the poorest neighborhood of East London. As he grew to boyhood, he received no education and was a waif of the streets. He swept a crossing, and nobody who looked at the little, stunted child, puny and sickly, could ever imagine that the future held anything unusual in reserve for him. By and by the boy enlisted in the navy, and went through some stirring scenes and adventures on land and sea. Three times he deserted, only to be brought back and punished. He spent three years on the slave coast of Africa amid scenes of cruelty and blood, aiding in the efforts to suppress slavery. Many were his adventures among Burmese idol-temples, Chinese joss-houses, and the sights and sounds of Eastern life. He spent years in the Australian bush and working as a laborer on the railway cuttings. At last he was converted, and from that day the sailor became a "fisher of men." God ordained him to preach the Gospel everywhere. The boy who was known as "Wops the Waif"—the street crossing sweeper, the rough-and-ready drinking and swearing sailor is now known and loved by thousands in England. He is the eminent Christian author and evangelist Sydney Watson. Multitudes have been converted through his writings.

FELLOW-WORKERS.

At one of the towns Christ visited during his ministry, an extraordinary thing happened. Wheresoever he had been previously, sick people had been cured, lame people made to walk, and the blind received their sight; but when he went to "his own country," presumably Nazareth, Mark says, "he could there do no mighty work," and Matthew tells us the reason, "because of their unbelief." So it came about that even Jesus, in whom dwelt the fulness of the Godhead bodily, was incapacitated by the attitude of the people. His powers of beneficence, infinite as they were, were paralyzed by the conditions in which he found himself. So it is to-day. God will not force his blessings upon us. He expects that we shall do our part, infinitesimal though it may be. There is no limit to his power, nor any limit to what he can do in us and for us, but there must be a contribution of our own to the work. As a father says to his son: "I will give you the best education possible; I will send you to the best school and college; I will provide you with the best facilities; nothing that can help you, shall be denied you. Whatever you need in reason shall be furnished. You may be a great man." But all this will count for nothing if the boy makes no effort of his own. He must work with his teacher, otherwise their labor will be useless. So it is with the child of God. There is no limit to his attainment, if he co-operates with the divine power that is given him. He knows what God desires him to be; he sees in Christ the example he is to follow; he is assured that all the grace he may need will be supplied; but he must use the strength he has, and must honestly and sincerely seek the end to be attained. The same principle applies in Christian work for others. God blesses the humble effort put forth, but he expects that the effort shall be made. Thus in the rendering of the Revised Version: "We are God's fellow-workers: ye are God's husbandry, God's building."

MUSIC IN THE CHURCH.

The Story of a Pastor's Experience.

BY THE REV. BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT.

THE pastor of Croydon Church was a believer in the "true." With his whole soul he loved the "good." But he had also a passion for the "beautiful." He cared so much for the proprieties in religious worship that he was depressed by irreverence—or even carelessness in any part of the church service. He prepared conscientiously and thoroughly for the public prayer. He did this by much private prayer, by the devout study of the devotional parts of the Holy Scriptures, by the reading and memorizing of the collects, and other classic prayers of the churches, and especially by thinking much over the spiritual condition of individuals in his congregation, whose devotional temper, and spiritual experience he was anxious to promote and improve. He always studied the hymns to be used in the public service until he understood them and felt their power, and then he read them aloud over and over again in his study, and to his wife until he was able to read them in the spirit of worship, and in a way to impress the congregation with their strength and beauty. Thus the "service" in Arthur Manning's church, from the reverent stillness at the beginning to the "Amen" at the close, became a work of art, of high and holy art, in which the sermon fitted as part of a beautiful offering in God's temple, to the God whose worship should be "the beauty of holiness" and with the "holiness of beauty."

BISHOP J. H. VINCENT.

To his refined nature, the music of the Croydon choir on the Sunday of his first service was a sore affliction. The mechanical manipulation of the organ in the voluntary, the low whisperings of the choir even during the prayer, the superfluous instrumental prelude—a tiresome rendition of the air to be sung ("Azmon," or "Duke Street," or "Baldwin,") and the useless interludes, "to rest the choir," as the leader said—interludes as weak as they were irritating—and these things grieved the soul of the pastor. And the singing itself—alas! Art without art and without a throb of heart. The "anthem" was weak, the "solo" a travesty. "There must be a change," he said to himself with emphasis. And there was.

The Sunday School singing in the afternoon was still more distressing; but when Manning spoke a few words to the school at the Superintendent's request, there was no reproof in them. They were words full of love, and hinted hopefully at the "pleasant times we are to have together."

At once the Reformer set about his work. But he said nothing. He thought, prayed, planned, and was silent. He foresaw something that gave him patience with the uninspired signs in his Israel, and with "the screaming mob" as his wife smilingly called the Sunday School one day speaking of its musical performances.

Arthur's first movement toward reform was in the prayer-meeting where he introduced two or three of the best and least familiar of the hymns of the church, which he so explained and illuminated as to kindle a genuine devotional feeling. Under his guidance, the people sang them with such thoughtful ardor as to surprise themselves. He incidentally talked about the Spirit in singing, and the necessity of the devotional aim in all music. Everybody spoke of "the good meeting," and of "the singing—the best we have ever had." "It was a good beginning," said his wife. "Well, we shall begin at the beginning of all good music," answered Arthur: "the keynote must be struck in the understanding and in the heart." The Croydon Church prayer-meetings soon became noted for the "hymn expositions" by the pastor, and the charm and power of the hymns he selected. And the cabinet organ helped. In the hands of the new organist, the cabinet organ (never before used in the prayer-meeting), became a power. The "new organist" was a stranger to everybody but Arthur.

One Sunday morning, Arthur preached on "Music." The text was in Nehemiah 12:46. It was a sermon full of Scripture, philosophy, history, and art. But it was charged with wisdom and spirit. To the congregation it was full of new ideas. They had never before felt the value, the presence, and practical value of musical training. They had depreciated art. The sermon showed its relation to true worship and personal character. The pastor announced that a "Class in Sacred Music" would be organized on the following Friday evening; a "hymn-exposition" would be given, and everybody was invited, even "those who take no interest in music." He also announced a course of five lectures on "Music," to be given by competent persons on five consecutive Monday evenings. The sermon and the announcements that followed made an impression that day. And it did not end that day.

Six months have passed since the first public move had been taken by Arthur Manning toward reform in the music of Croydon Church. It began in the "Hymn Expositions" in the prayer meeting: then in the advent of the new and unknown organist at prayer-meeting—a sensible, skilful, spiritually-minded teacher of music, whom Arthur had brought to Croydon. The sermon on music still further developed the new plan. Then followed the five public lectures, and the "Class in Sacred Music." What a change! The prayer-meetings have increased in attendance and enthusiasm. The choir has gradually changed in its members, its ideals, spirit, deportment, and execution. The same transformation is seen in the Sunday School. The congregation joins intelligently and heartily in the singing. Every pew is filled. The sermons are earnest and edifying. Arthur begins to realize his theory of the public service as "a work of high and holy art." The organ has been enlarged and enriched. The choir has been transferred to sittings to the right of the pulpit, and no longer forms a moving background for the pulpit and a temptation to ungoverned eyes in the congregation. The voluntaries on the organ are a part of the public service, a signal for silent and reverent attention and an illustration of the power of the best instrumental music to aid the minister The organist has found out what spiritual possibilities are hidden in his vocation. Every month an organ concert with a short lecture by the pastor tends to improve the musical taste of the congregation and attracts many outsiders to a service which is at once attractive, instructive, and full of the spirit of worship.

Art is a blessed angel in the church, when at her best, and when fully consecrated to the service of God. "You have done nobly. I am proud of you," said Arthur's wife; "It is of the Lord," he said.

TRADE MARK.

A good sleep is better than medicine any time. Nearly everyone has learned of the Ostermoor Patent Elastic Felt Mattress, which we deliver anywhere for $15, let you try it for 30 nights, and then offer to give you your money back if it does not equal in cleanliness, durability and comfort any $50 Hair Mattress you have ever tried.

We can't tell you all about it here; we can't quote the hundreds of letters from people of prominence who have used them for as long as 20 years without impairment; but we have just issued a new illustrated edition of our book, "The Test of Time," which we will mail to any one interested upon application. If you don't need a mattress this year you may next—and it's always well "to know."

Patent Elastic Felt consists of airy, interlacing, fibrous sheets of snowy whiteness and great elasticity; closed in the tick by hand, and never mats, loses shape or gets lumpy. Is perfectly dry, non-absorbent, and is guaranteed vermin proof. Tick may be removed for washing without trouble. Softer and purer than hair can be; no re-picking or re-stuffing necessary.

Wretched imitations are offered by unscrupulous dealers—please write us if you know of such cases.

ST. MARK'S RECTORY, BROOKLYN, L. I.
Messrs. OSTERMOOR & CO. June 3, 1897.
DEAR SIRS. It gives me pleasure to say that the Patent Elastic Felt Cushions furnished St. Mark's Church twenty-five years ago to-day are still in excellent condition, and have given good satisfaction.
I do not perceive that they have matted down, or failed in every respect to wear better than hair.
Very respectfully,
S. M. HASKINS, Rector.

Send for our book, "Church Cushions."

Candle-Lights.

Do you appreciate what beautiful effects can be produced at very little cost by the use of decorated Candles and Shades? We make every variety and kind. We make all colors and tints, and will make them to order to match any particular color scheme. We have just issued a beautiful illustrated booklet, telling of the various uses of Candles and Shades. Write us what color you would like, enclosing five (5) two-cent stamps, and we will send you, postage prepaid, one of our artistic candles together with a copy of the booklet.

"I Earn More Money Than My Girl Friends Who are in Business"

A young lady in Indiana, an invalid and confined to her room, writes: "No 'shut-in' need complain of being unable to earn money so long as your generous plan remains in force. It might appear as if I were working under great disadvantage, for I do all my work by correspondence, and rarely see my people personally. Yet I earn much more money than the majority of my girl friends, who are pursuing the ordinary avocations open to women."

The Ladies' Home Journal wants agents to obtain subscriptions and to look after renewals. What this girl, sick, has done, surely a healthy girl can do—and more.

celebrates the beginning of its 38th year of continuous prosperous publication by a reduction in price.

There is scarcely any other magazine now published that has had as long and as prosperous a career. It has many people on its subscription list who have been reading it for 37 years. The reduction in price made possible by the recent improvements in engraving, printing and paper-making should greatly enlarge its constituency. No other magazine gives more for the money.

It is a magazine for the whole family. It gives as much general matter as an exclusively literary magazine. It treats household topics as fully as a strictly domestic journal. It gives as much interesting matter for young people as a strictly young people's publication. It gives as much fashion news as a strictly fashion paper. It is the only magazine that gives patterns of its fashion designs for the mere cost of postage. It is beautifully printed, beautifully illustrated, and carefully edited.

NO BETTER GIFT than a year's subscription to Demorest's Magazine can be made. By subscribing AT ONCE you can get the Magazine at the reduced price, and will also receive the handsome 25c. Vapo-Cresolene

For Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Coughs and Bronchitis.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH says—
I take great pleasure in recommending your Vapo-Cresolene. I have spoken of it to a great many of my friends and to hundreds of our fellow-workers in the Salvation Army. I recommend that no family where there are young children should be without this Vaporizer. I have found it very beneficial for my little ones with Whooping Cough and Influenza. I am convinced that it can but prove an exceedingly useful assistant whatever treatment may be used in the check and cure of the trying diseases for which it has been specially recommended.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

The Question of Mourning—Innnocent Pleasures—Showing One's Colors.

YOUR question, dear Eleanor V., about the wearing of mourning, opens up a large field for discussion. As you very justly observe, a person is no longer singular who does not go into mourning, as more and more the tendency is to act with independence in a matter of this kind. Also, you are right in speaking of the conventional mourning dress as very costly and not nice unless the material is good, besides which, crepe and similar trimmings are perishable and need to be renewed often and carefully preserved from the weather, or they soon become rusty. But, in your own neighborhood, people may think it odd, if you continue to wear colors after a death in your family, and you do not like to be talked about. Certainly, you do not. Nobody does. Yet, we cannot always be guided by the opinion of our acquaintances. Sometimes one must be a leader, and have the courage to take a first step toward a new departure.

This is the way it looks to me. Mourning dress is a sort of protection, and has the advantage of putting a defensive armor around a desolate and wounded life. People forget that you have lost one dear to you, for this is a busy world, or people have not heard of your sorrow, and they come up to you in a gay mood and ask questions which are jarring and hard to bear. If you have adopted a black dress, they see at once that you are grieving for child, or parent, or husband, and they respect the grief and are sympathetic.

On the other hand, when finances must be considered, as is often the case, and there is already a good and comfortable wardrobe which it is very inconvenient to lay altogether aside, it seems foolish, merely for fashion's sake, to buy new and sad-looking clothes, for the reason that others do so.

Often the dear one who has gone disliked a mourning dress, and would have preferred your continuance of the cheerful garb he loved. When you remember that there is gloom enough in the world as it is, and that your sombre black adds to your own sadness, it is well to ask yourself: where is the good end to be served by my adopting it? Not long ago I met a beautiful woman, recently widowed. She was in the house, and she wore a purple gown. "My children so hate my dismal black dresses," she said, "that I do not wear them when they are awake." Another lady told me that for four years after her husband's death, she swathed herself in a veil and wore solemn, lustreless black all the time, till one day her little boy said to her, "Mamma, are you never going to have any pretty dresses because papa is in heaven?"

One thing I must protest against, and that is the wearing of a thick black veil over the face. It is exceedingly perilous, both to eyesight and to health in general, and it does only harm to the wearer and her friends.

Why not, if you can, adopt a middle course? Lay aside your bright hues, your ribbons and furbelows, and for awhile dress very plainly in grave colors, sober grays and blacks. While not putting on crape. Should you wear mourning, remember that jet and other trimming of that kind are inappropriate with the dress. Mourning should be severely plain.

If we have the feeling that our dear dead have simply gone before us a little space over to the Father's house, our grief will be restrained, and we will hopefully say to ourselves,

> There is a land of pure delight
> Where saints immortal reign.

In that bright land, beyond death's river, all who are our blessed Lord shall at the gathered home, where the sun is white and there is fullness of joy at the source of everlasting life.

* * *

MRS. W. L. I. Do not set out on your Christian career by thinking of innocent pleasures as wrong. A party of friends gathered for an evening's recreation may be as truly consecrated as if they were assembled in a prayer-meeting. Holiness, you know, was written even on the pots of the Lord's house. One way in which a young girl may serve the Master is by being daily sweet, patient and considerate, loving and gentle in her domestic life at home.

Then she should be on the watch for opportunities of service. She should show plainly that she is on the side of purity and temperance. A girl may show her colors without saying a single word. A look is enough to rebuke profanity and to frown upon sin. From the presence of a young girl who is following her Saviour, evil and license will retire abashed, if her piety is fearless and genuine. One such girl in a village or set of young people will raise the social tone of the whole place.

One who is timid about taking part in a Christian Endeavor or other religious meeting will gain confidence by ceasing to think about herself and the impression she is probably making. Self-consciousness is at the root of most of our awkwardness and diffidence, in meetings and everywhere else.

TO CURE NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA.

To Gain Flesh, to Sleep Well, to Know What Appetite and Good Digestion Mean, Make a Test of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Interesting Experience of an Indianapolis Gentleman.

No trouble is more common or more misunderstood than nervous dyspepsia. People having it think that their nerves are to blame and are surprised that they are not cured by nerve medicine and spring remedies; the real seat of the mischief is lost sight of; the stomach is the organ to be looked after.

Nervous dyspeptics often do not have any pain whatever in the stomach, nor perhaps any of the usual symptoms of stomach weakness. Nervous dyspepsia shows itself not in the stomach so much as in nearly every other organ; in some cases the heart palpitates and is irregular; in others the kidneys are affected; in others the bowels are constipated with headches; still others are troubled with loss of flesh and appetite, with accumulation of gas, sour risings and heartburn.

Mr. A. W. Sharper of No. 61 Prospect St., Indianapolis, Ind., writes as follows: "A motive of pure gratitude prompts me to write these few lines regarding the new and valuable medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I have been a sufferer from nervous dyspepsia for the last four years; have used various patent medicines and other remedies without any favorable result. They sometimes gave temporary relief until the effects of the medicine wore off. I attributed this to my sedentary habits, being a bookkeeper with little physical exercise, but I am glad to state that the tablets have overcome all these obstacles, for I have gained in flesh, sleep better and am better in every way. The above is written not for notoriety, but is based on actual fact." Respectfully yours,

A. W. SHARPER.
61 Prospect St., Indianapolis, Ind.

It is safe to say that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure any stomach weakness or disease except cancer of the stomach. They cure sour stomach, gas, loss of flesh and appetite, sleeplessness, palpitation, heartburn, constipation and headache.

"I was cured of la grippe by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—C. S. THOMPSON, Publisher of The Signal, West Farmingtou, Ohio.

The best remedy for La Grippe.

"The best remedy for la grippe that I know of is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—(Rev.) JOHN K. CHASE, So. Hamptou, N. H.

It heals the Lungs.

"A severe attack of pneumouia left me in a weakeued condition with a severe cough, which settled on my lungs. This cough kept me dowu and would uot yield to any of the remedies that I used. My physician thought I would never recover, as I could get no rest. I finally concluded to try Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and soon after beginning its use I begau to improve and after I had used three bottles I was pronounced well by my physician."—T. P. RYAN, Tuscaloosa, Ala.

It cures Whooping Cough.

"I feel sure that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my little girls' lives when they had whoopiug cough."—Mrs. A. H. BEERS, Barnes, N. Y.

Unequalled for the cure of Asthma and Bronchitis.

"I have sold Ayer's medicines for forty-five years. I kuow of no preparation that equals Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for the cure of bronchitis. It never fails to give prompt relief."—C. L. SHERWOOD, Druggist, Dowagiac, Mich.

OUR PARACLETE.

O THOU living Word of God,
Who the universe hast made,
On whose tender, bleeding heart
All our load of sin is laid,
Be our Paraclete and share
Our distresses and our care.

Great and glorious thou art,
All thy perfect works proclaim,
Robed with uncreated light,
Angels venerate his name.
We, the Lamb's adoring bride,
Magnify him, glorified.

O, the wonders thou hast wrought
For a dead, apostate race;
We look toward our home sublime
And behold thy kindly face;
Lord, in mercy hear our cry—
Heed and save us, or we die!

Thou alone the Word of Life
Hast to mortal minds revealed;
Hope springs forth with heavenward bound,
Sin's disease may now be healed.
Quicken thou the feet that plod—
Fill us with the peace of God.

Holy Spirit, Paraclete,
Grant us fellowship with Thee;
May communion pure and sweet
In Thy church forever be.
At God's throne and mercy-seat
Plead for us, O Paraclete!

A Young Exile from Oorfa.

SOME time ago, a bright-faced, intelligent Armenian boy arrived in New York from Oorfa, (the ancient Edessa), a city which has become famous as the scene of the most dreadful massacre of modern times. Alexander Tatiassian is now in his seventeenth year. He was in Oorfa at the time of the massacre when 3,500 helpless Armenian Christians were tortured and burned alive in the great Armenian church, where they had sought shelter from the fanatical Moslem mobs. Alexander, who has six brothers and two sisters, was then one of the students of Miss Corinna Shattuck of the American Mission. During those dark days of slaughter, an old Armenian woman took Alexander and four of his brothers, his two sisters and their mother, and hid them for two days in a cave underground. The place had only one small opening. His other brothers, and his father meanwhile found other refuge; where they were hidden they had the opportunity to observe how the government gave to the mob the command to massacre, and how the soldiers were waiting anxiously the signal to start the slaughter at the sunrising and were directed to stop at the sunsetting. After the massacre, the Turks were surprised to find that the Tatiassian family had escaped the general slaughter. They threatened to kill them secretly. Alexander and his elder brother, Houhanness, left their home, and after many adventures succeeded in reaching the United States in safety.

ALEXANDER TATIASSIAN.

Alexander, who is very active and intelligent, is rapidly acquiring the English language. He is at the present time employed in the delivery department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He declares that the people of Oorfa know and love THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whose readers have done so much for the helpless orphans there.

India's Deadly Climate.

In an article in The Cosmopolitan, Julian Hawthorne has this to say of the climate of India:

It is not a white man's country; its atmosphere breeds a subtle despair: at lying down you are exhausted, and at rising you are not refreshed. Health, after the first year or two, is insecure at best; but without strict observance of hygienic laws it is impossible. You must go up to the mountains or back to Europe every little while, or you die. White children cannot be raised in India. Indian civil servants who have served their time there go home on a pension and survive, on the average, but two or three years, though the age of superannuation is but fifty-five. American missionaries, for whatever reason, last out better than all but a small fraction of the alien inhabitants. But I asked one who had dwelt over thirty years, in Jhansi whether any human consideration, except the service of God, would induce him to live a day in India; and he replied emphatically, "No!"

LOVE OF STIMULANTS.

"Physicians look upon tea and coffee as a habit," said Dr. Jacques Loeb, in a recent interview on tea and coffee drinking, "and they regard the taste for black coffee as an indication of a love of some kind of stimulant, and the black coffee drinkers recognize in the beverage, stimulating qualities over and above diluted coffee or tea. And further that the black coffee drinker is a drunkard, just as much as the man who drinks whisky. He becomes, in time, just as much a slave to the practice."

Tea and coffee drinking is a vice that seems to have fastened itself on the American people and is turning out a great army of dyspeptics every year. People who are suffering from headaches, nervousness and dyspepsia, find profound relief in ten days or two weeks after they leave off tea and coffee and use Postum Cereal Food Coffee. This health beverage is made of nature's grains and is the food coffee having the indorsement of the medical profession, Ralston Health Clubs, Hygienic, and other teachers and food experts. Grocers sell it. A 25c package makes 100 cups of the rich beverage.

When boiled full 15 minutes after boiling commences, it tastes like the better grades of Java.

If your constitution has at last broken down under the strain of the poisonous alkaloids in coffee, use Postum Cereal and see the beneficial results.

Substitutors drug their concoctions to give them a coffee flavor. Genuine packages of Postum have red seals and the words, "It makes red blood," thereon.

Good News for Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Asthma, as claimed at the time. We have the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery, Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, writes that he could not lie down night or day from Asthma, and the Kola Plant cured him at once. Rev. G. Ellsworth Stump, pastor of the Congregational Church at Newell, Iowa, was cured by it of Asthma of twenty years' standing, and many others give similar testimony. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1164 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. In return they only ask that you tell your neighbors of it when cured yourself. This is very fair, and we advise all sufferers from Asthma to send for the Case, It costs you nothing.

A Missionary's Hired Help.

Agnes McAllister, an American missionary, at Cape Palmas, Liberia, West Africa, in a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, gives this amusing experience with hired native help on the mission farm:

During the war in Garraway, on the West Coast of Africa, our people were very hungry, and often came to work on our farm, and were glad to get some sweet potatoes for pay. Early one morning a man came and said:

"Teacher, I done come for tell you some palaver. No chop, no live for my hand; you no fit to give me some work? I want some potato for chop him" (chop means victuals to eat).

"Yes, you can go and make some potato rows, and I will pay you potatoes." So he went to work.

Soon ten young men from a neigboring tribe came, and they, too, wanted to work for "chop." So they commenced work in another part of the farm. Another hnngry man soon appeared; he was not so heathenish as the rest, for he wore a pair of while linen trousers—the first I had seen in the tribe. He went to join the rest in the effort to get something to eat. For a time all was quiet, and they worked hard hoeing up the ground. The first man to go to work thought he ought to be the first to stop and get his pay. So he came up, saying:

"Mammy, I done finish them potato. I want to go home; give me my chop."

I measured out the potatoes and gave them to him. He wanted to carry them in the tin pail, but I said: "No; I cannot let you take the pail; you will not bring it back."

"Yes, I fit to. What make you say you no fit to lock them bucket if I take him? I no be teef man."

"Oh, well," said I, "we need the pail, and you cannot have it. You must find something else."

So, taking off his old felt hat that he wore, he put it on his arm and emptied the potatoes into it and started off.

The ten other young men next came along, and were ready to go. They were in the same trouble as the man who had just preceded them, and wanted something to carry their potatoes in. I assured them I did not have anything to give them, and I did not believe in lending. Only one of their number could understand or speak any English, so our conversation was very limited, and they began to talk among themselves. They all seemed to be scolding one of their number, and I stopped them and asked what was the matter. Their spokesman replied:

"Them boy, him one got shirt; we all got no shirt. We say, 'boy, give shirt for put potato inside.' Them boy say he no fit, so all boy make palaver."

At last the boy, to get peace, pulled off the garment, tied up the sleeves and neck and it was filled with potatoes, and all went on their way satisfied.

Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, as he says himself he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to woman hood. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 41½ Fourth Avenue, New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

Dreaded Rheumatism.

Costs Nothing to Try this Remedy That Cures All Cases and Stages of Rheumatism.

A Trial Package Mailed Free to All.

Those who have suffered, year in and out with rheumatism, will be glad to know of a remedy that has been proven an absolute specific. There are no conditions of rheumatism no matter how severe nor from what cause that cannot be immediately relieved and permanently cured by Gloria Tonic. People who have tried a hundred remedies, liniments and doctors are apt to be resigned to their fate. They come to believe that there is no such thing as a cure for rheumatism. They have been disappointed so many times that another trial seems almost useless. This is the class of rheumatics that the makers of Gloria Tonic wants to reach. He will show such evidence and give such a wealth of testimony from well-known people as cannot fail to convince.

A recent letter from a lady who suffered for 12 years is but an incident in the wonderful results that have followed the use of Gloria Tonic: "Mr. J. A. Smith: I should have written you long ago, which would have been my duty, to offer you my thanks for your wonderful medicine which thoroughly cured my rheumatism. I wish I could tell the whole world of the wonderful curative power of Gloria Tonic. I have suffered very severely and all the remedies used for it proved worthless except Gloria Tonic. I am 66 years old and thank God and you that I am well again. Respectfully, Friederike Arnold, Indian Ford, Wis." Don't be skeptical about this remedy. Remember it costs you nothing to try it, and it is good evidence that Mr. Smith would not go to the expense of sending trial packages free unless there was real merit in the remedy. Mr. Smith's address in full is John A. Smith, 152 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE SUPREME MOTIVE.

An interesting study would be the paradoxes of Christianity, of which one is given in the passage associated with the Topic. Paul gloried in the liberty of the Christian, and was never tired of insisting on his freedom from law; yet here he writes of constraint. The two principles are not antagonistic. The constraint of love is compatible with perfect liberty. Indeed, it pre-supposes liberty. Yet how powerful it is! The attention a mother will give to her sick babe, the services a husband will render to his beloved wife, are greater than any that a law could compel. Neither honor, nor ambition, nor fear, nor avarice could stir a man to such exertions, or self-sacrifice, as love will induce. It is this motive that Paul would instil as the spring of holiness and service. His own career was an example of its potency. Persecuted, driven from city to city, imprisoned, beaten, and in constant danger of a violent death, he persisted in preaching and promulgating the Gospel. We look in vain for any adequate motive for such self-sacrifice, and for that of thousands of missionaries and Christian ministers since his day, until we find it in this statement, which appears in other forms in all his writings: "The love of Christ constraineth." Whether it is Christ's love manifested in his own self-sacrifice or the love of the Christian for his Lord, the inspiration of it is sufficient. No labor is too arduous, no possession is too precious, to be laid on the altar when love fills the heart. He who really loves cannot grieve the object of his love, and he who has been loved with a love that cost a life, is under bonds that can never be irksome and will never be broken.

A Missionary's Christmas Tree.

Miss Annie R. Taylor, the heroic missionary, who, at the risk of her life, has carried the Gospel to the population of Tibet—the "sealed land" of the East—gives the most interesting description of Christmas-Day doings at Guatong, in that country:

On Christmas Day we had over 200 Tibetans and Chinese to tea. No sooner were our guests seated on the floor of a shed lent us for the occasion, and I was standing up to give thanks, than the floor gave way, and we went down about three feet. Praise the Lord, no one was hurt, and only a few frightened. Then part of our guests had tea in another shed, and part in the open air—which we did not find too cold, as we were used to the frost. After tea the Christmas tree was lighted, and owing to the kindness of friends in England we were able to give gifts to all who came. Some warm woollen cuffs were much appreciated, but the dolls were the most sought after. All wanted them—the chiefs and men and boys as well as the women and girls. We gave one each to the chiefs present, and it was most amusing to see them nursing their coveted gift as they took possession of it. Only having a few dolls, it was difficult to decide who were to get them. After the tree we had the lantern: one of the Lamas present, who stood just behind me as I showed it, was much interested in the picture of "Christ on the Cross," and asked me if He were not a great sinner, and listened with wonder as I told them that Jesus, God's Son, who had no sin, took the sinner's place, and bore the punishment due to our sins. In conclusion, we sang "Jesus Loves Me" in Tibetan, which we had printed on a slide. We rejoiced that some of the Tibetans should have a gift on the anniversary of the birth of our Lord; but, oh! how we long for them to know Jesus as their Saviour, and thus to receive the gift of eternal life.

One Hundred Miles an Hour.

A few days ago eight cars, some of them loaded with ore, started from Breckenridge and ran about eleven miles to Dickey. Here the switch was turned so that the cars would have gone toward Leadville, but they were going too fast to make any curve, and they left the track and almost demolished the depot building. The end of one of the cars was found in the agent's bed. Five of the cars were broken so fine they were burned so as to get the old iron. The rate of speed on the last mile was about one hundred miles an hour. There are some men who want to sow wild oats, they want to have "a good time" while they live, and the 100-mile-an-hour speed causes something to be injured. Always be careful about the curve at the end of the down grade.

A Thrilling Rescue.

A YOUNG LIFE SAVED IN A REMARKABLE MANNER.

Florence Sturdivant, of Grindstone Island, Saved from an Untimely Death---Her Dangerous Predicament.

From "On The St. Lawrence," Clayton, N. Y.

Among the Thousand Islands is one called Grindstone. It is seven miles long and three wide. The inhabitants of this island are a well-informed class of people who devote their energies to farming and quarrying for a livelihood. In the home of one of these islanders resides Florence J. Sturdivant, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Sturdivant. She had a ramarkable experieuce recently.

In an interview with a reporter Mr. Sturdivant said: "Florence was taken sick in February, 1896, with scarlet fever and we immediately called a physician. After two weeks the fever subsided but Florence was left with a very weak back. Severe pains were constantly in the back and stomach. The difficulty seemed to baffle the efforts of the physician.

"Finally at the end of four months of treatment, we found our patient completely prostrated. At this time we called an eminent physician, who agreed with the diagnosis of our physician. He prescribed a course of treatment and we followed it faithfully for three months, but instead of improving, Florence failed.

"A brother of my wife, who resided in Canada, but was visiting us, advised us to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I purchased a box of the pills and began to give them to Florence. This was in October, 1890. After using the pills a short time we could see an improvement. Her strength began to return and her appetite was restored. When she had taken one box the pains in her back and stomach ceased and her recovery seemed certain.

"We eagerly purchased a second box of pills and watched with delight the change for the better that was being wrought daily. Florence finally became strong enough to walk a little. She gained in flesh and strength rapidly. By the time she had used three boxes of the pills she was evidently well. We continued the treatment using another box, the fourth, to prevent the possibility of a recurrence of the difficulty.

"We cannot praise too highly the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I am positive that without their use our child would have been a confirmed invalid."

(Signed) WILLIAM H. STURDIVANT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this sixth day of April, 1897.

Dr. Hunter's Book on the Lungs.

Progress of Medical Science.

A LITTLE book, published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Lung Diseases. Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption are fully explained, their differences shown, and their cure by medicated air inhalations pointed out.

Dr. Hunter is the oldest lung specialist in America, having devoted his life, since 1851, to the special study and cure of Lung Complaints. He was the first physician to proclaim the local nature of Consumption, and to prove that it, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrhal Phthisis, endanger life solely by strangling the breathing power of the Lungs.

Dr. Hunter's treatment is applied directly to the bronchial tubes and air-cells of the lungs by inhalation. He was the father and founder of this treatment, the inventor of the first inhaling instrument ever employed in medical practice, and the discoverer of the only germicidal inhalants which have proved their power to destroy the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs, and cure consumption. In addition to applying the healing and cleansing balms to the lungs three times a day by his inhaling instruments, he anoints the chest with antiseptic oils, which surround the body with a zone of medicated air, and charges the chamber in which the patient sleeps with purifying antiseptics, thus keeping up a healing action on the lungs day and night.

This is what is meant by inhalation treatment scientifically applied to the cure of weak and diseased lungs. No other treatment in the world is so direct, common-sense, and successful. It is not sold as a nostrum, but prescribed for each case according to the nature of the disease and state of the patient.

Dr. Hunter's book contains many letters from prominent people all over the country, who have been successfully treated by him, and will be sent free to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD interested for themselves or friends by addressing him, at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

OUR JANUARY CLUB

LIMITED TO 500 MEMBERS.

Each month it has been growing more and more difficult to supply members of Our History Club, owing to the fact that the publishers have objected to allowing so many sets to be distributed at our low Club price, which naturally interferes with their own subscription sale at more than double the Club figure. For January, indeed, they have actually limited our allotment to 500 sets. These will be quickly claimed, and we have, on request, specially reserved fifty sets for CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. Those who apply promptly, mentioning this paper, can therefore still secure that great encyclopedia of historic learning, the on our exceptional Club plan—at our low Club price and on our easy Club terms of payment.

Library of Universal History

WHAT THIS GREAT WORK REALLY IS. The three great epochs, Ancient History, Medieval History, and Modern History, naturally claim the principal portion of the Library, but Recent History also receives the attention its importance and interest demand, and the record of events is brought right down to the present year. The History of Civilization, and The Philosophy of History, are more fully treated than in any other work ever published in this country. The Illustrations, from the works of such great artists as Meissonier, De Neuville and Dore, are numerous and brilliant, marking the turning points of history, and The Historical Maps (there are nearly 100 of them) are more abundant and accurate than in any other work, native or foreign. In every one of these vital features which constitute a comprehensive, accurate, instructive and valuable History of the world the Library is simply incomparable. It is the Largest, Latest, Best.

TOPICS OF THE DAY. The Library presents the only authentic history of "The Armenian Massacres," "The Alaskan Boundary Dispute," "The Transvaal Affair," "The Cuban Revolution," "The Revolt in Crete," together with the late history of every important nation, all illustrated and explained with a large number of new portraits, maps and diagrams.

SEE HOW LATE IT IS. Alaska is the subject of special treatment, which includes the history of gold discoveries in the Klondike and other regions, with a new double-page map in four colors, from the latest U. S. Government and Canadian surveys and reports, showing the different routes to the gold-fields, with photographic reproductions of Alaskan scenes.

WORDS OF PRAISE FROM THOSE WHO HAVE RECEIVED THE WORK.

President E. Benjamin Andrews, of Brown University, says:
"The educational value of the 'Library of Universal History' is sure to be very great.

Rev. Francis W. Greene, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:
"The binding, paper, type and illustrations are beautiful, have never bought anything in my life that I am better pleased with, than I am with this set of books."

Ex-President Cleveland writes:
"This history will fill an important place among publications intended to give wider familiarity with historical literature."

Dr. W. T. Harris, U. S. Commissioner of Education, writes:
"I appreciate highly the importance of stimulating historical study by the distribution of such a valuable work on the subject."

Dr. S. G. A. Brown, Shippensburg, Pa., writes:
"My set arrived to-day. I am more than pleased with it; it should be in every home and public library in the land."

W. W. Lewis, Moorland, Mich., writes:
"The history arrived in good condition. I am delighted with it. I would not sell it for double the cost if I could not get another set."

Applications Should be Sent in at Once in order to secure one of these Special Sets at the low Club price.

OUR CLUB controls, for the benefit of its members exclusively, a limited number of sets of the regular subscription edition of this splendid Library, and is enabled to supply the sets (while they last) in three styles of binding at a saving of over 50 per cent. of the regular subscription price according to the style selected, besides affording easy terms of payment. Those who enjoy the historical and biographical articles in the great magazines will thoroughly appreciate the superb Library of Universal History, and no teacher, student, member of a historical club or even occasional reader should fail to investigate our Club offer. As there are only 500 sets in all and as the Club must close when these are gone, it is advisable to write at once for full particulars regarding the work and the Club plan and price. The club will also send you free an interesting set of specimen pages and illustrations, including full page portraits of Herodotus, Franklin and President McKinley and his Cabinet, smaller portraits of six great statesmen, also text-page portraits of Queen Victoria, Paul Kruger, General Weyler, Nansen the explorer with eight reproductions of famous historical scenes, a large folding map of Cuba, a new double-page map of Alaska, photographic reproductions of Alaskan scenes, and a chart of the Klondike River and its tributaries. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

MANY answers, a majority of them correct, have been received, in solution of the Scripture riddle of Mrs. Caroline A. M Binghamton, which appeared in THE MAIL-BAG in our issue of Jan. 5. The answer is: The two milch kine that brought the ark back to Israel (See 1. Sam. 6: 10-14).

Among those who have correctly solved the riddle are: Jabez Hough, Philadelphia; Mrs. Helen Mills, Newark, N. J.; H. O. Pike, Minnesota City; Ida Shomberger, Newark, N. J.; C. M. A., Albany, N. Y.; Mrs. M. T. Smith, Philadelphia; E. Matthews, Philadelphia; Mrs. I. Anderson, Brooklyn; Miss Katie Paulhamus; Wm. Gibbon, Brooklyn, N. Y.; R. P. Barber, Ogden, Ia.; Wm. Kress, New York City; Mrs. Matthew Miller, New York City; Robt. Pearson, Taketo, N. Dak.; B. S., Camden, N. J.; N. Mudge, Montreal, Can.; H. D. S., Auburn, Neb.; H. F., Austin, Minn.; Mrs. W. S. C., Castleton, Md.; J. N. R., Newton, N. H.; Viagima J. Kent, Chicago; E. M. T., Bloomfield, N. J., and many others.

Some answers have been received giving incorrect solutions of the riddle. One reader (in Albany, N. Y.) says Noah's doves are meant; another (in Michigan) says "the wise men from the East," and still another (in New Jersey) "the animals, other than human, that went into the ark."

One of the most interesting answers is given below in which the writer gives a hint of the origin of the puzzle:

"NORWICH, Jan. 6, 1898.

"In looking at my paper tonight I discovered that problem, which I have known since I was a small child, and have always had the impression that it was composed by an aunt of mine, but may be mistaken. The answer may be found in 1st Samuel, 6th Chapter, from the 10th to the 15th.

"The 'little ones' are the 'calves,' in verse 10; the 'most perfect road' is described in verse 12, and the latter half in verse 14 finishes the description. Your friend and constant reader,

"MRS. A. H. PETTIS."

Mr. J. H. S., Omaha, Neb., sends this somewhat novel version of the scriptural "milch-kine puzzle" which has attracted such widespread attention:

A pastor dining with one of his parishioners one afternoon, proposed the following conundrum, the answer to which was to be found in the Bible:

We left our little ones at home
And whither went we did not know;
We for the church's sake did roam,
And lost our lives by doing so.

We walked upon a perfect way,
With all the heathen full in view;
We lived to man and died to God
But nothing of religion knew.

The answer in verse is as follows:

The First of Samuel well rehearses
The subject matter of your verses.
In chapter sixth, and verses four,
You'll find, I think, this tale of yore.

Not always men to do his will Does God employ. He can fulfil
His purpose wise, and often brings Into his service "lower things."

Two kine unto a cart were tied:
On this was laid—'twas Israel's pride—
The Ark of God. Led by his hand,
They took the way to Israel's land.

Their little ones, though left behind,
Are ever present in the mind;
Maternal love must not prevent
The mission high on which they went

To Bethshemesh, in Israel's land,
Nearby a rock they come and stand—
"Behold the ark"—'twas lost, 'tis found!"
The words and vales the cry resound.

Drink, to show them gratitude,
Made of the kine an altar rude,
And for an offering unto God
The kine are slain, the cart the wood.

God's ways are strange. The kine fulfil
The words and purposes of His will.
They of it as one never heard,
Yet lowed and died to serve the Lord.

L. G. D., Gothenburg, Neb. What should be done with the fragments of bread left from the Lord's supper? Is there any need to burn them?

No need at all. Give them to any poor member who would appreciate them. The idea of burning them is based on the notion that they are transformed by the words of the man administering the ordinance into the veritable body of Christ. It is a foolish idea, which is a survival of Roman Catholic superstition.

Believer, Chicago, Ill. If a person who wishes to make public confession of Christ is so situated that only one Protestant church is available, and he does not believe in all its doctrines, ought he to join it?

If the church will receive him after his making a frank statement of his beliefs, we think he would do well to join it. Probably the difference is not essential, and there would be so many points in which he would agree with his fellow-members that he could work harmoniously with them and derive benefit from their fellowship.

A. B. B., La Jara, Colo., writes:

Song is a Bible command; but all cannot obey, for all cannot sing in the modern sense of singing. Whole families and those, too, who can talk well, must be excused "for want of voice." Who has not attended a prayer-meeting where "hosannas languished" for want of some one to "carry the tune?" The writer knows of a wide, destitute mis

THE CITY AND HARBOR OF VANCOUVER, B. C.

The seaport city of Vancouver is situated on Burrard Inlet and on the Canadian Pacific Railroad. It is in the centre of an agricultural, mining and lumber territory. The city really dates from 1886 when it was rebuilt after being destroyed by fire. It has some thriving manufactories, a line of mail steamers, several banks, churches, and daily newspapers, besides many other evidences of municipal progress and enterprise. Its population is about 16,000.

the lion of Mark, as an emblem of the strength and energy of his delineation; the ox of Luke, because of his dwelling on the priestly and mediatorial aspect of Christ, the ox being the emblem of sacrifice; and the eagle of John, because he soars to heaven and represents the divine character of Christ.

J. H., Tibbels, Brunswick, Me. In your answer to Mrs. M. DeW. of Vine Haven, Me., reference is made to the book of Jasher as not now in existence. I have a copy of that book. It is a wonderful book.

The book is not canonical, and has never been accepted as such. We understand that copies of a so-called "Book of Jasher" have appeared, but there are grave reasons for doubting its identity with the original book of that name.

A Michigan subscriber writes:

The Finns all over the United States have their Temperance Societies, meeting usually every Sunday. The ceremonies performed at these meetings are almost worldly pleasures tending to alienate the members from Christianity and to produce contempt for the Sabbath. What can be done to correct this? And who can and will do it?

We are not familiar with the Finnish Temperance Societies and their methods. Write to the American Temperance Union, Reade street, New York, and practical suggestions will doubtless be made to remedy the defects complained of.

G. L. C., Lodgepole, Neb. A certain preacher is teaching that it is wrong to ask God to forgive our sins, because they have all been atoned for by the death of Christ, and therefore it is like doubting him to ask for the forgiveness of them. Is that your view?

If you look to the Lord's Prayer you will see that a petition for the forgiveness of sins is contained in it. That is a sufficient reason for offering the prayer. The preacher you refer to was probably reproving the tendency of Christian people to dwell morbidly on the sins that they committed before their conversion, and to continually revert to them in their prayers, instead of praising God for his goodness in forgiving them. The Christian rightly deplores his sins, but having repented of them and accepted Christ, he should believe the Scripture promise that the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin.

Subscriber, Mattie, Pa. What did Christ mean by saying (Luke 7: 28) that the least in the kingdom of God is greater than John the Baptis?

That his coming and the revelation he made constituted so great a difference that the least among his followers was more advanced in divine knowledge than any of the old dispensation. It was as it is in scientific progress. A boy in our public schools to-day has a clearer knowledge of the universe than Kepler or Newton.

Subscriber, Orange City, Iowa. 1. Was it not sinful of David and the patriarchs to have more than one wife? 2. Is fasting necessary or useful in our day? 3. How many different denominations are there claiming to be founded on the Bible? 4. Are people still persecuted for living a godly life? If so, who are the persecutors?

1. Not in the same degree that men would be now who have more than one wife. There was not the same enlightenment that there is now, and even in the Mosaic law polygamy was not forbidden. At the same time, the experience of the men who married more than one wife was sufficiently painful to convince them that the practice was detrimental to them. 2. Three reasons are assigned for fasting: humiliation, repression of fleshly appetites, and preparation for meditation and prayer. It is recognized in the New Testament, but it is not clear that it is expressly enjoined. Christ's sermon on the Mount appears to give a modified approval of it, but it is left to the individual action. There is no merit in it, though it may in some cases be beneficial. 3. About fifty, but many of these are sub-divided. There are at least seventeen kinds of Methodists and fourteen of Baptists. 4. Yes. If you were to go into some workshops and some homes you would be convinced of the fact. The persecutors are relatives and associates.

H. W. F., Franklin, Mass. 1. Referring to the question in THE MAIL-BAG in issue of December 22, 1897, "When and by whom was the first discovery of gold made in the Klondike?" can you inform me whether the parties referred to were prospecting? If so, from what source did they obtain the knowledge of the fact that the precious metal existed in the locality where it was discovered? Otherwise, what object had they in view in visiting the desolate and barren wastes of the Klondike region? 2. Can you give the distance from Seattle to Dawson City, and from that point to the so-called Bonanza mines?

1. They were prospecting, undoubtedly, and were there solely for that purpose. Gold had been discovered in other quarters of Alaska and the Dominion territory, as early as 1873; but this was the first Klondike discovery. 2. The distance from Seattle to Dawson City is 4,722 miles, by way of St. Michael and the Yukon River, according to the figures of the Alaska Commercial Company.

Frank R., New York City. After joining the church I had a time of darkness and Satan came and I was much afraid, but after praying a long time, he left me and I was at peace. Do you think this experience proves that I am saved?

You know the conditions of salvation and can judge for yourself whether you have fulfilled them. Christ said (John 10: 27), "My sheep hear my voice and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish; neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." Try earnestly to follow Christ, to be like him kind and patient and gentle and sinless. Study his character as described in the Gospels, and make him your example. Pray that you may have his spirit, and try to get your friends and companions to love him and trust him too. You may be sure that God will keep his promise. Do not be watching continually your own feelings, but try to do all the good you can. There will never come a time when you can say, "I am saved and vigilance is unnecessary." But if you honestly strive to live the Christ-life, trusting in him he will help you and keep you from falling.

LET ALL HELP CUBA NOW!

President's Call for Aid Heard by the Whole Nation.

FOOD, MEDICINE, NURSES AND CLOTHING NEEDED.

The Work Organized and Already Under Way—Gifts Pouring In from Many Quarters—Reports of Terrible Suffering Received Daily—People Dying on the Streets—Crowds Clamoring for Bread from Our Consul at Havana—The Relief Committee Appointed by the President Begins Its Work in Earnest.

CUBA'S despairing cry for help has touched the hearts of our Nation, and already gifts are pouring in from generous hearts in many States. Arrangements are now under way for sending forward a quantity of food supplies to be sent by steamer and consigned to Consul-General Lee, at Havana, in order that the work of relief may begin at once. This shipment will be followed by others, as promptly as the receipt of contributions will allow. It is hoped, by this time-saving course, to save many who are now in danger of perishing from starvation. When this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of its readers, therefore, the beneficent work of Cuban relief will have actually begun, and many of our unfortunate neighbors will already have realized that the great and prosperous Christian American Nation has not been appealed to in vain.

Copyrighted, N. Y. World.

SLOWLY DYING OF HUNGER.

But this is merely "a drop in the bucket." when considered in relation to the actual needs of the case. Our advices as to the real condition of the Cuban peasantry warrant us in urging our friends everywhere to the most strenuous efforts in their behalf. To be effective, the aid rendered must be sent quickly. We would, therefore, ask every reader to join in this blessed work: every pastor of a church, every Sunday School superintendent and leader, and all church societies of whatever denomination. Committees should be organized, and the utmost diligence employed in supplying the means wherewith to send needed relief to the sufferers. Every contribution sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be acknowledged, and all will be transmitted to Cuba through the State Department. Not a dollar will be distributed except by the hands of trusted American officials in Cuba, under General Lee's supervision, and every dollar will count for the saving of one life, at least. We do not believe there is a single reader of this journal who can afford to neglect the opportunity to save a life in Cuba.

Accounts of the suffering in Cuba, received almost daily, are of a character to excite the deepest sympathy. Mr. E. J. Gibson, a staff correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, who has traveled in several provinces of Cuba, gives a most heartrending description of the condition of affairs at many places. Of the suffering in Havana, he writes:

At certain places in the city, small crowds of destitute persons, evidently half-starved to death, can be seen eating loaves of bread or other allowances of food just sufficient to keep them from the grave. I have seen the most horrible sights of my life in the places where these reconcentrados are in the last stages of starvation. Two of them died last night on the public square, in front of the hotel where I am staying—the most public place in the city.

But the situation in Havana is nothing compared with that which prevails in the provinces. The same correspondent estimates that 400,000 Cubans are dying of sheer starvation—men, women and children perishing by the thousand every week from the same cause. There is no food for the people. In many towns, destitution has invaded almost every home.

Families that have never known privation have but one scant meal a day, generally rice, with a little lard or a small slice of bacon. In most of the houses the table has not been set for months. The majority have not tasted meat for months. Mothers watch their younger children perish for want of milk.

Even the prisoners released from jail have been dying of starvation in the streets. In Camajuani, people are dying in the portals (entrances) of the houses . . . and are buried without ceremonies, being covered with only a few feet of earth. . . . Officials admit that they do not give out correct reports, in order not to alarm the public.

Another correspondent, G. C. Musgrove, writing from Cienfuegos, says that the famine rages in all the provinces of Spanish Cuba.

From Havana to Matanzas, there is an unbroken line of filthy settlements from which grim spectres, once human, crawl forth and supplicate with bony arms and claw-like fingers for alms that are seldom forthcoming. At Campo, Florida and Juraco the scenes are indescribable.

In Matanzas, he writes, "the streets are full of semi-naked skeletons clamoring for bread. At Limonar, the better class whites are all dead. At Perico, 300 are left of 4,000. At Jovellanos it is equally bad, and so at Colon and Managua. At San Pedro, many little children are silently starving, their hair gone and their feet swollen. At Cascar, the dead famine victims lie unburied. One poor father at Lajos was found carrying his two dead children in an old portmanteau, the babes having died of starvation. Vultures abound, feeding on the bodies of the famine victims. At Cruces, only 250 people are left alive out of 2,000, and even these are dying. At Trinidad, whole families have been swept away. In one hut, a girl aged 16, and her brother of 14, lay side by side, dead, their ghastly emaciation too clearly telling the cause. At Condada, as an official remarked, the entire settlement is "underground"—wiped out by famine. At Camarones, Cruces and Santo Domingo, the distress is indescribable. At Los Fosos, hundreds have already perished of starvation, and other hundreds are dying.

In some places, the ravages of the famine have been so severe that nineteen out of every twenty persons die. Women and children can be seen sitting with hands clasped around their knees and bending over in suffering. The sight of starving mothers, with the sad, pinched faces of little children nestling close to them, was simply indescribable in its sadness. The Governor of Matanzas admitted that probably 30,000 Cuban reconcentrados had already died in Matanzas of starvation. In Santa Clara province, the famine death roll shows 100,700 dead.

At Remedios, according to a Philadelphia Press correspondent, the death-rate has risen over 300 per cent., due to starvation. The daily funerals form one continuous procession. Dr. H. M. Folkes, H. A. Gant and J. R. Tackett, the Commission of experts sent to Cuba by Gov. McLaurie, of Mississippi, have reported that hundreds of thousands are starving to death, and suffering from the diseases peculiar to famine. Another writer reports that hundreds of persons, many being women and children, surround the American Consulate in Havana, crying for bread. The Bishop of Havana has declared that since the beginning of the war, 530,000 persons have been buried in the various parishes on the island, and the fearful mortality continues. In one small town of Havana Province alone—Guines—305 died in one week. Starvation is largely responsible for this dreadful record. A correspondent of the New York Sun writes from Havana as follows:

A FAMINE-STRICKEN FAMILY.

Yesterday, I visited Los Fosos, in this city, where the poor concentrados have been huddled. The spectacle of misery offered by these people is heartrending. In the department called the hospital, I counted 440 women and children dying of fever, caused by hunger. Most of them lay on the ground because there are only 120 cots. They have no food and no medicines. There is not the least indication that at any time they have received medical treatment. One of the women who was able to speak was asked if she had been attended by a doctor. "What for?" she answered. "Can a doctor cure without medicines?"

In one of the most central streets of the capital, a young woman fell dead. The cause of her death, according to the medical certificate, was starvation. Her baby was clasped to her breast.

President McKinley and his Cabinet, who have shown a deep interest in the work of relief, are among the strongest advocates of the Cuban aid movement. Committees have been formed in accordance with the Proclamation of the Secretary of State, and the work is progressing.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as announced in a previous issue, advanced $1,000 in anticipation of the contributions, to aid the relief work at the outset. The following contributions have been received since the Fund was opened:

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Woman's Work.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Prov. 14: 1. . . . . Every wise woman buildeth her house.

WOMAN a mere adjunct to man, an appendix to the masculine volume, an appendage, a sort of afterthought, something thrown in to make things even—that is the heresy entertained and implied by some men. This is evident to them, because Adam was first created, and then Eve. They don't read the whole story or they would find that the porpoise and the bear and the hawk were created before Adam, so that this argument, drawn from priority of creation, might prove that the sheep and the dog were greater than man. No. Woman was an independent creation, and was intended, if she chose, to live alone, to work alone, act alone, think alone, and fight her battles alone. The Bible says it is not good for man to be alone, but never says it is not good for woman to be alone; and the simple fact is that many women who are harnessed for life in the marriage religion would be a thousandfold better off if they were alone.

Who are these men who, year after year, hang around hotels and engine-houses and theatre doors, and come in and out to bother busy clerks and merchants and mechanics, doing nothing, when there is plenty to do? They are men supported by their wives and mothers. If the statistics of any of our cities could be taken on this subject, you would find that a vast multitude of women not only support themselves, but masculines. A great legion of men amount to nothing, and a woman by marriage, manacled to one of these nonentities, needs condolence. A woman standing outside the marriage relation is several hundred thousand times better off than a woman badly married. Many a bride, instead of a wreath of orange blossoms, might more properly wear a bunch of nettles and nightshade, and, instead of the Wedding March, a more appropriate tune would be the Dead March in Saul, and, instead of a banquet of confectionery and ices, there might be more appropriately spread a table covered with apples of Sodom.

Many a woman who has had the hand of a young inebriate offered, but declined it, or who was asked to chain her life to a man selfish, or of bad temper, and refused the shackles, will bless God throughout all eternity that she escaped that earthly pandemonium.

Besides all this, in our country about one million men were sacrificed in our Civil war, and that decreed a million women to celibacy. Besides that, since the war, several armies of men as large as the Federal and Confederate armies put together, have fallen under malt liquors and distilled spirits, so full of poisoned ingredients that the work was done more rapidly, and the victims fell while yet young. And if fifty thousand men are destroyed every year by strong drink before marriage, that makes in the thirty-three years since the war one million six hundred and fifty thousand men slain, and decrees one million six hundred and fifty thousand women to celibacy. Take, then, the fact that so many women are unhappy in their marriage, and the fact that the slaughter of two million five hundred and fifty thousand men, by war and rum combined, decides that at least that number of women shall be unaffianced for life, my text comes in with a cheer and a potency and appropriateness that you may never have seen in it before when it says, "Every wise woman buildeth her house;" that is, let woman be her own architect, lay out her own plans, be her own supervisor, achieve her own destiny.

In addressing those women who have to fight the battle alone, I congratulate you on your happy escape. Rejoice forever that you will not have to navigate the tunnels of the other sex, when you have paths enough of your own. Think of the nervousness you avoid, of the risks of unassimilated temper which you will not have to run, of the cares you will never have to carry, and of the opportunity of outside usefulness from which marital life would have partially debarred you, and that you are free to go and come as one who has the responsibilities of a household can seldom be. God has not given you a hard lot, as compared with your sisters. When young women shall make up their minds at the start that masculine companionship is not a necessity in order to happiness, and that there is a strong probability that they will have to fight the battle of life alone, they will be getting the timber ready for their own fortune, and their saw and axe and plane sharpened for its construction, since "Every wise woman buildeth her house."

As no boy ought to be brought up without learning some business at which he could earn a livelihood, so no girl ought to be brought up without learning the science of self-support. The difficulty is that many a family goes sailing on the high tides of success, and the husband and father depends on his own health and acumen for the welfare of his household, but one day he gets his feet wet, and in three days pneumonia has closed his life, and the daughters are turned out on a cold world to earn bread, and there is nothing practical that they can do. The friends come in and hold consultation. "Give music lessons," says an outsider. Yes, that is a useful calling, and if you have great genius for it, go on in that direction. But there are enough music teachers now starving to death in all our towns and cities, to occupy all the piano stools and sofas and chairs and front-door steps of the city. Besides that, the daughter has been playing only for amusement, and is only at the foot of the ladder, to the top of which a great multitude of masters on piano and harp and flute and organ have climbed.

"Put the bereft daughters as saleswomen in stores," says another adviser. But there they must compete with salesmen of long experience, or with men who have served an apprenticeship in commerce and who began as shop boys at ten years of age. Some kind-hearted dry goods man, having known the father, now gone, says, "We are not in need of any more help just now, but send your daughters to my store, and I will do as well by them as possible." Very soon the question comes up, Why do not the female employes of that establishment get as much wages as the male employes? For the simple reason, in many cases, the females were suddenly flung by misfortune behind that counter, while the males have from the day they left the public school been learning the business.

How is this evil to be cured? Start clear back in the homestead and teach your daughters that life is an earnest thing, and that there is a possibility, if not a strong probability, that they will have to fight the battle of life alone. Let every father and mother say to their daughters, "Now, what would you do for a livelihood if what I now own were swept away by financial disaster, or old age, or death should end my career?"

"Well, I could paint on pottery and do such decorative work." Yes, that is beautiful, and if you have genius for it go on in that direction. But there are enough busy at that now to make a line of hardware as long as von Pennsylvania avenue.

"Well, I could make recitations in public and earn my living as a dramatist; I could render King Lear or Macbeth till your hair would rise on end, or give you Sheridan's Ride or Dicken's Pickwick." Yes, that is a beautiful art, but ever and anon, as now, there is an epidemic of dramatization that makes hundreds of households nervous with the cries and shrieks and groans of young tragediennes dying in the fifth act, and the trouble is that while your friends would like to hear you, and really think that you could surpass Ristori and Charlotte Cushman and Fanny Kemble of the past, to say nothing of the present, you could not, in the way of living, in ten years earn ten cents.

My advice to all girls and all unmarried women, whether in affluent homes or in homes where most stringent economies are grinding, is to learn to do some kind of work that the world must have while the world stands. I am glad to see a marvelous change for the better, and that women have found out that there are hundreds of practical things that a woman can do for a living if she begins soon enough, and that men have been compelled to admit it. You and I can remember when the majority of occupations were thought inappropriate for women; but our Civil war came, and the hosts of men went forth from North and South; and to conduct the business of our cities during the patriotic absence, women were demanded by the tens of thousands to take the vacant places; and multitudes of women, who had been hitherto supported by fathers and brothers and sons, were compelled from that time to take care of themselves. From that time a mighty change took place favorable to female employment.

Among the occupations appropriate for woman I place the following, into many of which she has already entered, and all the others she will enter: Stenography, and you may find her at nearly all the reportorial stands in our educational, political and religious meetings. Savings banks, the work clean and honorable, and who so great a right to toil there, for a woman founded the first savings bank—Mrs. Priscilla Wakefield? Copyists, and there is hardly a professional man that does not need the service of her penmanship; and, as amanuensis, many of the greatest books of our day have been dictated for her writing. There they are as florists and confectioners and music teachers and book-keepers, for which they are specially qualified by patience and accuracy; and wood-engraving, in which the Cooper Institute has turned out so many qualified; and telegraphy, for which she is specially prepared, as thousands of the telegraphic offices will testify. Photography, and in nearly all our establishments they may be found there at cheerful work. As workers in ivory and guttapercha and gum elastic and tortoise-shell and gilding, and in chemicals, in porcelain, in terra-cotta. As postmistresses, and Presidents have given them appointments all over the land.

As proof-readers, as translators, as modelers, as designers, as draughtswomen, as lithographers, as teachers in schools and seminaries, for which they are especially endowed, the first teacher of every child, by Divine arrangement, being a woman. As physicians, having graduated after a regular course of study from the female colleges of our large cities, where they get as scientific and thorough preparation as any doctors ever had, and go forth to a work which no one but women could so appropriately and delicately do. On the lecturing platform; for you know the brilliant success of Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Hallowell and Miss Willard and Mrs. Lathrop. As physiological lecturers to their own sex, for which service there is a demand appalling and terrific. As preachers of the Gospel, and all the protests of ecclesiastical courts cannot hinder them, for they have a pathos and a power in their religious utterances that men can never reach. Witness all those who have heard their mother pray.

O, young women of America! as many of you will have to fight your own battles alone, do not wait until you are flung of disaster, and your father is dead, and all the resources of your family have been scattered; but now, while in a good house and environed by all prosperities, learn how to do some kind of work that the world must have as long as the world stands. Turn your attention from the embroidery of fine slippers, of which there is a surplus, and make a useful shoe. Expend the time in which you adorn a cigar case in learning how to make a good, honest loaf of bread. Turn your attention from the making of flimsy nothings to the manufacturing of important somethings.

Much of the time spent in young ladies' seminaries in studying what are called the "higher branches" might better be expended in teaching them something by which they could support themselves. If you are going to be teachers, or if you have so much assured wealth that you can always dwell in those high regions, trigonometry of course, metaphysics of course, Latin and Greek and German and French and Italian of course, and a hundred other things of course; but if you are not expecting to teach, and your wealth is not established beyond misfortune, after you have learned the ordinary branches take hold of that kind of study that will pay in dollars and cents in case you are thrown on your own resources. Learn to do something better than anybody else.

"No, no!" says some young woman; "I will not undertake anything so unromantic and commonplace as that." An excellent author writes that after he had, in a book, argued for efficiency in womanly work in order to success, and positive apprenticeship by way of preparation, a prominent chemist advertised that he would teach a class of women to become druggists and apothecaries if they would go through an apprenticeship as men do; and a printer advertised that he would take a class of women to learn the printer's trade if they would go through an apprenticeship as men do, and how many, according to the account of the authoress, do you suppose applied to become skilled in the druggist business and printing business? Not one!

"But," you ask, "what would my father and mother say if they saw I was doing such unfashionable work?" Throw the whole responsibility upon us, the pastors, who are constantly hearing of young women in all these cities, who, unqualified by their previous luxurious surroundings for the awful struggle of life into which they have been suddenly hurled, seemed to have nothing left them but a choice between starvation and damnation. There they go along the street seven o'clock in the wintry mornings, through the slush and storm, to the place where they shall earn only half enough for subsistance, the daughters of once prosperous merchants, lawyers, clergymen, artists, bankers and capitalists, who brought up their children under the infernal delusion that it was no high-tone for women to learn a profitable calling. Young women! take this affair in your own hand, and let there be an insurrection in all prosperous families on the part of the daughters of this day, demanding knowledge in occupations and styles of business by which they may be their own defence and their own support if all fatherly and husbandly and brotherly hands forever fail them. I have seen two sad sights, the one a woman in all the glory of her young life, stricken by disease and in a week lifeless in a home of which she had been the pride. As her hands were folded over the still heart and her eyes closed for the last slumber, and she was taken out amid the lamentations of kindred and friends, I thought that was sadness immeasurable. But I have seen something compared with which that scene was bright and songful. It was a young woman who had been all her days amid wealthy surroundings, by the visito death and bankruptcy to the household turned out on a cold world without one lesson about how to get food or shelter and into the awful whirlpool of city life where strong ships have gone down, and for twenty years not one word has been heard from her. Vessels went out on the Atlantic Ocean looking for a shipwrecked craft that was left alone and forsaken on the sea a few weeks before, with the idea of bringing it into port. But who shall ever bring again into the harbor of peace and hope and heaven that lost womanly immortal, driven in what tempest, aflame in what conflagration, sinking into what abyss? O God, help! O Christ rescue! My sisters, give not your time to learning fancy work which the world may dispense with in hard times, but connect your skill with the indispensables of life.

The world will always want something to wear and something to eat, and shelter and fuel for the body, and knowledge for the mind, and religion for the soul. And all these things will continue to be the necessaries, and if you fasten your energies upon occupations and professions thus related, the world will be unable to do without you. Remember, that in proportion as you are skillful in anything your rivalries become less. For unskilled toil there are women by the millions. But you may rise to where there are only thousands; and still higher, till there are only a hundred; and still higher, till there are only ten; and still higher, in some particular department, till there is only a unit and that yourself. For a while you may eep wages and a place through the indly sympathy of an employer, but you ill eventually get no more compensation han you can make yourself worth.

Let me say to all women who have lready entered upon the battle of life, hat the time is coming when women shall ot only get as much salary and wages as hen get, but for certain styles of employ- ent, women will have higher salary and ore wages, for the reason that for some tyles of work they have more adaptation. ut this justice will come to woman not rough any sentiment of gallantry, not ecause woman is physically weaker than han, and, therefore, ought to have more onsideration shown her, but because hrough her finer natural taste and more race of manner, and quicker perception, nd more delicate touch, and more edu- ated adroitness, she will, in certain call- ngs, be to her employer worth ten per ent. more, or twenty per cent. more than he other sex. She will not get it by ask- ng for it, but by earning it, and it shall e hers by lawful conquest.

Now, men of America, be fair, and give he women a chance. Are you afraid that hey will do some of your work, and hence harm your prosperities? Remember that here are scores of thousands of men doing women's work. Do not be afraid! God knows the end from the beginning, nd he knows how many people this world can feed and shelter, and when it ets too full he will end the world, and, f need be, start another.

But God will arrange all, and all we have to do is to do our best and trust him or the rest. Let me cheer all women ighting the battle of life alone, with the act of thousands of women who have won the day. Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, brave- y fought the battle alone; Dorothea Dix, the angel of the insane asylums, alone; Caroline Herschel, the indispen- sable reinforcement of her brother, alone; Maria Takrzewska, the heroine of the Berlin hospital, alone; Helen Chalmers, patron of the sew- ng-schools for the poor of Ed- nburgh, alone. And thousands and tens of thousands of wo- men, of whose bravery and self-sacrifice and glory of char- acter the world has made no record, but whose deeds are in the heavenly archives of martyrs who fought the battle alone, and, though unrecog- nized for the short thirty or fifty or eighty years of their earthly existence, shall through the quintillion ages of the higher world, be pointed out with the admiring cry, "These are they who came out of great tribulation and had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb."

Let me also say, for the en- couragement of all women fighting the battle of life alone, that their conflict will soon end. There is one word writ- ten over the faces of many of them, and that word is Despair. My sister, you need appeal to Christ, who comforted the sisters of Beth- any in their domestic trouble, and who in his last hours forgot all the pangs of his own hands and feet and heart, as he looked into the face of maternal anguish, and called a friend's attention to it, in substance saying, "John, I cannot take care of her any longer. Do for her as I would have done, if I had lived. Behold thy mother!" If, under the pressure of unrewarded and unappreciated work, your hair is whiten- ing and the wrinkles come, rejoice that you are nearing the hour of escape from your very last fatigue.

The daughter of a regiment in any army is all surrounded by bayonets of defence, and, in the battle, whoever falls, she is kept safe. And you are the daughter of the regiment commanded by the Lord of Hosts. After all, you are not fighting the battle of life alone. All heaven is on your side. You will be wise to appropriate to yourself the words of sacred rhythm:

> One who has known in storms to sail
> I have on board:
> Above the roaring of the gale
> I hear my Lord.
>
> He holds me; when the billows smite
> I shall not fall.
> If short, 'tis sharp; if long, 'tis light;
> He tempers all.

A HAVEN FOR ✍ ✍ ✍ HOMELESS GIRLS.

Noble Gift of the Baroness de Hirsch to the Women of her Race in America—Women of Other Creeds and Nationalities Included in the Benefit.

NOT only the Christian, but the secular world greets with gladness every effort towards providing homes for the accommodation of working-girls, who are out of employment. Every movement in this direction, is one which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is happy to chronicle as a true philanthropy, and a practical step towards the solution of some of our most perplexing social problems.

Especially do we hail with pleasure an institution which discriminates in favor of Jewish maidens, since homeless wayfarers of this nationality have perhaps received less share of attention in this regard than Catholics from Catholics, and Protestants from Protestants.

The Clara de Hirsch Home for Work- ing-girls, recently opened at No. 208 Second avenue (which is only a tempo- rary shelter awaiting the completion of a large building on Sixty- third street), represents one of the latest beneficences of Baroness de Hirsch. It was opened Nov. 8, 1897, with accommodations for sixteen guests, and is al- ready taxed beyond its capacity. It was incor- porated under the laws of the State of New York, and its object is to provide a temporary home for needy unmarried women, to find them employment for which they are quali- fied, or in absence of such qualification, train them to some occupation. It especially extends its hospitality to strangers without kindred in the city. The rates for room and board are two dollars a week to those who can pay; those without means give assistance in household work as an equivalent. The constitution provides that nine-tenths of the guests must be Hebrews, but the ap- plications from Jewish girls have not been nearly so numerous as from those of other races and creeds.

DINING-ROOM IN THE CLARA DE HIRSCH HOME.

The permanent home to be erected on sixty-third street will accommodate at least 100 beneficiaries. The endowment fund cre- ated by the Baroness Clara de Hirsch for the purchase of the site, the construction and equipment of the building and the run- ning expenses of the Home is $600,000. The names of the officers and board of directors is a guarantee of the proper conduct and the abounding success and usefulness of the institution. They are names well-known in the world of litera- ture, art, finance and philanthropy, and we give them as follows:

President, Mrs. Oscar S. Straus; Secre- tary, Florentine Sutro; Treasurer, Mr. Oscar S. Straus. Board of Directors; Mrs. Julius Goldman, Mrs. Settie Cohn, Mrs. Rose Abraham, Mrs. Oscar S. Straus, Mrs. Gabriel G. Glendenin, Mrs. Felix War- burg, Mrs. Florentine Sutro, Mrs. Louis Stern, Mrs. Kings, Miss Irene Kohns, Mr. Oscar S. Straus, Mr. Edmond E. Wise.

Mrs. Minnie D. Louis, Resident Direc- tress, well-known for her connection with the work at the Hebrew Industrial School for Girls, on Henry street, New York City, is a cultivated, brainy woman, thor- oughly in love with her work, and fully equal to the duties of her office. "The Baroness Hirsch," she says "is deeply in- terested in this work. She keeps in close touch with it, and is following it out step by step as it progresses. There are many questions presenting themselves, and var- ious points of future form and government are as yet undetermined, for these must be adapted to the needs as they present themselves in this formative period of the work. The plan of the permanent home has been submitted to the Baroness and approved by her. According to her ex- press order, the plan does not include the usual dormitories. Each occupant will have her own little room. I know of no home for Jewish working women except this. It is beautiful that the Baroness has done this. In the Trade and Techni- cal Schools which the Baron established, he had done so much for men, that it was natural for his wife who is continuing his noble work, to decide that the woman would do something substantial for the relief of women.

SITTING-ROOM IN THE HOME.

Instances of Longevity.

Whatever may be said of our own day, it is cer- tain that there were many well-attested cases of lon- gevity in ancient times. Moses lived to the age of 120 (Deut. 34: 7).

It is an undoubted fact (says a writer in The Nine- teenth Century), that men of letters and science, whose lives have been devoted to genial pursuits, often attain great age. Car- lyle, Buffon, Goethe, Franklin, Herschel, New- ton and Halley were all between eighty and ninety, and among medical men who have reached the same age are to be reckoned Har- vey, Duhamel, Pinel, and Ruysch. There seems to be no doubt that Michael Angelo, Titian, and Leeuwenhoek painted pictures after ninety. Also we may make mention of the veteran painter, Sidney Cooper. An ex- traordinary number of instances of longevity may be found among those who, with the strictest regimen, self-denial, and abstraction, led a life of contemplation, but combined with the enjoyment of free air and bodily exercise. Thus the apostle John is said to have at- tained the age of ninety-three; Paul, the Her- mit, by means of an almost incredibly severe regime in a grotto, to that of 103; and St. An- thony is believed to have reached that of 105. Athanasius and Jerome also exceeded the age of eighty. In later times the venerable Bede lived to a very advanced period. Deep-think- ing philosophers and lawyers also have at times been distinguished by their great age. It is only necessary to mention the well-known example of M. Chevreul, 102, and Prof. Owen; Sir Moses Montefiore, who died in his 101st year, 1885; Miss Joanna Hastings, of Malvern, who in the same year attained her 103d birth- day; William Mann, of Kirkfield, near Haddo, who died at the age of 107, and Lady Smith, who lived to be 106. A cheerful, helpful spirit and wholesome work, like fresh air and simple habits, lengthen life.

The Sepulchre of the Saviour.

ALTHOUGH, for centuries past there has been much difference of opinion among theologians and investiga- tors generally, concerning the actual scenes of our Saviour's crucifixion and burial, as well as of other leading events of his passion, the traditional site occu- pied by the Church of the Holy Sepul- chre in Jerusalem is now almost universally accepted as the place of the entombment. One approaches the church through a maze of narrow and not very clean lanes, lined with small bazars, and usually crowded with Arabs and peddlers of vegetables. In the large square in front of the church, especially in the height of the pilgrim season, one finds the raised stone steps covered with improvised stands or tables, upon which are coffee, sherbet, sweetmeats, and various kinds of refresh- ments, while throughout the court itself are peddlers of various kinds of merchan- dise and trinkets, such as attract the eyes of curiosity-seeking pilgrims. The church itself is a lofty, circular building, bold and imposing in its general architectural effect, surmounted by a dome, and surrounded by tall, square pillars, which support a gallery. Immediate- ly under the dome stands the shrine—known as the Tomb of Christ, and which is shown in the colored illustration on our first page. This shrine is an oblong structure, twenty feet long and twelve feet in height, circular in the rear, but square and finished with a platform in front and with a cornice and cupola of marble. It was the workmanship of a Greek builder, whose name has now passed into oblivion, and who was employed in 1817 by the Greek monks, who de- sired to set up a memorial on the site of the sepulchre that would last throughout the ages. Critical tastes have pronounced the style of the shrine fantas- tic and the execution poor, but to the multitudes of de- vout pilgrims who visit it, it is the very focus of all that is sacred, associated with the Divine sojourn on earth.

Easter is the chief period of pilgrimages to Jerusalem at that sea- son of the Christian year and the number of pilgrims frequently amounts to very many thousands. On certain fixed days the Church of the Holy Sepulchre is open, and on such occasions the crowds are enormous. Costumes and countenances from all parts of the world; the rich, dark robes and swarthy faces of Asia; the strong features of the Greeks; Roman Cathoiic monks; Syrian mountaineers and men from the ancient plains; Christians from far India; pilgrims from Russia and the various countries of Europe; fashion- ably attired tourists from England, France, and America—all races and stages of civ- ilization meet together in common homage and adoration. Many writers have de- scribed in glowing language the scene which takes place here on Easter. When the gate of the church is opened the crowd bursts in impetuously, past the vestibule, where sits the Turkish keeper of the porch, and into the hall of the grand dome, where their tumult is hushed as if by magic, and then they throw them- selves upon their knees in front of "The Stone of Unction," weep over it, pray beside it, and even try to press their faces to its surface. Tears roll down bronzed cheeks, kneeling forms are shaken by sobs, and clasped hands are seen every- where, while lips move in prayer.

But the crowd does not halt here; it presses on toward the Tomb itself. As they approach this, the central object of their pilgrimage, they remove their shoes, and are admitted by a low door, on enter ing which, all bow reverently. In the inner chamber of the shrine is seen the sepulchre "hewn out of the rock"—a marble sarcophagus, over which hang forty-three lamps that are continually lit. The walls of the chamber itself are of a greenish marble known as verd-antique. Beside the traditional tomb stands a monk to receive the tribute of the pil- grims, whose gifts at Eastertide are usually numerous and liberal.

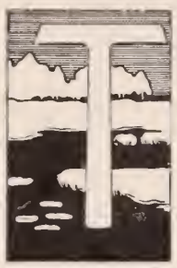
HOW TO PRAY.

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 30. Matt. 6:5-15. Golden Text, Matt. 6:6.

BY MRS M. BAXTER.



THE instinct of a man who knows his God is to pray in secret. He cannot live without constant intercourse with God. His best hours are those when he is alone with God: his deepest joys, most poignant sorrows are such as only God can share, because they proceed from him. Every one who is really born again of the Spirit of God knows what it is to enter into his closet, though it may be only the "hidden man" of his own heart. If he can obtain no solitude he knows how to shut the door to all other thoughts, and to pray to his Father, which is in secret (Matt. 6:6). Divine Life, the life of God in us, can live only in the element of God's presence, and no prayers of others, no meetings, no religious reading, can of itself create the air which they who are born of God must breathe to live.

Real prayer is divine, man cannot manufacture it. The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered" (Rom. 8:26). We are exhorted to pray always, with all prayer and supplication, but it must be "in the Spirit" (Eph. 6:18). We can build ourselves up on our most holy faith only by "praying in the Holy Ghost" (Jude, 20). What an insult then to a holy God must be "vain repetitions," like the heathen, who think they shall be heard for their much speaking! What an insult anything which is a substitute for the prayer of God the Holy Ghost in our hearts! And such prayer can be only as he dwells in us and has possession of our hearts and thoughts.

Our Lord Jesus, in speaking of the heathen way of praying, adds, "Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him. After this manner therefore pray ye, Our Father which art in heaven." Only a child has a right to say Father. It is assuming that we are born of God, and that God hath sent forth the Spirit of his own Son into our hearts, saying, Abba Father, when we pray this prayer. Is this the case with you who are reading this article? Have you ceased to be "a child of disobedience and of wrath" (Eph. 2:2, 3), and are you known in heaven and on earth as one who has been made a new creature in Christ Jesus? Is our Father a reality to you? Do you come near to him with the confidence of one between whom and him there exists a perfect understanding, an undeniable relationship? Whose interests then stand first? Your Father's or your own? In my own home, as a child, everything gave way to my father. Let it be so really in our deepest life of prayer, "Hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done." Oh, how this prayer stills us! How it settles every question! A loved one is laid low by sickness. God is Almighty, he can raise up that sick one. How shall we pray? Our Lord answers. Say first, "Hallowed by thy name in this sickness, thy kingdom come through this sickness, thy will be done in it." When this prayer comes really from our hearts in a time of trouble, it is wonderful how it clears the air and brings us where God can speak to us, and shew us in what way his name, his kingdom, his will can be forwarded in these circumstances; and he will make us satisfied with and rejoicing in his will whether it be death or life.

Perplexing circumstances in business arise. Our short sight sees only one way, we know the silver and the gold are his, he has infinite resources, he could send deliverance, but he says, "After this manner pray ye, "Hallowed by thy name," etc. When the bowed heart yields, and seeks first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, quite another vista may open. God's name may not be hallowed in the continuance of that business, his kingdom may require us in quite another sphere, his will may be done in a way we have not thought of. And a wonderful, unspeakable rest comes into the spirit, and light comes upon the path, when once the will of God is understood and accepted.

In Christian work tangles may arise. Fellow workers do not see with us, we believe we are in the right, our impulse is to pray that our fellow-workers may see with us, and perhaps we may seek to constrain God to do our will. But again, it is, "Hallowed be thy name;" not the name of this work or the workers—thy name—and, as the child's heart goes out for the honor of the Father for his kingdom and his will, everything assumes a new color; things look altogether different seen from this point of view, and the yielded heart rests in the perfect wisdom, and perfect, good, and acceptable will of a Heavenly Father.

Family circumstances, questions between husband and wife, brothers, sisters, friends living with us, may be, and often are, caused by the enemy to bring anguish upon some of God's children, and the cry of the heart is for deliverance from the constant fret of that which jars the nerves and strains the endurance to the utmost. But again, the Lord says: "After this manner pray ye, Hallowed be thy name, etc. If the prayer is real, again the light of God transforms the circumstances. That which in itself is unendurable, is made by God to be his precious, indispensable education for his child, and what seemed to be the greatest hindrance in life, and especially to the hidden life of God within, is seen to be his own provision for the very quickening of that life, and "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," becomes the only, all-inclusive desire.

Then how naturally and trustfully can all else be committed to him. If "Give us this day our daily bread," may mean the feeding of hundreds of orphans and numbers of lepers in India, if it may mean needs in the work of God which are constantly increasing, if it may insure the maintenance of Mr. Muller's orphan homes in Bristol or the hundreds of missionaries in the China Inland Mission, the children of such a Father can say without any anxiety, "Give us this day our daily bread," for they want only what God wants for them; they do not pray that they may urge an unwilling God to come to their help. They know they will meet with a welcome, and that he who "daily beareth our burden" (Ps. 67: 19, R. V.), makes himself responsible for all the cares which he has laid upon his children. Thus with his true children anxiety ceases to be.

"And forgive us our debts [or trespasses] as we forgive our debtors." Forgive as we forgive, just in the same measure, and no more; do to us as we do to others; this is our prayer. It indeed God's cause is not first with us, we stand upon a volcano in praying such a prayer. What if God should answer it? What if he should resent in us what we resent in others? What if he should remember against us that which we have not forgotten against others. O, again, let us come back to the beginning of the prayer. In that in which others have wronged me, "hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come, thy will be done." In the light of God we cannot help esteeming all others, including those who have wronged us, better than ourselves (Phil. 2:3). Down at the cross no debt looks so large as our own debt, and we can well forgive others their three hundred pence when we see our hundred talents forgiven.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

HAVING explained to his followers in the early part of his sermon his conception of righteousness, and stated the condition of membership in his kingdom, which was that of character, Christ proceeds to warn them against the ostentation and formalism which then, as in all ages, were liable to characterize the religious man. All worship and all religious duty were to be animated by the desire to please God and not to gain reputation. Mechanical devotion and all pretense of a piety that did not exist in the heart, Christ held in abhorrence. The man must be sincere, whether he gave alms, or prayed, or fasted. The long prayers which give God information as if he were ignorant, and the repetitions which would urge him, as if he were unwilling, are wrong. Then, knowing how much more easily men learn from an example than from a precept, Christ gives them a model which is remarkable for its simplicity and its comprehensiveness. It does not appear that Christ intended it to be used as a form of prayer, but that he gave it as a specimen of the kind of prayer that would be acceptable to God. Though so simple that a child can use it, its seven petitions cover all the exigencies of life.

Standing in the Synagogues. Christ's teaching about prayer, like his other teaching, goes deep down into the question of motive. There is here no reflection on the practice of public prayer: it was right that men should pray then in the synagogues and now in churches, but that they should not do it with the object of getting others to think them pious. There may be as much ostentation in going into a closet and shutting the door, as in standing at the corner of a street. Dr. H. C. Trumbull describes the practice of men praying in the public streets as he witnessed it in his travels in the Holy Land and in Egypt. On his first day in the desert he was awakened in the early morning from sleep by a loud intoning, evidently intended to be heard of men. "Did you hear me pray this morning, my master?" was the dragoman's first question after the morning greeting. "Indeed I did," the traveller replied, and then the dragoman told how often he prayed in the course of the day.

Our Father. The spirit of Pharisaism and exclusiveness, which seems as if it never would be extirpated from the human breast, would deny to unconverted men the use of those words. There is, of course, a sense in which they are appropriate only on the lips of a child of God; but in the broader sense we are all his children, though some of us are very disobedient and unworthy. An eminent writer tells the story of a wicked son, whose father was so engrossed in public duties that he had neglected the training of his boy. But the father was starting on a long journey through foreign lands, and he determined to take his undutiful son with him as his secretary. On his return, the boy was seen to be completely changed. He said: "If I had known my father before as I know him now, as I learned to know him in the solitude of travel, I should never have grieved him or thought badly of him." There are many bad men who would love and reverence God if they knew how good he is.

Thy will be done. This should be the keynote to every prayer, because God knows better than we do, whether the boons we crave would be good for us. Agrippina, during an illness of her infant son, Nero, flung herself on the ground and piteously implored the gods to save her child's life and that she might live to see him become emperor. Emperor he became, and from the imperial throne plotted that mother's death and was a curse to his people. Monica, the mother of Augustine, grieved by her boy's sensuality, and fearing that his going to Rome would confirm him in his evil ways, begged God to interpose some obstacle that would prevent his going. Her prayer was not answered. Augustine went to Rome, was converted, and became the joy of Monica's heart.

As we forgive. Not because we forgive, but in the same degree, in the same free and complete manner. That is a serious aspect. Do ye wish God to treat us as we treat those who wrong us? When Louis XII. of France came to the throne his enemies were struck with consternation at hearing that the king had a list of all the most prominent men in France and had gone over it himself, marking with a black cross the name of every man who had done him an injury. The king, hearing of their alarm, said that they need be under no apprehension. The cross was put there to remind him of God's forgiving love and of Christ's prayer for his murderers.

Give us this day our daily bread. This is not to be spiritualized. It is the food for our bodies that is meant, and in offering the prayer we acknowledge our dependence on God for it. Not only does he provide for it by the fertility of the earth, but he has ways of sending it where it is needed. During the early weeks of the famine in India, a missionary's wife offered that prayer, having in mind a number of orphan children whom she had received into her home. The poor remains of the missionary's salary had been used and one or two articles of household comfort had been sold to buy food for the children, but the treasury was empty again. But that day a notice was received that $500 had come by cable from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. God had stirred the hearts of his children ten thousand miles away, to send money to this journal, which it sent on, and so he answered the prayer offered in the missionary's home.

During the Armenian troubles, when he had on his ands a large num- ber of refugees who had succeeded in making their escape nto Persia and was sorely pressed for unds to maintain them, THE CHRIS IAN HERALD came to his rescue, and ent him a thousand dollars from the Ar- menian fund, contributed by its readers, nd thus, in all probability, enabled him o save many lives.

PATIENTS AT DR. COCHRAN'S DISPENSARY IN PERSIA.

The name of Dr. Joseph P. Cochran, Pres- byterian missionary-physician, of Croo- niah, Persia, is one well known through- out Persia and Kurdistan. His practice has been among all classes who have cared to seek his aid for the relief of their sick and suffering. He makes no differ- ence in his treatment of Christians, Arme- nians and Syrians, or the Mohammedans Persians and Turks and Kurds, or the ens or the Yezidees. He treats all alike, with the kindliness and broad sympathy which the love of Christ begets in the hearts of all his true followers. Dr. Coch- an's medical practice has been attended with phenomenal success. His fame has spread very widely through the country. Mr. Robert Speer, in his recent tour over ersia, found that almost everywhere Dr. Cochran's "name was a talisman and his presence a magnet." The late Shah of Persia, Nasr-i-Deen, sent him some years ago a decoration of the "Lion and the Sun," in recognition of his valuable ser- vices to Persian officials and notables. Persian governors and generals count themselves happy to secure his attention o their ailing bodies and sick families, while wild Kurdish chiefs seek his pro- fessional services with the utmost con- fidence and submission.

But it is not simply as a physician of remarkable skill and success that he is known and revered by all classes. It is also for his blameless life and perfect in tegrity of character. His modest and yet always dignified training doubtless has had much to do in winning the Persians' esteem, and added to these should be mentioned his clear mind and sound judg- ment, and the fact that, born in the coun- try, the son of a missionary, he is master of several languages spoken by the different peoples, and is thoroughly at home with all their customs and etiquette, for which the Persians are great sticklers.

When in 1880 the famous Kurdish Sheikh Oberdullah invaded Persia with several thousand fierce Kurds, he gave special commands to his followers not to molest any of Dr. Cochran's friends, either American or Persian Christians. And when he learned that one of the mis- sionaries had been waylaid and robbed by some of his soldiers, he had the man fer- reted out and the stolen property restored, and the robber severely punished. And Kurdish severity is terrible to brutality. In this case, it was reported, that the guilty Kurd was nailed to a tree for several hours by a nail driven through his hands. It is by such fierce methods that those in- human Kurds are made to behave them- selves and keep the peace.

At another time Dr. Cochran was mak- ing almost daily visits to the Governor of the city of Oroomiah, a very powerful offi- cial. He had sent an army up into Kur- distan to capture some marauding Kurds. But his soldiers were driven back by the Kurds in their strongholds. One day the Governor said to the Doctor: "I want you to write a letter to that Kurdish Chief and tell him if he will only surrender to my general his life and property will be protected. He will believe you, while he will not believe me."

It was a very delicate, trying po- sition for Dr. Cochran to be put in, as between these men, neither of whom trusted one another's word, but did put implicit confidence in this good Christian doctor. But God delivered him out of the snare of the evil one, and he remained the friend of both as before.

If Dr. Cochran was asked how he had been so prosperous and been de- livered out of the hands of these plot ting, treacherous people he would undoubtedly say:

"Blessed be the Lord because he hath heard the voice of my supplications. The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped"

Weak Bodies with Strong Wills.

Julius Ceasar was of delicate constitution, had painful headaches, and fits of epilepsy, yet he became master of the world. Macau- lay says of William of Orange, that he was so weak as to be soon fatigued, and was contin- ually suffering pain, but the force of his will had never failed. Dr. Johnson, Alexander Pope, Robert Hall, and others, were men greatly afflicted. One of the most spirited travellers of her day, Miss Isabella Bird, had less physical strength than ordinary women. Kane, the Arctic explorer, was an invalid; and Nelson never went to sea without being sea- sick. The biography of greatness is full of records of people who nobly fought against their difficulties.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Minister's Wife's Dilemma—Forms of Address—Wedding Reception Dinners.

SERENA and I had just settled ourselves comfort- ably for the enjoyment of a quiet evening, when there was a little knock at the door—a low little knock that we knew. There are knocks and knocks. Our door has neither bell nor knocker, please take notice. If you choose you can lift up the latch and pull the bobbin, or pull the bobbin and lift up the latch, and walk right in.

Said Serena, hurrying to set wide the door, "That's the minister's wife, and I'm so glad!"

The dear lady herself it was, just our minister's wife, and we're all so fond of her that we feel she belongs to us almost as much as to the minister.

"Mr. Homily has gone to a church- meeting," she explained, floating in as sweet and fair as a rose and as light as a bit of thistle-down, "and I'm left to be called for. And I've a letter I want to tell you about. It's from my cousin Jennie, in West Raleigh — Jennie Mason, who used to teach school across the river, and who married Dr. Elbridge's son."

We all knew Jennie, and said so, and then we listened to her letter, which opened up a question for discussion.

"Dear Cousin Cynthia," wrote Mrs. Elbridge, "you have always been such a wise counsellor that I come to you now for advice. What do you think about my earning money again as I used to? Rob's clients are few, and our income is so small that we are pinched and worried and worn out, and I cannot make both ends meet, do as I will. You know that I can teach, and there is no school here, so that if I receive a few pupils in the house it will be a boon to the neighbor- hood, and as my charges would not be high, the people could afford to pay me. It would be a great help to Rob, and I though," replied her cousin. "Brains tell in housework, as they do everywhere else."

"For my part," I volunteered, after a pause, "I advise Jennie to go on and begin her classes."

"Then," said the minister's wife, tenta- tively, "you do not see any objection to a married woman's turning her talents to ac- count and making at least a little money herself?"

"Not the least in the world, provided she does not have to neglect her own hus- band and children, in order to do the money- earning."

AFTER THE friends had said good-night, and Serena had taken her candle and gone to bed, I looked over my letters. These are some of them. One lady asks, "How long after her husband's death is it proper for a widow to use his name on her visit- ing cards, or as an address, thus: 'Mrs. Benjamin Hopkins.' Must she at once sign herself Mrs. Mary Hopkins?"

She must never sign herself "Mrs." any- body. As a signature, a wife, or a widow, or a spinster simply writes out her Chris- tian and her surname. She is Emily Jones, or Mary Ann Simmons, or Alice Barnard Keith, to the end of the chapter. It is permitted, and it is highly proper, that she should indicate her condition in life as Miss or as Mrs. by writing in brackets, at the left of her name, which- ever it is. If she is married, and her name is Marie Smith she will sign it thus, with (Mrs. J. S.) in brackets at the left. This rule is invariable, and admits of no departures.

* * *

A WIDOW uses her preference as to her address. Formerly it was usual for her to drop her husband's name and be known as "Mrs. Susan Edwards," for in- stance, instead of the formal "Mrs. Ralph Edwards." In these days it is good form for her to retain the state of her husband's lifetime. She is still his wife, though he has pass- ed on before her. If she prefers, she may adopt her own Christian and sur- name, but good usage allows, and, indeed, rather insists upon her con- tinuance of the old way.

MY DEAR J. H.— To your inquiry whether or not it is obligatory to serve a full course dinner at a wedding recep- tion given a few hours after a private wedding, I reply that such a form of en- tertainment would be inconvenient and unusual. Serve, informally, that is at a table, in a room adjoining or easily reached from the parlor, salads, cakes and ices. The guests will stroll in, to this refection, at their pleas- ure, in successive relays, singly, or in groups. They sit or stand as it happens, and if there are no waiters, the gentlemen will help the ladies. You may make this entertainment very elaborate or very simple as you choose. You may have bouillon, creamed or pickled oysters, chicken salad and ice cream, or you may omit any of these as you prefer. Coffee frappe, which is just frozen coffee, not coffee or chocolate, may be served, and you may have bonbons and mottoes if you wish. If the reception be very small, and the guests arrive at once, the bride and groom may properly sit at the head of the feast, and the bride will cut the central bride-cake. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

hire my hardest work done, and have a little girl in mornings and nights to wash the dishes.

"On the other hand, it is not the cus- tom in this country for a married woman to earn money, and it is rather a serious thing to be the first one to start out in a new line. Some people would reflect on me as strong-minded; Rob himself hesi- tates to give his consent. We have now decided to leave it to you, and we will abide by your view of the matter."

"Well, ladies," said the minister's wife, "what do you say? Shall I urge Jennie to be contented with her lot, and do the best she can until her husband's affairs brighten up, or shall she aid him by tak- ing hold in another way and bringing some- thing into the family exchequer?"

"Jennie never did care for housework," said Serena, reflectively.

"She is a very good housekeeper,

A Call to Service.

ONCE more the readers of this journal—who compose what is without doubt one of the grandest armies of consecrated Christian workers the world has ever seen—are summoned into active service. It is not a conscription, but a call; and it comes from the highest authority in the land—the President of the United States. Our government, recognizing your magnificent philanthropies in other fields, has signally honored you by inviting you to inaugurate the relief campaign in stricken Cuba, and in the name of the Master whom you serve, to carry succor and hope to the starving and dying peasantry of that most unfortunate country, nearly 200,000 of whose people have already perished of want and disease.

For many months past, letters have come to us from readers throughout the Union, pleading for Cuba. We were naturally reluctant to urge our friends to new efforts, unless the need could be shown to be absolutely imperative. To ascertain the real facts in the case, we cabled to General Lee, our representative in Havana, and also telegraphed to the State Department, besides making the fullest inquiries in other quarters. From all we received the assurance that Cuba's distress was of a character so appalling as to justify immediate action to save further sacrifice of human life, and to mitigate sufferings such as, fortunately, have never been experienced in our own favored and prosperous land.

Cæsar's famous legions, and the Old Guard of Napoleon, bore off the honors in many a hard-fought field. When an Emperor or a commander of the world's armies to-day summons his veterans to a new campaign, the men who step to the front bear upon their breasts the medals commemorative of great battles, in which many thousands of fellow-beings were cruelly slain, and still other thousands maimed by sword and bullet. But THE CHRISTIAN HERALD veterans carry neither sword nor musket, and their triumphs are those of peace and loving help and succor. They have not slain their thousands, but saved them instead, to lives of happiness and blessing. On the breasts of our brave veterans are no glittering medals commemorative of bloody fields, but in their hearts are inscribed the talismanic names—Russia, New York, The Lower Mississippi, The West, Armenia, India,"—each telling of countless lives saved through heroic, self-denying effort, and of multitudes drawn to Christ. These are the victories of the campaigns in which they have done the noblest of service—such service as is well-pleasing to Him who, when they are finally "mustered out," will say to them, "Inasmuch ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

To the dear comrades who have been with us in those memorable campaigns of Christian service, we earnestly and prayerfully submit the case of Cuba. Her people need our help; her sons and daughters, her feeble children, lift up their eyes to us and raise their weak hands in supplication. They are not thousands of miles away, but at our very doors. Let us do for them all that lies within our power. Not only the eyes of our government and nation, but of the whole civilized world, are upon us. Many others will aid us, and will esteem it an honor to stand in this new campaign, side by side with those veterans of ours, who have already furnished such examples of the power of united Christian effort as have awakened the admiration of the whole nation, from its distinguished Chief, down to its humblest citizen.

Organize, in churches, in societies, in Sunday Schools and in the home, and then, whatever the result, let your quota of help come to us with your fervent prayer for poor, suffering Cuba! Such a movement cannot fail to produce blessed and lasting results.

Be in Time.

ALL of us who read it were thrilled with the story of two men who were hanged, and one half minute after the execution, the Governor's reprieve came. A minute sooner, those men would be living now; but a half minute too late. So we often come with sympathy and moral rescue a little after it is of any use. There is a man under tremendous business pressure. You see him struggle and resolve to help him. Perhaps one word, without a single dollar, will keep his courage up until he gets through. You procrastinate, until some afternoon you conclude to see what you can do for him. You enter his store. It is half a minute after three o'clock. At three o'clock he failed, and his fortune perished, and his family are to be without a home. What a brave thing you did! Half a minute too late, when you might have been in time. You are impressed with the importance of religious interview with an unconverted friend. You hope that some day you may be thrown together under such circumstances that the conversation will be easy; but after a while, you say: "I can't wait any longer." You write a letter of religious counsel. It arrives a little after the man has expired with pneumonia or heart disease. Half a minute too late! But notice that the two men executed the other day had their attorneys for a long while pleading for a reprieve or a pardon, and they did all they could to get a pardon, or to have the day of execution put off. The Governor did not come early enough to the council chamber. Had he been there sooner the reprieve would have been sent in time. But how many men, unprepared for the next world, are making no effort for pardon. A great attorney offers his services, but his services are rejected. How many men have appointed a certain time when they will secure from the Governor of the Universe a pardon, but find out at last that they are a year too late, or a month too late, or a week too late, or a day too late or an hour too late, or a half minute too late.

Blessed be God, to your soul the Governor's pardon comes in time. You are still alive. Guilty, one and all, are we. Will we take the rescue? What is the use of appointing a future time when God appoints this. Remember, oh! remember, that a half minute too late is forever and forever, and forever too late.

STOCKINGS AND SHOES.

WE may think life to be commonplace, but there is no life which has not infinite relationships; and which does not in a multitude of ways touch things royal, romantic, mysterious and very far off. Take, for instance, the stockings and shoes which we throw off so carelessly, and put on so thoughtlessly; and we shall find they have histories, ancient and universal, which we may make our own. This is especially true of the shoe in all its varieties of sandals, slippers, buskins and boots. But the word "shoes" in the Bible ought to be "sandals," which the Jews, in common with all Eastern nations, wore.

It was a most significant part of their dress. They removed them as a token of humility or respect. To take the shoes from a captive was a sentence of imprisonment; and thus Isaiah prefigured the captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia (Isaiah, 20: 2, 3, 4). To return the shoes, was to restore to liberty; and this custum is explicitly named in 2d Chron., 28: 15. To throw the shoe over certain lands, was to make a claim for their possession; thus David, in the 60th Psalm, says: "Over Edom will I cast out my shoe." The story of Ruth is evidence of the important part the shoe played in the transfer of property, and some trace of this feeling is still preserved in the proverb of "standing in another man's shoes."

The Romans made the shoe symbolical of rank or station. No one who had not served as Ædile could wear red shoes; and only Senators could have four latchets. This number made the shoe come to the middle of the leg; it was then of light material, and adorned with golf and silver crescents, and precious stones. These splendid shoes were doubtless known to our ancestors in Britain, while the Romans ruled there; but the Saxons retained their own rude "bootees" of raw-hide, slit across the instep for greater ease and freedom. As they became more refined they dressed the skins, and gilded, or dyed them with brilliant colors. Shoes of this age, taken from the tomb of Bernard, grandson of Charlemagne, are of red leather with wooden soles, made rights and lefts.

Towards the close of William the Conqueror's reign, boots reaching to the middle of the leg were introduced. They were made of the famous Spanish leather from Cordova, and the Norman word, "Cordwainer"—a worker in Cordova leather—for a long time usurped the place of the Saxon "Shoemaker," though the latter is now the universal cognomen of the craft. In John's reign we read of slippers of purple and fret-work of gold; and in Richard the Second's, golden chains connected the knee to the tip of the shoe, which was eighteen inches beyond the toe; and in spite of their absurdity, and in defiance of acts of Parliament, these pointed shoes continued in favor until the end of Edward the Fourth's reign. In Elizabeth's time the shoes were made of black or white velvet, embroidered with gold, silver, or silk, the soles being made of cork. It is to the Court of Charles the First we owe the last senseless innovation on the simple boots of our Saxon fathers; for then high heels were introduced—an innovation as much at variance with common-sense as with the centre of gravity.

The fastening of shoes have been very subject to the fashion. The Jews used ligatures of various kinds. The word latchet very imperfectly gives the idea; for the latchets of the Greeks and Romans were splendid and costly, while the word in the Bible really means something of little value; thus Abraham declares to the King of Sodom that he will not take "even a shoe latchet." Buckles, of various degrees of splendor, were early the favorite fastening of shoes in England, and continued to be so, until within the memory of the present generation; nor can they be said to be even yet obsolete. However, in the simple comfort and convenience of the unpretending "tie" and "button gaiters" we have ample consolations for its lost splendors.

Hose is a Saxon word, and it is not likely the word existed without its equivalent. But they must have been made of leather, cloth, or silk, until the invention of knitted stockings. It was in the year 1509, that a Londoner called Rider, saw a pair of knitted worsted stockings that had come from Mantua, and he borrowed them and made a good imitation; and thirty years afterwards William Lee, M.A., of Cambridge, invented a steel loom for weaving silk stockings. But these were confined to the rich and noble, and the great body of the people were dependent on the labor of their own or others' hands. Knitting stockings was then a prominent article of faith in every woman's domestic creed; and certain districts in England became famous for the immense amount of stockings they supplied to the general market.

The patterns and colors of stockings have been of endless variety. Chaucer says of the wife of Bath: "Her hosen were of fine scarlet red;" and he also speaks of the parti-colored stockings so fashionable in Edward the Second's reign. This fashion of wearing one stocking blue and the other white, extended afterwards to the whole clothing, and no fashion has had a more deservedly unfortunate fate. For the motley, which was the delight of Edward's court, became the chosen habit of the fool and jester, and since we have made it the dress of the felon, it is evident its degradation can go no further.

See then, how much matter for reflection there is in the homeliest clothing of our feet; and, indeed, I have but indicated the interest of the "shoe" in the Bible; and it will be no idle pastime for my readers to add their own examples to the ones I have given them.

BRIEF NOTES.

In England at the present time there are 3,362 Congregational churches and missions, providing 1,293,375 sittings.

Great Britain has 2,006 Baptist ministers holding pastorates, of whom nearly one-fourth are in Wales.

Rev. Thomas Harrison commenced a series of revival services at the Second St. M. E. Church, New York, with the watch night services.

According to a statement received by the American Bible Society from its Chinese agency, the Bible has been put upon the list of classics which the students are to study in order to secure their appointment in the civil service.

Speaking of the beneficial results of the curfew bell, the Mayor of Lincoln, Neb., says: "There has been a decided improvement, socially and morally, of the youth, and a pecuniary saving from the falling off in the number of arrests."

Dr. L. W. Munhall has just returned to his home in Germantown, Philadelphia, after three months' campaigning in the Middle West. Hundreds have been added to the churches, and thousands of professors quickened in their spiritual lives as a result. In Ottumwa, Ia', seven churches united in the work.

Since the death of the late Bishop Walsham Howe, of Wakefield, England, it has been found that before he was made a bishop he regularly consecrated one-tenth of his income to God. After he became a bishop he increased the proportion to one-fifth, to which he added all the income derived from his pen.

Rev. Henry Stafford Smith, an English Evangelist, who is well-known on the other side of the Atlantic it now visiting the United States. The meetings he has already held show him to be a man of wonderful power and originality. Churches or Young Men's Associations needing help would do well to hear him. Letters may be sent to him in the care of Rev. W. G. Myles, Garfield, N. J.

Mr. D. L. Moody has been holding special services in the First Church of Saginaw, Mich., the Rev. Charles E. Bronson, D.D., pastor, for five days, they have been directed chiefly to the Christians, and on the great themes of the Bible, Prayer, the Holy Spirit and Regeneration. The church has been overflowing and great crowds turned away.

Mr. W. E. Stephens, formerly of St. Louis, Mo., has been delivering a series of instructive lectures to Sunday School teachers in New York. His subject was the Jewish Tabernacle, and it was illustrated by a beautiful model of the structure. The lectures were under the auspices of the New York Sunday School Association. On Tuesday, Jan. 25, at 8 o'clock, Mr. Stephens will lecture in the Bible House, New York.

The programme committee for the next Annual Convention of Christian Endeavor are able to announce that among those who have accepted a place on the Nashville programme are the Rev. George C. Lorimer, D.D., Boston; the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., Philadelphia; Principal Booker T. Washington, Tuskegee, Alabama; the Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., Brooklyn, New York, and Rev. James I. Vance, D.D., Nashville, Tennessee.

Lady Henry Somerset has resigned the Presidency of the British Woman's Temperance Association. The reason she assigns is that her physician has ordered a prolonged period of rest. It is understood, however, that Lady Somerset feels keenly the unpopularity that has been entailed in the association by her attitude on the subject of the army regulation in India.

Dr. John Hall, on Sunday, Jan. 9, announced his resignation of the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, which he has held for thirty years. The session of the church has called a meeting of the church and congregation, at which it will place on record its sincere regret that Dr. Hall feels it necessary to resign, and will recommend that he be appointed pastor-emeritus.

Dr. Keskar delivered on address on Dec. 31 at Dr. John Hall's Church, Fifth Ave., New York, on the people and customs of India. He has received several small amounts toward the purchase of the organ for his Sunday School at Sholapur. It appears that such an organ as will bear the climate of India will cost seventy-five dollars. We trust that his friends here will enable him to give Messrs. Estey the order for it.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding successful revival services in Brooklyn. On Jan. 3rd he opened in the Amslie Street Presbyterian Church and on Jan. 9th at the New England Congregational Church on South Ninth Street. Mr. Hammond had among his most active helpers men and women who were converted in their childhood under his preaching and in one case a minister, whose father was led from scepticism to faith at a meeting held by Mr. Hammond many years ago.

A notable educational and pleasure pilgrimage to Egypt, Palestine and Southern Europe has been organized by Rev. J. L. Campbell, D. D., pastor of the Lexington Avenue Baptist Church of this city. The date of sailing, March 5th, has been specially chosen for the convenience of pastors, as the great bulk of the winter's work will then be over. Lectures will be delivered on board the ship and eminent specialists will join the party at various points and go over the ground with them.

Rev. J. Manton Smith has been having a time of blessing at Yonkers, N. Y. Daily services have been held in Dr. George F. Pentecost's church, and on Sunday night in the Music Hall. On January 2, Mr. Smith visited Sing Sing prison and spoke and sang at a service for the convicts. Over a thousand men listened to him, and at the conclusion of his services gave him a hearty cheer and expressed the hope that he would be able to pay them another visit and hold another service before returning to England.

RUSSIANS ON PILGRIMAGE.

IT is not generally known that there is annually an increasing crowd of Russian pilgrims in the Holy Land. They begin to arrive early in December, and generally remain until late in January. They meet in November in Odessa, arriving in all kinds of vehicles and on foot, having journeyed from all parts of the Czar's vast empire. Some of them have been known to walk all the way from the White Sea. At Odessa, when the party is complete, they take ship for Jaffa, the ancient Joppa, whence they travel to Jerusalem. There the Russian government has a hospice, where the pilgrims may rest, free of charge, while they visit the holy places in the city. They set out from Jerusalem in time to reach Jericho on the Saturday before the Feast of Epiphany, which is held on January 6. They encamp there for the night, and, in the morning, the bishop accompanying them, gives his episcopal blessing to the waters of the Jordan. The pilgrims then fill the bottles, cans and other vessels that they have brought with them from distant Russian villages, with the water, which they carry back to be used in baptism and other sacred ceremonies. This done, the pilgrim divests himself of his clothing and puts on the shroud in which he will be buried, and having crossed himself three times, walks down the muddy bank and into the chilly river. Having bathed, they stand again on the bank and dress themselves in the presence of a crowd of jeering Arabs, Turks and Jews, and then sing hymns and weird chants, with which the strange service closes. A correspondent of the London Graphic who witnessed the ceremony and took a picture of the scene, describes the people as being simple-minded, reverent, and utterly indifferent to the scoffs of the spectators. They have evidently a deep-seated belief in the virtues of the Jordan water as a purifying agent; forgetting the warning of the prophet to the people of his day, who were similarly mistaken in supposing that any outward ceremony could remove inward pollution:

Wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? (Jer. 4: 14).

RUSSIAN PILGRIMS BATHING IN THE RIVER JORDAN ON THE FESTIVAL OF THE EPIPHANY.

A Clerical Prospector.

A press dispatch to the New York Sun, from Minneapolis, Minn., gives a remarkable account of a series of experiments with the divining-rod in the discovery of metals. The surprising feature of the story is that the rod is used by a minister of the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church. It appears that the minister, when a young man, in the mining districts of Sweden, discovered that when he held in his hands a wire of the same metal as that contained in the ground over which he walked, he could, by the vibrations of the wire, accurately trace the direction of the veins which were being worked in the mines below. In every instance his tracings were found to correspond with the workings. He regarded the power as merely an interesting fact and did not put it to any practical use, but attended to his ministerial duties. Some years ago he came to the United States and settled in Iowa. His church work had his undivided attention until recently, when some duty took him to Cripple Creek, and he interested himself in seeing if the old power still remained with him. He made several experiments with mines already opened, and as before, was able with the wire to follow the veins of metal as they were known to exist. Since that time he has been in northwest Wisconsin, where he aided some explorers in finding a valuable copper deposit. His services have proved so valuable in other places, and so many men have made large fortunes by following his directions, that the minister has insisted on sharing the profits of the people he helps. The money which sometimes represents as much as a tenth interest in a mine is turned into the treasury of the Synod of his church, and is used for the building of schools, the support of missionaries, etc. Doutless the preacher will not find the same indifference to the information he gives about the location of the precious metals as he has found to the message he delivers about the infinitely more precious possession which Christ compared to a treasure hid in a field.

The which when a man hath found, for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath and buyeth that field (Math. 13:44).

Cells that Think.

Experiments which may lead to important scientific results are being conducted by Dr. Elmer Gates, of Washington, D. C. In describing them to the New York Herald, Dr. Gates says that he wanted to find out whether there was any intelligence in the microscopic cells of which the organs of the human body are composed. The results of his experiments have astonished him, as he thinks they will every student of science. He commenced his experiments with the amœbæ, the velvexes and other protozoa which are found in water. Isolating one of the amœbæ under the microscope he placed a piece of grape sugar near it. As soon as the taste reached it, it moved in the direction of the sugar to get more of it. Having found that it liked the sugar, he placed a piece at the end of a very fine platinum wire, the other end of which touched the amœba. It was so fixed that there was an interval of ten seconds before the sweet taste could travel to the amœba. After five or six repetitions the amœba started for the sugar, the instant the wire touched it, without waiting for the taste to reach it, thus showing that it had the power of associating the touch of the wire with the sugar. This was repeated many times until the amœba grew accustomed to moving after the sugar the moment it was touched by the wire. Then the sugar was left out. The amœba when touched by the wire started as usual after the sugar, but not finding it, did not move after it the next time the wire touched it. The wire was applied again and again but the amœba evidently remembered its recent experience and did not pay any attention to it. The sugar was again introduced and as soon as the sweet taste reached the amœba it moved along the wire to it as at first. This showed that the amœba was capable of being educated, deceived and re-educated. This discovery appears to show that sentient life is not centred in the brain, but pervades the whole body. It will doubtless suggest many new ideas to scientific men, and to the Christian it sheds new light on the precious truth which Christ revealed and Paul impressed on his readers, that believers, as the body of Christ, are all connected by the same divine life.

Whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it. Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular (1 Cor. 12:16, 27).

The Counterfeit Notes.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued an order calling in all the one hundred dollar bills in circulation, which represent in all an aggregate of twenty-eight million dollars. The reason is that a dangerous counterfeit of one of the issues has been discovered. Eight of these spurious notes were found within two days, and it is believed that a considerable number are being circulated. A new issue of genuine notes will be made and the old ones will be destroyed as fast as they reach the Treasury. This is a necessary precaution because the spurious notes are so like the genuine as to deceive even the experts. The portrait of James Monroe, which they bear, is not quite so good as on the genuine notes, but the difference is extremely slight. The counterfeiters appear to have been unable to secure paper of the proper kind with the silk threads running through it, but they have overcome that obstacle by having the counterfeit made of two sheets of extremely thin paper, between which they have sprinkled silk fibre and then neatly pasting them together. So skilfully is the engraving done that, when the genuine and the spurious bills are laid side by side, it is difficult to tell the one from the other. The same difficulty is often experienced by churches in discriminating between the converts and those who merely profess religion with base motives, and are not really converted. And as with the notes, the closer the imitation the more dangerous they are. When they reveal their true character they cause the world to be prejudiced against Christ and his people. But though they succeed in imposing on the Church they cannot enter heaven.

The Lord knoweth them that are his (II Timothy, 2: 19).

A Missing Heiress.

A young man who arrived in this country from Germany recently has spent his time since he landed in going to the theatres, dance-halls, and some of the lowest resorts in and around New York. Some curiosity has been shown as to his object, inasmuch as he displays not the slightest interest in the plays or performances which are usually the attraction to young men who go there, but closely scrutinizes the performers, and when he has seen all of them, quits the place without waiting to see the close of the entertainment. He seemed to be so thoroughly out of harmony with his surroundings at one of these places the other evening that a reporter who had been watching him behaving in the same way in other places of amusement, asked him why he came if such scenes were not to his taste. Then the young German told his story. He is searching for his sister, a girl named Augusta Barth, who disappeared from her home in Hamburg ten years ago, after a quarrel with her mother. The police of that city searched for her for many months, and inquiries were set on foot in other large German cities, but without success. Nothing was heard of her till recently, when a friend of the family in New York wrote that he had seen her in a troupe of women who were doing songs and dances in the music-halls. They were not attached to any particular hall, but appeared to be going from place to place, wherever they could get an engagement. On receiving this news the missing girl's brother came to New York to search for her. He said she had just fallen heir to fifteen thousand dollars, and he wanted to tell her of it and get her to return home. He was amazed to see the number of young men enjoying such performances as he had witnessed. To him they were thoroughly distasteful, but he went because he was anxious to find his sister. He has no doubt of her being willing to leave the life she is leading when she hears that a fortune is awaiting her. The servants of God who go to seek the wanderers with the message that a heavenly inheritance may be had by all who will come to their Father are not always so sure of success. Only too many despise the invitation that is made them.

To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you (I.Peter, 1:4).

Thirteen Years in Captivity.

A white girl about fifteen years old was taken on Jan. 6 to the Children's Home at Sioux Falls, S. D., who has been thirteen years in the hands of the Indians. The facts as reported by the New York Herald are as follows: A missionary who was working among Sitting Bull's Indians some time ago, happened to see a white girl and tried to get into communication with her, but she was jealously guarded and he was not allowed to speak to her. His interest in her, however, was excited and he made inquiries about her from some of the tribe who were friendly to him. One young brave told him that he first remembered seeing the girl when in 1884 the remnants of Sitting Bull's band numbering about two hundred in all, were driven into the Cheyenne River Reservation. The band had at the same time a number of wagons and household goods bearing the name of Russell. He thought they belonged to the child's parents. From statements he had heard, he believed that some Indians made a raid in Montana and coming on a farm house found a woman and child alone there. They bound the woman and took away everything including the child, and she had been with the tribe ever since. Aided by the agency police, the missionary succeeded in getting possession of the girl who has grown a tall beautiful maiden, and has taken her to Sioux Falls. She cannot speak any English but appeared glad to be released from the Indians. She cannot remember the name of her parents. It is thought, however, that they are probably still in Montana and search will be made for them. Though brought up from infancy among the Indians and speaking their language the girl was evidently not assimilated and she was glad to be released from her uncongenial association. It is much to be wished that so much could be said of Satan's captives. The chief difficulty with so many of them is that they have no desire to be delivered until it is imparted to them.

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will. (II. Timothy 2:26).

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Mothers and Grandmothers.

How They Radiate Sunshine in the Home —Grandmamma's Visit.

THE place which a grandmother fills in the hearts of her grandchildren, and which they hold in hers, belong to life's galaxy of beautiful things. In the lives of the little ones, grandmother is "the rose without a thorn;" her visits, the angel's visits, which, were they every day, would yet seem few and far between. Mother must sometimes look a trifle serious—if not stern—for to her belongs government and discipline. Grandma feels that she has served her time at that in raising one family.

On this second growth of her house, these latest flowers of her life, she feels that she has won the hard-earned right of spending only the sunshine of loving smiles. Perhaps, too, her long experience has taught her that little flowers grow best in much sunshine. At any rate, when she comes, sunshine and love come with her. Her daughter, proud to honor such a guest, draws forward the armchair; the little grandson with sturdy care lugs a hassock to her feet. The little baby is asleep on its mother's shoulder; and grandma will not have it waked, though it would surely smile if its eyes should open on that kind face. That lately dethroned king, the baby displaced, is expectant. He knows that good things happen when grandma comes. Mother will be sure to set forth her best dainties, and grandma will be quite sure to see that little folks are helped to their liking—unless they like decidedly too much, when even grandma will have to draw a line and divert appetite with a story. It is not at all improbable that grandma will have brought some "goodies" herself in a mysterious pocket or a benign satin bag. In fact, it passes any mind to predict just what may happen when grandma comes. She will be sure to bring a letter from one of the good aunts or uncles far away, who always remember to send loving messages to little folks. Grandma exacts nothing of her grandbabies—nothing—but they always want to do something for her "so bad," that mother has taught them little ways. They fetch and carry for her; they know that grandmother loves flowers, and if there are any flowers, they beg mother to let them offer these to her.

Perhaps mother will teach the oldest grandson a little speech to say, and then stand behind grandma's chair and prompt him through it. Grandma will be so proud of that speech. Never in all the years to come will any young lady to whom he may offer flowers accept them more graciously, or prize them more. Perhaps as grandma looks on the little throng, a tender mist gathers in her loving eyes. She is thinking of her own young wifehood and motherhood, of the husband who has gone before her, of the time when—

I had a nest-full once of my own—
Ah! happy, happy I!
Right dearly I loved them but when they were grown,
They spread out their wings to fly!

A Plum Pudding in Polar Lands.

An arctic plum pudding at a Polar Christmas party was the novel achievement of Mrs. Peary, who enjoys the proud distinction of having prepared this luxury the first time it has ever been seen and eaten in those frozen regions of the North. In the top of the pudding, one of the party stuck a bit of artificial holly. Mrs. Peary's remarkable feat loses some of its glamour, when we read that she took her puddings in tins. Nevertheless, it remains that she is the first woman who ever shared in a North Pole Expedition, the first woman who ever presided over a North Pole Christmas Party, and the first woman who ever set forth an arctic plum pudding for the palate's delectation. Let men look to their laurels! At this rate, women will find the North Pole first.

Making an Idol.

A missionary in India writes this unique experience: I once saw in one of these villages what I have been told is a rare sight. I saw the village carpenter making a god. The whole scene is exactly described in the forty-fourth chapter of Isaiah—so exactly that the prophet must have seen in Palestine hundreds of years ago. The people had gone to the forest jungle and selected a suitable tree, and sawed the stump the proper length, and hauled it to the village square. It had been roughly squared. The carpenter sat on the ground, a board of moist red clay beside him, and a pair of rude compasses in his hand. He drew circles to represent the head, the upper and lower parts of the body, and the feet, using his finger, dipped in the red clay, for his pencil. The figure was like what I have seen small boys draw on their slates. Then he took his axe and began chipping at the wood. The women came and gathered up the chips, and when the evening came they lit their fires and cooked their bread, using these wood chips as their fuel. I saw some boys creep up and run off with some of the chips and splinters of wood. They went to where the tall tamarind trees stood, and kindled little fires in the angles of the great roots. Then I saw all the village boys run across the squares to the fires, and heard them shouting in Marathi, "Aha, I see a fire; I'll get warm!" It was during the cold, rainy season. Read the forty-fourth chapter of Isaiah and you will find all that described there. With part of the wood they baked bread, and with part they made a fire to warm themselves, and with the rest they made a god.

GRANDMAMMA'S VISIT.

Making Farm Life Attractive.

It is a duty on the part of everyone to beautify and render attractive the rougher portions of nature, and the proper and tasteful disposition of shrubs and plants is one of the most effective means at our command. Says a writer in the Western Rural: What so appeals to the eye of one in passing as the presence of a bit of color formed by a bed of even the commonest flowers; and on the other hand, what is more depressing than a farm house destitute of anything to relieve the barren desolateness of its surroundings, even to the uncultivated eye. The outlay for materials is so very small compared with the returns derived, it would seem no one can afford to neglect so important a matter. Again, the children are taught the care of such things, which is in itself a training school of patient endeavor which will be manifest in all their after lives. The presence of any feature that serves to make a farm home attractive and beautiful to others, must have the same effect on the occupants of the home, and will greatly help to restrain the young people from deserting the farm for the cities that do possess and properly value the effect of such essentials.

A Little Missionary.

The true missionary spirit may be developed in a child at a very tender age. On a recent Sunday a child's gold ring was found in the contribution basket at a Baptist church, in Birmingham, Mich. It seems a special collection had been taken that morning, and a little girl of four, having deposited her contribution at the first collection, had nothing left when the basket appeared the second time but her penny for Sunday School, and being told she must keep that for Sunday School, yet feeling the missionary spirit strong within her, she quietly slipped off her ring and dropped it in, unperceived by any one.

THE MOTHER'S JEWELS.

(Published by request.)

IN schools of wisdom all the day was spent;
His steps at eve the rabbi homeward bent
With homeward thoughts which dwelt upon the wife
And two fair children who adorned his life.
She, meeting at the threshold, led him in,
And with these words preventing, did begin:
"Ever rejoicing at your wished return,
Yet do I most so now, for since the morn
I have been much perplexed and sorely tried Upon one point which you shall now decide.

Some years ago a friend into my care
Some jewels gave—rich, precious gems the were;
And, having placed them in my charge, thi friend
Did after neither come for them nor send;
But left them in my keeping for so long
That now it almost seems to me a wrong
That he should suddenly arrive to-day
And take the jewels that he left away.
What think you? Shall I freely yield ther back,
And with no murmuring?—so henceforth t lack
Those gems myself, which I had learned to se Almost as mine forever—mine in fee."

"What question can be here? Your own tru heart Must needs advise you of the only part;
That may be claimed again which was but len
And should be yielded with no discontent;
Nor, surely, can we find herein a wrong,
That it was left us to enjoy so long."

"Good is the word!" she answered, "may v now,
And evermore that it is good allow!"
And rising, to an inner chamber led;
And there she showed him, stretched upon bed,
Two children pale; and he the jewels knew
Which God had lent him, and resumed ane

The German Princes and their Gift

DURING the recent holidays, mai gifts came to the imperial pa ace at Berlin. The day aft Christmas, the youag princes we entoying the pleasure of showing o another their new treasures. A writer the Ladies' Home Journal gives the interesting facts: "Prince Eitel Friedri invites the Crown Prince to visit his fi water-tight tent, while the latter mounts bicycle of German manufacture. Prin Adalbert puts on his new snowsho which he would greatly like to try at on in the park; and beside him his young brother, Prince August, turns the leav of an illustrated book of the Berlin Exh bition of Industrial Arts, to which made a visit. Prince Oscar mounts t tin soldiers over the strongly-fortifi citadel of papier mache which Prin Joachim is preparing to attack with l splendid artillery and its nickel canno the dried peas already rattle against t leaden gates of the fortress. Marriageable Ages.

In different countries, the marriageal age varies greatly. In Austria a "mai and "woman" are supposed to be capal of conducting a home of their own fr the ages of fourteen. In Germany t man must be at least eighteen years age. In France the man must be eighte and the woman fifteen; in Belgium t same ages. In Spain the intended husba must have passed his fourteenth year, a the woman her twelfth. In Hungary, f Roman Catholics, the man must be fo teen years old and the woman twelve; f Protestants, the man must be eighteen a the woman fifteen. In Greece the m must have seen at least fourteen summ and the woman twelve. In Portugal boy of fourteen is considered marriageal and a woman of twelve. In Russia a Saxony they are a little more sensible, a a youth must refrain from entering i matrimony till he can count eighteen yea and the woman till she can count sixte In Switzerland men from the age of fo teen and the women from the age t twelve are allowed to marry. In Turk any youth and maid who can walk pr erly and can understand the necess religious service are allowed to be uni for life.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

ENLARGED SELF-APPRAISEMENT.

SOLOMON declared there was more hope for a fool than for a man who had an aggravated estimate of himself. If some people would only take down the scaffolding of show and display, and stand forth in their real size, the difference between appearance and reality would be as great as that suggested in the amusing incident which comes to us from the mother country.

When the late Princess Mary of Teck first became stout, says an English journal, she went for the celebrated Banting. She was surprised to see that he was still extremely bulky, and after a few simple preparatory remarks, he said: "But your system has not made you very thin, Mr. Banting." "Allow me, madam," said Banting; and, proceeding to unbutton his coat, he disclosed a large wire structure over which the garment fitted. Inside was the real Banting, incased in another coat. "This, madam," said he, pointing with pardonable satisfaction to his cage, "was my size before I commenced dieting." He then nimbly disembarrassed himself of his framework, and stood before the royal lady exhibiting his slender figure! Apparently the interview led to nothing but amusement, for the good Duchess of Teck remained very stout to the end of her days.

Elasticity of Conscience.

The elasticity which many respectable people, who are honest about most matters, show in regard to the appropriation of public property to their personal uses, has often been remarked. When such people are deceived and duped in their thievery, all are willing to laugh.

On the posts of one of the old beds in the Washington mansion in Mount Vernon are small glass knobs with sockets drilled into them, which fit little spikes, but do not fasten on. It is perfectly natural for visitors to place their hands upon the knobs, and those who do immediately perceive that they can be taken off. The next step is to slip them quietly into the pocket and carry them away as relics of the sacred place. Although an attendant is employed to watch this room, there are so many visitors that it is impossible for him to prevent such pilfering, and the glass knobs have to be replaced two or three times a week during the busy season, but that costs very little trouble and expense. A factory near Pittsburg turns them out for thirty cents a gross, and the superintendent is in the habit of ordering a barrel of them every Spring. There are several thousand of these glass knobs scattered over the world, in museums and private collections of mementos and historical relics. Many more are doubtless concealed for reasons of conscience and fear of discovery, but the guilty persons need have no concern. The original knobs that belonged to the bed are safely laid away in a vault.

The World Growing Smaller.

The way telegraph and steamship and locomotive are compressing the world into one little neighborhood, so that the very dogs in the street have an interest in what is going on thousands of miles away was impressed on my mind while reading that there are, at this moment, men from British Columbia in Newfoundland in search of Newfoundland dogs trained for hauling purposes, intending to use them on the Klondike trails in Alaska during the coming spring. These men expect to transport a thousand dogs for these far northern stage routes.

All Our Needs.

God supplies us according to our needs if we live in harmony with his purpose. If we cease to have certain needs he does not waste provision on us. If by any emergency the need comes back, the supply is again provided.

One of the most interesting incidents in Dr. Nansen's new book, "The Farthest North," is the description of his dramatic meeting with Jackson on Franz Josef Land, and his reference to the manner in which the wild man's sharpened senses discovered the fragments of the soap which the civilized European had used in his morning ablutions. Dr. Nansen declares that he could smell that soap as plainly as if it had been a strong perfume. Johanson, his redoubtable companion, also noted the same thing when he came up. For weeks their sense of smell was wonderfully acute. As they approached Jackson's hut they could smell everything it contained and give a sort of inventory of its stores without entering. As the days passed by under their changed circumstances this acuteness wore off, and they became quite normal in that as in other respects. The incidents aroused the wonder in Nansen's mind whether if a man were to live wild for a few years his sense of smell would not become quite as keen as that of an animal.

The Imperial Soul.

Every person is born into the world with an imperial power over his own nature. The power to choose and to will makes an emperor of every one of us. Nobody can take our crown from our heads except our own hands.

Every year there is an emperor crowned at Rome. The coronation, which, of course, takes place in a church, does not stir the world to its depths, though there are doubtless many dwellers in Rome who have an intense interest in the matter. "The Emperor" is the title given to the boy who distinguishes himself above all others in his knowledge of Christian doctrine, or the Catechism during the year. Vincenzo Postacchini is the lad who this year was crowned emperor. One of his privileges is to visit the Pope, and the several cardinals, who give him presents. This year an impostor got up a train of princes, which are a feature of the new dignity, and went around collecting the perquisites of the position from the cardinals. His perfidy was soon discovered, however, and he was disgraced and punished.

Dangers to the Home Nest.

The dangers to the home are beyond number. Bad books, poisonous newspapers, vile art that stares from the billboards, and many other deadly bullets are hurled at the home nest. God bless the brave men and women who watch over their children as God's shepherds with honest hearts.

At Cranbrook, in Dent, England, there is a rifle range which has been used by the local volunteers for rifle practice, and at a distance of about six feet behind the targets there has been built a large stack of fagots which serve to stop the spent bullets. This last year a pair of nightingales selected the stack as the site for their nest, which they built in the interior at a distance of about fifteen inches from the surface of the front facing the targets, about four feet from the ground, and almost in a direct line with the centre of one of the targets, which are constructed of canvas and allow the bullets to pass through directly into the fagots. In that situation the birds built their nest, hatched their eggs, and reared their young, literally in the midst of a storm of bullets, one of which ultimately proved fatal to one of the young songsters. The wood of the fagots was often splintered in every direction around the nest, but the little brown parents never for an hour left their beleaguered home, not even when an unluckly bullet slew one of the fledglings, but fearlessly and faithfully brought up their surviving young ones, and flew away with them at last, for a sunnier home for the winter.

The Tide that Sweeps to Fortune.

It makes all the difference in the world whether one is alert and wide awake to take advantage of the incoming tide of privilege and opportunity which God brings to us.

A tidal phenomenon occurred in one of the rivers of New Brunswick recently, of which the wise water men can give no explanation. The young flood rushed up the river like a tidal wave, with no easterly storm outside to account for its tremendous energy. The fish came in great masses borne along helplessly by the rushing tide. Fishermen who were quick enough and shrewd enough to haul in their nets at once made wonderful catches, and profited enormously by this strange tide; but the fishermen who neglected the pivotal moment saw their nets dragged away, the stakes lifted out of the mud and their entire outfit swept under the ice and carried off.

THE CONVICT GRAVES ON "SING SING'S WIND-BLOWN HILL."

THE PRISON CEMETERY.*

THERE'S an upland field by the Hudson stream,
Where the grass grows rank and tall;
A place of dread to childish hearts
When evening shadows fall.
The laugh grows mute, the voice is hushed;
It is passed with quickened tread—
That little spot on God's green earth
Where lie the convict dead.

How many lives that promised fair
In boyhood's early time,
Lie stranded here, poor, battered hulks!
On the wreck-strewn shores of crime.
But those little mounds that dot the earth,
And the grass that o'er them grows,
May cover hearts more sinned against
Then sinning—Ah, He knows!

The hope of many a household fair—
Yes, many a mother's pride—
Lies here unknown, forgotten,
By the Hudson's rolling tide.
God grant that in their stormy lives
They did some deed of love,
That will balance all their errors
In the Book of Life above.

God help the many anxious hearts,
In near and far-off homes,
Who wait with tender wistfulness,
For the one who never comes!
Who are listening for the footsteps
That forever more are still,
And watching for the form that lies
On Sing Sing's wind-blown hill.

The Lurking Sin.

Sin lurks in the darkness, and, sometimes clothes itself in what seems harmless, and even friendly, to us:

A lady living at Port Jervis, New York, was attacked one evening by a wild cat. She went out on the terrace back of her house, which is situated at the foot of a mountain in this village, to get a tablecloth. Seeing the dim outlines of what she supposed was her pet cat, she put out her hand to stroke it. The animal sprang upon her, biting her hand to the bone, and lacerating her arm with its claws and teeth. Her cries brought to her assistance the house dog, and the wild cat flew up the mountain side.

Abundance, but No Waste.

There is no sign of stinginess in God's universe. There is abundance everywhere, but nothing is allowed to go to waste. The way the heavenly care-taker brings beauty out of decay and death is illustrated in the creation of amber.

The main source of the amber supply is the coast of the Baltic Sea. It is fossil gum, originally the exudation of a species of pine tree, now extinct. The immense forests of amber pine underwent their natural downfall and decay. The resin of the wood accumulated in large quantities in bogs and ponds and in the soil of the forest. Where the coast was slowly sinking, the sea, by and by, covered the land, and the amber, which had been gradually hardening, was at last deposited at the ocean bottom. More than two hundred specimens of extinct life, animal and vegetable, have been found imbedded in amber specimens. Some of these specimens are so curiously beautiful as to be almost priceless, and one English collector has a cabinet of them which is valued at a half million of dollars. One piece embalms a lizard about eight inches long, a little jeweled monster, perfect in its form and coloring, which has no like in anything existing now. Indeed, in many instances, science is able solely through this medium, to study details of animal life which perished from the earth many hundred thousand years ago. There are flies preserved with wings poised, as if for flight, where the prismatic sheen glowing through the yellow sepulchre is as brilliant as if they were floating alive in the sunshine.

Coining Better Ideas of Life.

That nobler ideas of brotherhood and that peace and good will are growing in the world in spite of all the rumors of wars, and evidences of human jealousies, is seen everywhere.

The new French piece of fifty centimes has a fine conception of France in the allegorical figure of La Semeuse, and perhaps the allegory will become more and more the device of future coinage. The artist has represented the French Republic as the sower who went forth sowing "throwing from the full hands the future harvest into the furrows of the world—the seed which will flourish generations to come." France wears a Phrygian cap, her hair and garments float free in the breeze, and the sun is rising at her right hand. The attitude is admirable in its energy, freedom, and power. On the reverse side, the symbolism—a simple olive branch—speaks of peace and good will.

Care for the Children.

A warm Christian sympathy filling the heart of childhood in its tender days is the surest prophecy of a strong Christian character in later years.

The farmers in Iceland used to rob the nests of the eider ducks of their precious down twice each season. The mother duck supplying it each time from her own body, and the third time the drake gave his white down, and this was allowed to remain. The farmers found after awhile, however, that this did not pay, as under such treatment the little birds did not thrive well. Now they never take the down until after the little ducks are hatched and get a fair start. It has been found that the little birds thrive better and increase faster when they are allowed as nature meant them to. So now the mothers are no longer obliged to strip themselves of all their down to furnish their despoiled nests. Sometimes, if the quantity be very great, a little may be taken, but enough must be left to cover the eggs when the duck leaves her nest for food.

Usefulness the Test of Life.

It is not the weight of a man in avoirdupois that counts, but the number of pounds he lifts in helping on the world's progress. It is not the size of the hive, but the quality and quantity of the honey that comes out for use on the table that tells the value of the bees.

There is a natural beehive in Mendocino County, California. It is a rift in the face of a cliff which leads into a large cave where myriads of bees make their home. One cannot go very close to it, because at all hours of the day a swarm of bees hover about the mouth, hundreds of feet in all directions. During the summer, dead birds can always be seen on the ground around the mouth of this giant hive. They have been stung to death while attempting to fly through the swarm of insects. Men have sometimes incased themselves in suits of leather with wire screens about the head, and forced their way into the cave, but have not been able to bring away any great amount of honey.

Black Belt Sketches.

Characteristic Scenes and Incidents
On a Missionary Plantation in Alabama.

COTTON-FIELD WORKERS ON THE MISSION PLANTATION.

I.

"REMEMBER her when she stood up among all us black folks and gave her 'termination. She said she didn't want to go to heaven alone. She wanted all her chillen to go with her (that is what she called her scholars). She wanted her crown full of stars, and she wanted to meet every one of us up there. That was one woman I loved. I loved her just as if I had been a white woman like her. I sure want to see her."

This was said of Mrs. Mittie B. Richards, that woman of rare Christian culture and heroism, who, after ten years of missionary experience in Africa and expecting ultimately to return there, gave a year of loving and devoted service to the colored people on the plantations of the black belt through the Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama. She loved God's children everywhere, and especially did her heart go out towards those who needed help. That is why this tender tribute of affection from one of the members of Calvary Church, where this gifted woman loved and labored. It was touching to see the tender interest and tearful attention on that memorial Sunday when her letter from from far away-Africa was read to them, though she herself had passed "within the gates."

When, at a critical time in the history of the Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama, it seemed best for Mr. Curtis and myself to leave the collecting field and the home in Oberlin, Ohio, and go alone to the plantations, God put it into the heart of this earnest Christian to share with us the vicissitudes of plantation life, as later on, at his bidding, our faithful friend, Miss S. A. Calhoun, of Buffalo, completed the quartette of pioneers in plantation work.

Of one of our parishioners Mrs. Richards writes thus:

"This morning there walked into our sitting room a neighbor whom I would like to introduce to you—an old colored man, with white hair and trembling steps. He was clothed in extremely ancient garments which were utterly guiltless of buttons. A string across one shoulder, fastened at the ends with bits of wood where buttons ought to have been, prevented gravity from robbing him of part of his covering, while another string did duty on his coat, which coat was fortunately so large that no amount of extra exertion could have any stress upon its tattered particles. Shoes tied on with strings wrapped around them and two old felt hats completed his attire. The two hats were worn, apparently, in hopes that the holes in one might not come in conjunction with those in the other. A peculiar odor over all informed us that soap and water were not a part of the furnishings of his home.

"'Good morning, uncle. How do you do to-day?'

"'Well, jes tolable, missus; have a great pain and gon' feeling here,' placing his hand in the region of his stomach. 'Thought you might be able to give me some medicine.'

"'How long have you been troubled in this way?'

"'Well, nigh on two weeks.'

"We hasten to get him some bitter medicine, the nastiness of which pleases him greatly.

"'That's jes' the stuff I'se been wantin'. I know I'll be better now.'

"Then he proceeds to inform us that he thinks his trouble has been caused by want of proper food, since he has had nothing to eat for two weeks. This statement, of course, we take with some modification.

"'You are a pretty old man, uncle.'

"'Yes, I'se two hunderd yea's old.'

"'What? You do not mean two hundred?'

"'Well, no, missus; I means one hunderd and two. I'se one hunderd and two yea's old, if not olda.'

"'Who takes care of you?'

"'My two boys.'

"'How old are they?

"'Nigh about twenty yeah.'

"'They are not your own boys, are they? Do you not mean that they are your grandsons?'

"'No; they is my own boys.'

"'Your second wife's children, are they?'

"'Laws, no; my seventh wife's chillen. I has seven on 'em.'

"'I don't understand. How could you have seven wives all alive?'

"'Well, you see, my business is ditchin'. I has to trabel 'round mighty far, so I has jes' to leave 'em behind and git new ones, you understand.'

"'Tell me about your wives. When were you married first?'

"'Dat were long afore de stars fell. I were a slave dem days in North Carliny. We was married three yeah and had two little fellers. My wife 'longed to another masser, and he moved off and took her and the chillens with him. I never seed them since, 'cept jes once. I'd been livin' long o' my second wife two yeah when masser sold me away. I'd had my third wife nigh on to a yeah, when a trader came 'long and bought us both and brought us heah to Alabama. She were jes throwd in to make up a good measure like, to fill out de gang. I were getting a little rheumatic den, and dis heah lef knee was all drawed up like, so dat I couldn't straighten it out like t'other. When the trader was fixin' us up to sell, he sat on dis heah knee with all his might to try to straighten it out, but it were no good. Den he gave me thirty lashes onter my skin with a flat strap so as not to break de hide, and tole me if I didn't stand up mighty straight and hide my broken arm under my coat, and try to show off well to de man what were comin' to buy me, he'd give me a hundred more lashes, you understand.'

"'You say, uncle, that you are a teacher?'

"'Yes, I'se been a teacher in de church for a mighty long time,' was the answer.

"'Do you know how to read?'

"'Not a word—only in His Book.'

"'Can you read the Bible, then?'

"'Well, I dun know as I can 'zackly read it, but dar is a right smart lot of verses dat I can repeat behind.'

"Such are the blind leaders who are attempting to lead the blind. Unless we reach out to them a guiding hand, how can they help but both fall into the ditch? Shall we shut our ears to these needy ones while we spend our money for that which is not bread and our labor for that which satisfieth not?"

While we have instances like the foregoing which give us the dark side of the picture, and spur us to effort by the very wretchedness of it all, there are others, hundreds in number, that are, by what they show of actual accomplishment, mighty incentives to labor.

A TYPICAL HOUSE ON THE MISSION FARM.

THE FERRY ACROSS CAHABA RIVER, ALA.

A young colored woman of our acquaintance, when she finds that the one to whom she is engaged, will occasionally drink whiskey, breaks the engagement rather than to risk her life and happiness in the hands of so unsafe a keeper. She cooks out and lays up a little money. She is wooed and won by a young man of excellent habits and remarkable industry. They are married.

The bit of advice given to them on the wedding day by an old man—a stranger—who chanced to pass by, is treasured up and faithfully followed. "Young people," he said, "the way to get on is to lay down the half of what you make each day. If you earn a dime, lay by a nickel and don't touch it if you have to go hungry."

A valuable piece of ground is bought and improved and a house built and furnished, the organ not being forgotten, on which the husband, having a natural ear for music, plays well. Another lot is added and paid for, and an enlargement of the house planned, but reverses come. The husband meets with an accident on account of which he is laid by from work for nearly three months. The wife, not being daunted, takes in washing and ironing, gives table board to a family, and by careful management is enabled to make ends meet. And now, at this time she has money in hand to meet the expense of lessons in a night school, and the fee for the W. C. T. U., the church and the society.

On the occasion of our Christmas at Olivet our centenarian comes to view again as will be seen in the following from Mrs. Richard's pen:

"Our first Christmas on the plantation has come and gone, bringing with it a variety of new experiences.

"In company with quite a number of the people we crossed the Cahaba river in the ferry boat, meeting on the other side the people of the plantation where the church is located. At 2 P. M. the Christmas tree presented quite a gay appearance, decked out in bandana handkerchiefs, red apples tied on by the stems, little flags and a variety of presents sent by a dear old lady in Chicago. The brilliant autum leaves which we had gathered on our way over helped to brighten up the room and when all was ready and the door was opened an interesting and motley crowd pressed into the room, filling every available spot. Among others was my old friend whom I have introduced to you. His clothing had evidently seen hard times since I saw him last and his shoes were entirely gone, his feet being bound up in old rags, but his spirit was undaunted still. He marched directly up in front and kept up the interest of the meeting by frequent exclamations during the addresses and prayers, and by waring a white handkerchief (a Christmas present) on his head while they were singing, and shouting out in commanding tones, "Sing, sing up lou" though some of us who had not learned to appreciate that kind of music, thought that they had already ahout reached the limit of their capacity in that direction. In the course of the conversation after the meeting we discovered that he had grown two years older since we saw him last month, he being now 104 years old. Realizing that we had many with whom, perhaps, we would never sit an ordinary church service, we tried to leave with them some thought that might be a means of leading them to a better life. Four of those that were with us in the afternoon, came into our night school for the first time that evening and we felt that even so soon our Christmas tree had begun to bear fruit.

Grateful Oorfa Orphans.

Touching Letter from Our Little Armenian Wards under Miss Shattuck's Care. Prayers for their Benefactors.

MANY of our readers who have been personally interested, in the work of rescuing and caring for the rmenian orphans at Oorfa, the scene of e great massacre, will be gratified to ad the following letter from Miss Co-nna Shattuck's young charges. The or-ans have united in a voluntary offering thanks to their CHRISTIAN HERALD ends, which they have forwarded to us, d as the document is in Armenian, their tive tongue, we give translation below:

"Benevolent Friends:—For the kind-ss you have shown us, that of providing r support, we are quite unable to find nguage to express the depth of our feel-g. You are peculiarly our supporters, r in all respects you have extended your nd to us. As is the shining of the sun the wrecked sailor, so have you been to r appreciative hearts.

"We entreat for you all the blessings of od. that in all your affairs he guide you, d that he reward you richly from his eavenly treasury and comfort you by his oly Spirit.

"We remain your graciously favored lopted children in Oorfa, Dec 7, 1897, iss Shattuck's Orphanage."

Miss Shattuck writes concerning the ogress of affairs at the orphanage; she ys: No snow, but a week of extremely old weather for Oorfa, which, being so idden, many of the feeble were pros-ated by it. A few of the children under r care had sore throat, but in general it rved to put the roses in their cheeks, d make them more stirring. We have ree new children, yes three, since last I rote. Two are brothers, sons of the regorian priests killed. The poor moth-worked at embroidery to help support e family, but fell a victim to Consump-on, as many of the widows have, and cently died. We had offered to re-eve her of some of her children, but she id, "while I live, if possible, I wish to keep them by me; later, we know not hat may come."

When she was near death she said, "give edros to Miss Shattuck," and with a ayer on her lips, she passed away. The dest sister was engaged when her father as yet living, and after a year had passed, e went from her own mother to her other-in-law, the latter also a new widow d bereft of five grown sons by the awful assacre. Her face grows whiter as the onths go by.

A little later, they came asking us to ke the other, also. They called the ild. "Paragam:" we thought it pretty, it means "friends," in Armenian. After few days it was told us it is not "Para-m," but "Paagam," which means Baalim!" Now I am going to send to the urch records and know certainly the ild's name. The twistings this people n put into names is only equalled by the extraordinary turns in their singing.

Friday last, was a special holiday and of course we had to plan a little for our big family of boys. I had a fine lot of pictures that had been sent us in papers and otherwise, and some scrap-books were waiting to be filled. We rejoice with the people, who, having given more than 350 children to be cared for by foreigners, can have this group as their own special charge.

Our boys have been moved to pen you a few lines themselves, which I am happy to enclose just as they gave it to me. It was the suggestion of one of our boys.

CORINNA SHATTUCK.

THE RIGHTEOUS GOD.

That the Christian was not under the law but under grace, was a fact that Paul always kept prominent in his teaching; but he took care that the fact should never be used as an excuse for sin. In the passage connected with the Topic (Rom. 2: 2—11) he shows that God has not changed his character, nor lowered the standard of righteousness he requires in his people. The freedom that grace gives, was to be a reason for deeper and better righteousness than the law required. As Christ told his followers, their righteousness must exceed that of the Pharisees, otherwise they could not enter into the kingdom of God. As a father treats his grown-up son on a different plane from that on which he treated him as a boy and uses reasoning and expostulation in place of arbitrary command, so God under the Christian dispensation, deals with men as sons, not as servants, but he expects a fuller and better obedience. The righteous God loves righteousness and hates iniquity. The man that doeth evil under this dispensation must expect tribulation and anguish, as did the man who did evil under the old dispensation. The principles of God's government are eternal and are not changed under the Gospel. This fact is too often lost sight of in the glorious doctrine of the Atonement. People often talk as if in forgiving sin through Christ, God had made a compromise, and were more lenient toward sin than in bygone ages. An attentive reading of the New Testament, however, shows that it was because of God's unchangeable hostility to sin that Christ laid down his life. He died to save men from their sins. No fact is more emphatically stated than the one that the only way to be like God is to be righteous, and only in being like him are we fitted for his presence.

Daniel Webster's Oxen.

The great statesman had simple tastes. He was always very fond of oxen and was as good a judge of them as could anywhere be found and he knew all his own by name.

On his return from Washington they were among the first objects of his thought, and, sometimes, after entering the house and greeting the members of his family, he would, without sitting down, go out to the barn to see these dumb members of his larger family, going from one to the other, patting and stroking their faces, and feeding them from his hands. Equally fond was he of showing them to his guests. On one occasion, as he stood thus with a friend, feeding them with ears of corn, his son, Fletcher, amused himself by playing with the dog. "My son," said Mr. Webster, "You do not seem to care much for this. For my part I like it. I would rather be here than in the Senate. I find it better company." About a week before his death, he had them driven up into the lane before the house, in order that he might see them for the last time. Such glimpses as these are worth whole volumes in revealing to us the real character of the man.

What is Scott's Emulsion?

It is a strengthening food and tonic, remarkable in its flesh-forming properties. It contains Cod-Liver Oil emulsified or partially digested, combined with the well-known and highly prized Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, so that their potency is materially increased.

What Will It Do?

It will arrest loss of flesh and restore to a normal condition the infant, the child and the adult. It will enrich the blood of the anemic; will stop the cough, heal the irritation of the throat and lungs, and cure incipient consumption. We make this statement because the experience of twenty-five years has proven it in tens of thousands of cases. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

INDIA'S THANKS.

Testimonies of the Gratitude of a Devoted People for the Money and Food which Saved Thousands of Lives.

IT gives us great pleasure to publish this week the portrait of one of the most distinguished and most devoted workers whom we have been privileged to aid in the relief of the famine sufferers of India—Dr. William Osborn Ballantine, of Rahuri. Dr. Ballantine disregarded, with his characteristic modesty, our request for his portrait, but his brother, Dr. John Winthrop Ballantine, of Ridgefield, Conn., has kindly lent us a photograph, which we reproduce on this page. "From early morning till late at night," Dr. Ballantine wrote us, during the worst days of the famine, "the driveway past our gate is crowded—the aged, who, after all their years of hardship and scarcity are now dying of starvation; mothers with little, helpless children pinched with hunger; other children with neither father nor mother, their ceaseless crying ringing in my ears as I write—when I tell you of all this you will understand that we are thankful enough to the good people in the homeland whose gifts you have forwarded to us. Every dollar we have received from you is regarded as a sacred trust, and is used to do the utmost good possible. Thousands of lives have been saved by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund."

It was a pleasure to help a man so conscientious and so self-sacrificing, to continue his good work of saving the lives of the suffering people, and we are authorized in his name to thank every contributor to the Fund for the help he was thus enabled to render to the helpless people. We are sure that we are only carrying out his wish in reminding them that Christ, whom he serves, recognized the service done by our readers, and was pleased to see them feeding the starving in his name.

Dr. Ballantine is a son of one of the veteran missionaries of the American Board, and was born in India. His scholarly father prepared him for college in his own home in Ahmednagar. It was a place to inspire a young man by its associations, for, before becoming the residence of a herald of the Cross, it had been part of a Mohammedan mosque. The young man came to America and studied theology in a Massachusetts college, and then took a course of medical training, which he supplemented by a year in a New York hospital. He then offered himself to the American Board for service in India, and was assigned to Rahuri. For nearly twenty-five years he has been laboring among the people, making his life a blessing to their souls and bodies.

We regret to learn from a letter received last week from Dr. Duncan, of the Baptist Missionary Union, that the famine is pressing very sorely on the people in the fields occupied by Baptist missionaries in India. While nearly every other district in India is rejoicing in a moderate harvest, the Nellore and adjacent districts, where for many years Baptist missionaries have done most faithful and earnest work, have not been visited by the monsoon, and the ground is consequently barren. We sent during the past year $8,000 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund to the twelve Baptist missionaries in that field, so that they were not altogether unprepared to meet the calamity, and we trust the Interdenominational Missionary Committee, of which Bishop Thoburn is Chairman, has still some funds available from the $90,000 remitted to it by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with which to supplement the resources of these devoted men. Dr. Manley, Dr. Brock, Dr. Clough and other well-known missionaries are working under the auspices of the American Baptist Union there, and we may be sure will do all that man can do to relieve the terrible distress.

It was a pleasure to receive last week a visit from Dr. Lambert of the Mennonite Church, who came to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office on his return from India to tell us of the gratitude of the people for all that our readers have done for them. Dr. Lambert kindly served on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Committee during his stay in India and rendered valuable assistance to the resident missionaries in distributing the funds and the grain from the City of Everett. He concurs in the statement made by Dr. Hobbs and the missionaries in India, that the gifts of the readers of this journal were the means of saving many thousands of lives. Dr. Lambert went to India as the bearer of a large sum of money contributed by the members of the Mennonite Church. He personally visited the most afflicted districts and supplied the missionaries of all denominations with funds for feeding the starving people. In looking over the book of receipts which the missionaries signed for the funds Dr. Lambert placed in their hands we saw some very pathetic inscriptions. One missionary who also received large sums from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, wrote that before the welcome help came the death-rate in his district, which was nominally under fifty in the thousand, was forced by starvation up to the appalling figure of 627 in the thousand. Dr. Lambert speaks in the highest terms of the devotion of the missionaries, and is full of hope for the spiritual results of the work that has been done. He says the people are deeply grateful; they understand that the relief came from Christian sources, as well as was administered by Christian hands, and they will in the future give a more ready ear to the missionaries' teaching. He found that this result applied more particularly to the American work. The relief distributed by the English missionaries was regarded as in part a duty, England being responsible for the government of India; but when relief came from America the people naturally inquired why America helped them, and then learned that the spirit of Christ which had prompted English gifts had also moved the hearts of Christians in America to compassion. Thus as never before Christ has been practically preached in India in a way that can be understood.

A WISE VOW.

Few Christians are justified in making the vow Job is represented as making in the passage chosen to illustrate the Topic (Job 27: 3—6). When affliction comes upon us and we examine ourselves we are liable to discover that we have very little righteousness to hold fast, that our heart does reproach us and tell if our integrity were removed, we should not feel its loss. Happy is that man whose conscience like Job's utters no accusations. Perhaps if Job had been approached in a different manner, he would not have uttered such words. But when his three friends undertook to prove to him that his crushing troubles were a punishment meted out to him by God for some secret sin of a particularly heinous character, he was naturally put on the defensive. He knew that he had not been guilty of crimes so vile as to call for such suffering. He could not account for the heavy trials but he was sure they were not sent as punishment. Very little was left to him but he still retained his character and he would not allow his friends to take it away. "God forbid," he said, "that I should justify you." There was no truth in their cruel aspersions and Job would not admit that there was. The world esteemed him a good and upright man; his friends implied that he must be wicked in secret, in fact a hypocrite; they estimated that God who knows all things was cognizant of his hidden sins and his troubles were a proof of the fact. God will not let such trials fall upon a good man. No wonder Job was indignant. In the time of trouble it is well if we can take the same attitude. The sting is taken out of the suffering when we have nothing in our own conduct to deplore. That man is to be envied, rather than pitied, who can look up to God, when he is poor and sick and bereaved and can say, "Thou knowest that I love and serve thee and that I hate sin and seek holiness." With such a consciousness in his heart he can bear his trials patiently and glorify God in the fire.

For Christ and the Church.

The motto of the Christian Endeavor Society is appropriately chosen as the topic for the Society's anniversary. "What shall we do?" is the question the members are invited to answer. There are many things we might do, but judging from the passages selected as the keynote for the meditation (Ex. 35: 20-29 and Luke 21: 33), we presume the committee intend the question to take the form, "How much shall we give?" It is well that the duty of giving should be inculcated earnestly and persistently, for the aggressive work of the church will flag, if money is not provided to pay the necessary expenses. Money is needed to establish Sunday schools in churchless sections and to send missionaries to proclaim the Gospel to the people who have never heard the joyful sound. It is needed to maintain our own churches at home and to support the hard-working ministers who devote themselves to the cause of Christ. It is needed for missions in our great cities, and for the philanthropic enterprises which the church must initiate and maintain if it would be worthy of the name of Christ. There is no escape from this solid work of money raising, on which much of the activity and energy of the church depends.

It may be hoped, however, that the effort Christian Endeavor Society will not make this duty, important as it is, its chief work. It has something better to do than to see that its members send their pennies regularly to the missionary societies. If the spirituality of the people is developed, the giving spirit will not be lacking. It has always been observed that those who are the best workers and the most consecrated helpers, give as freely of their money as they do of their time and labor. The society may do a good work, too, in influencing the churches, so that there will never be any doubt in the mind of a pastor as to the interests of Christ and the interests of the church being identical. It is sometimes difficult to realize the fact when one is in a fashionable church, with its luxurious appointments and its expensive choir, and see how the poor, whom Christ called his friends, are treated there. In a recent meeting of poor working men, one of the speakers referred to the lack of sympathy there had been in the churches for the cause under consideration, and there were three hearty groans for the churches; but when a little later, at the same meeting, the name of Christ, who loved the poor, was mentioned, there was an outburst of cheering. The distinction these people made between Christ and the church, left a sad impression on the mind of at least one who witnessed it.

A Willard Y Settlement.

Opened in Boston Under Auspices of the Y. W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts.

OUR readers, always glad to hear of every good word and work, will be interested to read of the opening in Boston, on Nov. 16, of the Willard Y Settlement, 11 Myrtle street. On that day the house was thronged with visitors, who eagerly inspected the eighteen rooms and even the fruit-closet and laundry in the basement, with constant exclamations of keen appreciation and unstinted praise. At 2 o'clock, under the auspices of the Suffolk County W. C. T. U., an echo meeting was held in the spacious double parlors, Mrs. C. A. Ferguson, county president, presiding, when reports were given from the World's and National Conventions by some of the delegates who attended. Delegates from many Unions were present, and much interest was shown in the bright and instructive addresses and in the fortunes of the new enterprise. From 7.30 to 8.15 in the evening the reception committee, consisting of the officers of the institution, had occasion to shake hands with hosts of interesting and interested people, who so completely filled the reception room, back parlor, store, office, corridors and stairways, that there was hardly standing room. At 8.15 the dedicatory services began with the singing of the State song, "Rock of Liberty," followed by a reading of the Scriptures by the Rev. Dr. Perrin, and a prayer, in which he dedicated the home to God, asking that it might be made a blessing to humanity. Music and addresses by distinguished speakers followed. The State President spoke of the influence her Christian home had had upon her life and how dependent we all were, even the white-haired ones, upon our homes to enable us to carry on the battle of life—more, even, than we realized; and, hence, how absolutely necessary that the young especially should have a home, a place where they can come and unburden their breaking hearts, feeling sure of sympathy and help. That, she believes, is just what this home is to be.

Rev. C. L. D. Younkin emphasized the economic side of the institution, stating that no girl could secure a decent room and good board in Boston at less than $4.50 a week, and said if its projectors could work with him at the North End Mission and see how hard it is to recover girls started on the downward way, they would be more than ever glad of this home which takes them while yet on the upward course and prevents them from falling. He thought it very appropriate that this should be a State work rather than supported by the Boston Y alone, as it would be a home for more girls who had come from the country than for Boston girls.

The home is simply but tastefully fitted up, is in an ideal location, with pleasant surroundings; sunny, attractive, and affording opportunity for social work. In addition to the large home dining room, there is a public lunch room which, it is hoped, will be a source of revenue for the support of the work. There is also a little store-room where various dainty products of feminine industry will be on sale. The Sunny reading-room and class room, with book-case, writing-desk, piano and magazines, as well as the bed-rooms on the upper floors, are attractive and homelike.

Dr. Hunter's Book on the Lungs.

Progress of Medical Science.

A LITTLE book, published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Lung Diseases. Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption are fully explained, their differences shown, and their cure by medicated air inhalations pointed out.

Dr. Hunter is the oldest lung specialist in America, having devoted his life, since 1851, to the special study and cure of Lung Complaints. He was the first physician to proclaim the local nature of Consumption, and to prove that it, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrhal Phthisis, endanger life solely by strangling the breathing power of the Lungs.

Dr. Hunter's treatment is applied directly to the bronchial tubes and air-cells of the lungs by inhalation. He was the father and founder of this treatment, the inventor of the first inhaling instrument ever employed in medical practice, and the discoverer of the only germicidal inhalants which have proved their power to destroy the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs, and cure consumption. In add tion to applying the healing and cleansing balms to the lungs three times a day by his inhaling instruments, he anoints the chest with antiseptic oils, which surround the body with a zone of medicated air, and charges the chamber in which the patient sleeps with purifying antiseptics, thus keeping up a healing action on the lungs day and night.

This is what is meant by inhalation treatment scientifically applied to the cure of weak and diseased lungs. No other treatment in the world is so direct, common-sense, and successful. It is not sold as a nostrum, but prescribed for each case according to the nature of the disease and state of the patient.

Dr. Hunter's book contains many letters from prominent people all over the country, who have been successfully treated by him, and will be sent free to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD interested for themselves or friends by addressing him, at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

A Wonderful Talking Machine.

Perfection has at last surely been reached in talking machines. The latest and most perfect machine has just come out. It is loud and clear and reproduces your own or any voice over and over again, speeches from the most noted statesmen, songs from the world's greatest singers music from the greatest bands. The price of this wonderful machine is but $10.000, and it affords a wonderful opportunity for those who wish to give public entertainments; $10.00 to $20.00 can be made every evening exhibiting this talking machine, in halls, churches, school houses and other public places. This machine is now controlled by, and catalogues and full particulars can be had from, Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago. Just cut this notice out and send to them for a book telling all about it.

Can We Be Cured

Of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption?

A Test by Which the True Value of All Treatments Can be Determined.

How many thousands there are to-day who would gladly pay almost any reasonable sum to be cured of either one of the above diseases, but who, knowing of so many remedies and treatments, are at a loss to decide which one to try. It does seem a difficult task, yet becomes a comparatively easy one if the person afflicted will but use a little good judgment and common sense. In the first place every man and woman knows or should know, that the air passages were made for air alone, and that nature has so constructed these passages that moisture of any kind cannot enter the bronchial tubes or lungs. This at once precludes all possibility of a cure of these deep-seated diseases being effected by treatment requiring the use of sprays, douches atomizers, vapors or stomach medicines This all regular physicians admit and acknowledge that the diseased parts must be reached through the air we breathe or not at all. Not only this, a germicide must be used which will leave the air dry and yet have the power to destroy the bacilli of disease in the minutest air cells of the lungs.

This decision reached, then comes the question—Is there such a germicide? The answer to this query, thirty eight hundred physicians and over three hundred thousand persons who have tested say YES. "HYOMEI" is Nature's own remedy, given through the only vehicle (the air you breathe) which Nature permits to enter the bronchial tubes and lungs. "HYOMEI"

"HYOMEI"

HEARTINESS.

By Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

F all things that are abominable none is more so than lack of heart. Is there aught more distasteful than a hand-shake in which there is evidently no heart? When anybody puts two sticks of fingers into my palm instead of grasping my hand cordially, I feel inclined to give those fingers a bit of a twist to discover whether there is any life and feeling in them. Even if the whole hand be given it is sometimes like the fin of a dead fish, and conveys no sort of influence except the assurance that the possessor is, like the fish—a cold-blooded creature.

As with hand-shaking, so with all else! "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily." It is quite exhilarating to hear a hearty laugh. Faith and fun are quite compatible. Why should not Christians be merry-hearted? I like the original rendering of Wm. Kethe's version of the 100th Psalm: "Him serve with mirth." Some modern hymnbooks improve (?) it into "with fear." I am no admirer of the set smile which some affect. A hearty laugh is more to my mind, than the grinning and sniggering which some indulge in.

There is a time to laugh, and holy laughter is never more legitimate than when the great Deliverer has heard from His holy heaven, with the saving strength of his right arm. "When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion we were like them that dream: then was our mouth filled with laughter and our tongue with singing." You may be sure that this was hearty laughter, for the heathen heard it and cried, "The Lord hath done great things for them."

Our singing ought to be hearty. Alas! that in many places of worship the congregation doesn't get half a chance, as witness a correspondent in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "The choir does all the singing Sunday evening, with the exception of one hymn, in which the congregation joins. We know that it is generally impossible to catch a single word that is sung by our modern church choir." This witness is all too true. For my part, if aught must be sacrificed, it shall be taste and culture and art and style. What are these in comparison with heart? "I will praise thee, O. Lord, with my whole heart"—when the choir permits!

Hearty giving is greatly to be desired. Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart; not grudgingly nor of necessity; "for God loveth a cheerful giver." Here let me quote from my late, but ever to be remembered, father, who speaks thus of a fine old English farmer: 'He used to have an enormous piece of beef upon the table, and I said to him one day, 'Why is it that whenever I come here you have such immense joints? Do you think I can eat like a giant?' 'Well,' he said, 'if I could get a bigger bit I would, for I am so glad to see you; if you could eat it all you should be heartily welcome.' He did not measure my necessities to the half ounce, but he provided on a lavish scale." After this lordly fashion has our bountiful King provided for us; let us also give right generously.

Quoting from C. H. Spurgeon tempts me to speak of him with relation to heartiness, and I cannot resist (I confess that I am not trying to, very hard). Was there ever a heartier soul. How heartily he laughed, how heartily he sang, how heartily he gave! He was found to be at the head of the list of persons whom beggars found it most profitable to call on—"Soft Tommies" they dubbed them. An unintentioned compliment, this. He would prefer to be taken in sometimes than to be hard-hearted at any time. He was a second Caleb, for he was "all heart."

Paul was writing to servants when he said: "Do it heartily." Acts in themselves menial and irksome were to be done heartily. How could this be? He gave the secret. They were to be done as to the Lord, and not unto men. The slaves to whom he wrote were the mere chattels of their owners: they were schooled only with the whip. It was impossible for them to serve heartily such taskmasters as theirs unless they recognized that the Lord was the "Master in heaven." Remembering that there is no respect of persons with him, and that he is evermore a good master," they could do even their servile tasks with heartiness.

What say you? Shall we all try to impart a little more heartiness into all our work? Let it be all done as to the Lord, for only then can we be sustained under the monotony and responsibility. What if those who employ us are exacting, ungenerous, and ungrateful: we have for our comfort the inspiring word, "Ye serve the Lord Christ."

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine:
Who sweeps a room, as for thy laws,
Makes that, and the action fine.

With this in mind we will set to our tasks, whether they be, as we say, sacred or secular, with holy ardor. We will be no more slovenly, and our work shall be done no longer grudgingly, lazily, and grumblingly. The government stroke of the convicts is not our style. We will serve God with a willing mind. If only lest onlookers should get an altogether erroneous notion of religion, we will be hearty, happy, hopeful. We do not mean to give the enemy occasion to blaspheme, as they certainly will if they can. Have I not heard them saying in effect: "Yonder Christian doesn't like his billet. He looks as if he wished himself out of it—his master starves him, surely—or doesn't pay him regularly—right glad am I to be no sharer in his distasteful tastes." So the world judges, and who can blame it?

Now, let us pray: Lord save us from being half-hearted, and double-hearted! First make us broken-hearted, and then whole-hearted. Cause us to be tender-hearted, wise-hearted, and willing-hearted. All this we beg for the sake of him who died of a broken heart for sinners' sakes. Amen."

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

THE CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

How a Young Man may Know Whether the Pulpit is his True Vocation.

BY REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

AMONG young men who have been converted in early life, there are few who have not, at some period, contemplated entering the ministry. It is very beautiful to see these earnest young souls turning away from careers in which wealth and worldly honor may be won, to a life of service in which there are few prizes and many burdens. But the mere desire to preach the Gospel is not of itself sufficient evidence of fitness for the work. Some of these enthusiastic young men have the idea that a college education is all that is necessary in the way of preparation, but experience proves that all the professors in all the colleges in the world cannot impart to the young aspirant the qualities he will need in the Christian ministry, if he does not already possess them. As the cutting and the polishing which enhances the beauty of the diamond is wasted on the common pebble, so education develops, but cannot implant, the powers requisite for the preacher. It would be well if this fact were realized by the zealous young men who write to pastors and editors asking how they can get the necessary preparation for the pulpit. A letter from a young man in West Virginia asking this question now lies before me. As it is a specimen of many that come from all quarters, it may be useful to others as well as to him if I briefly describe the evidences by which it may be known whether a young man is called to the ministry.

A man should be called of God into the ministry. Nothing could be more out of place than for a man to call himself to preach the gospel, to go into the ministry merely because it would afford him the intellectual benefits of a learned profession, the opportunity for the display of his oratorical powers, the introduction into good society, the exercise of a little power among men or the means of livelihood. The desire to do the most good possible does not justify the calling of one's self into the pastorate. The call of God should be very distinct. If after a careful and prayerful consideration of the subject there is any doubt left, it is certain that there is no divine call. There may be the faintest inclinations at first, there may be much doubt and debate afterwards, but the honest devout soul will always come out into definiteness of impression if public service is required. The Holy Ghost makes duty plain to those he would have in his service. In whatever way the call may come, all other paths of life will be blocked and that of the ministry only left open.

A man should be called by the Church into the ministry. God's voice must be loud enough for others to hear it as well as himself. Since the beginning of the Christian Church, human appointment has been as necessary as the divine call to the ministry—has been counted as an evidence of that call. The plan is wise, for men so often mistake their voice for the voice of God, and sometimes mistake the voice of Satan in their personal ambitions for that of the heavenly Master. The Church being human, and therefore fallible, sometimes ordains those not called of God, and declines to set apart those who are divinely called, but these are exceptions that do not affect the rule that a human and divine call is necessary for the ministry. If one who believes himself called should have no constant member of the Church in his community say to him, "You should preach," and say it in earnest, he might question the wisdom of attempting to give up his life to the work of the ministry.

The divine and human call being settled, there should be careful preparation for the ministry. Many of the greatest preachers had little educational preparation. The learned professions require long years and hard study. In many States the legislature requires an examination. No candidate can go on the property, the duties, or the rights of even a city architect or electrician without having received a certain amount of special preparation. Though the State does not demand of the ministry any professional preparation the Church does make the requirement. The ideal preparation is the academy, the college, the theological seminary. The opportunities of education are so abundant and the provisions of benefactors so generous, that a poor young man with character, ability, and snap, can reach the high ideal of fitness. A poor young man with good health and an uncommon grip of will, might safely undertake to make his way through school. I knew a poor boy who sawed and split wood in the college village to pay his way. Some of the most brilliant ministers in America have worked their way through school. There are many to whom this ideal method of preparation is impossible. They have to educate themselves by reading, study, observation, and prayer. Some of the greatest preachers the world has ever known, have never attended college or a theological school. One may go to the college and not be educated, or he may be educated and not go to college. It is better for the young minister to go to college, but if this is impossible, he should educate himself by reading, study, and the practical exercise of his faculties. Purity of character and a longing for souls, supreme qualifications being given, the minister should be educated in the schools or by himself.

Many feel called to the ministry who cannot make the necessary preparation, or are providentially prevented from giving their lives entirely to the work. Fortunately many denominations have provided for licensing lay preachers. So that men may work at their trade or business or profession through the week and preach at night or on the Lord's day as the Holy Spirit may indicate. Such men have been potential factors in the conversion of souls and in the upbuilding of the church. It would be a sad day for the Church if the number of such men was to be lessened or their sphere of influence circumscribed. Such have an illustrious example in the Apostle Paul who supported himself and preached as no one since the Master has ever done.

Every one who hears the message of salvation is bound by divine command and by the impulse of a saved soul to give the message to others. Call it testimony, call it exhortation, or dignify it with the name of preaching, whatever you call it, every one who is saved is bound to tell to others the story of the Cross.

An experience of two years or more has demonstrated the curative power of the Electropoise far beyond any therapeutic agent or appliance known or available to the medical profession. Without a doubt the Electropoise has the gift and power to cure multitudes who without it must surely die, and that, too in early life or in the very maturity of strength, when their loss is most severely felt and the mystery of their untimely death is most terribly difficult of solution.

I have followed the directions very carefully, and the treatment has been attended with the best results. We think we are entitled to have good hopes that in due time my wife will be entirely restored to health. It will be a wonderful triumph for your instrument and a great mercy to her. Very truly,
WM. SHEPARD BRYAN,
Justice, Maryland's Court of Appeals.
STAUNTON, VA.

I have used the Electropoise in a number of instances and always with good results. It is the best thing to break up colds that I have ever seen. It has cured me of chronic constipation, which had troubled me for some years. I am at present treating myself for a run-down nervous condition caused by worry and overwork, and am improving. I have great faith in the power of the Electropoise to cure disease.
Yours truly,

We direct special attention to the following remarkable statement.

In 1869 I had typhoid fever which left me with Catarrh and totally destroyed my hearing; for 25 years I could not understand a word, or hear a steam whistle, and had to carry a slate so that people could talk to me. In '94 I obtained Aerial Medication and in a week surprised my friends by throwing my slateaway. In two weeks could hear loud conversation, in three months could sit by the church door and fully understand every word that was spoken. The wonderful cure astonished my friends as well as myself. For three years my hearing has been perfect and I am entirely free from Catarrh.—EDWARD E. WILLIAMS, Lead, S. D.

We have reliable assurance that the above statement is genuine and that Dr. Moore is a reputable physician.—Cincinnati Christian Standard.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN

Discovered by Accident.—In Compounding, an Incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERSEDES ELECTROLYSIS

Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (secured from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. "JESUS WAS VERY PRECIOUS."

IN the recent death of Dr. Amelia Barett. New York City loses its oldest woman physician. Dr. Barnett was called "the ood Samaritan," as her sole aim in life was to please God and benefit humanity. No call for aid ever received a denial rom this most benevolent woman. She pent her life in ministering to others, in piritual, as well as temporal good. Her ncestry combined Scotch and Huguenot lood. She was a member of the "Society

f Huguenots." For many years, she was ssociated with Dr. Lozier in the Woman's ollege of Medicine in New York, being ne of the professors and a recognized uthority.

Dr. Barnett was a very humble Chrisian and always felt that she was a learner t the feet of Jesus. Her life was beautiul because she exalted Christ, and felt ontent to take the lowest place. Her ands were often used to soothe in the hamber of sickness and death. She was woman of very decided character and pinions. Patiently through many years f service, she had met the call of need rom others, and when she received the ummons to "Come up higher" she was eady. In one of her last days, a friend eaned over her and asked: "Is Jesus precious?" "Yes," she answered, "he s very precious." Immediately she beame unconscious, and like Stephen, iterally "fell asleep in Jesus."

New York's Triumphal Tower.

A project is on foot for the erection of triumphal tower in upper New York, within the next three years, for the purpose of viewing Greater New York. It is o be 2,140 feet in height, and twelve-sided vith a diameter of 300 feet for the main base. This will contain four pavilions, which will give the entire base a diameter of four hundred feet. The outer walls are o be of cement and wire cloth. The inernal plans represent a labyrinth of steel columns, girders, beams, plates, and other forms of steel construction. There will be no wood used in either the building or finishing of this structure. Compressed air will be employed for running electric cars rom the ground to the fifth floor. They will wind around the central area, making a trip about two and a-half miles in length. Visitors will then be conveyed to the clouds by an elevator, which will run from the fifth floor to the top.

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and Bladder disease of ten year's standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power

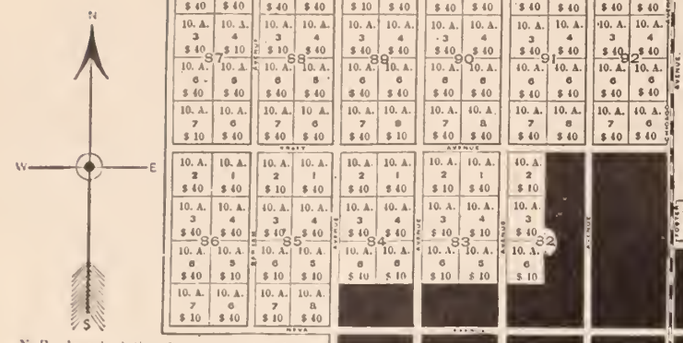
COPY OF THE OFFICIAL PLAT OF

Maywood Colony, California.

THE LOTS AND BLOCKS THAT ARE COLORED BLACK ARE SOLD.



N. B.—In calculating distances to lots from the town of Corning, bear in mind that the blocks are ¼ by ⅛ mile in dimension. Each block is bounded by nvennes 40 feet wide, and contains eight 10-acre lots. The few lots that are fractional in size are so indicated by the figures thereon. 7,520 acres of land are included in this, our central colony.

"HE WHO PLANTS AN OLIVE ORCHARD PLANTS FOR THE CENTURIES A PERPETUAL INCOME."

"AN OLIVE ORCHARD IS A GOLD MINE ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH."

DON'T FORGET TO SEND FOR OUR HANDSOME SOUVENIR BOOKLET ON OLIVE CULTURE IN CALIFORNIA.

SPECIAL OFFER

Blocks 82 to 92, inclusive, aggregating 880 acres, comprise MAYWOOD COLONY, No. 10. Here 10 acres of choice, level, clear land, especially adapted to olives, can be bought by paying $10 down; then $10 monthly for 34 months. NO TAXES while payments are being made. NO INTEREST. Land is all of same quality and adaptation. No choice save in location. First buyers get inside positions.

This Special Offer holds good till April 1, 1898.

OUR GUARANTEE.

This notice is an agreement to the effect that we will refund all money paid on land in Colony No. 10, if found to be swampy, or sand, affected by alkali, or such as to require clearing preparatory to planting. This tract of land is most desirably located, lying alongside the Southern Pacific railway, and quite convenient to town. From town to the south edge of Colony No. 10, the distance is but ¾ of a mile, and but 1⅛ of a mile to the extreme north edge. If a lot is wanted, send to our BOSTON office $40.00, and we will issue and send you our Bond for Deed on the unsold lot nearest Corning. When monthly payments have been completed, we will take up the Bond for Deed and deliver our Warranty Deed.

FOSTER & WOODSON.

RED BLUFF, CALF., Nov. 5, 1897.

MESSRS. FOSTER & WOODSON:

Gentlemen:—For the benefit of the public who may contemplate the purchase of land in the "Maywood Colony," we wish to say that the land making up blocks 82 to 92 inclusive, aggregating 880 acres, were bought from this Bank. It is level, perfectly clear, and, in my estimation, as choice Olive land as there is in the Sacramento Valley.

It is land that we have farmed to Wheat and Barley for a number of years, by which it can be readily understood that no clearing whatever of any nature is required. His convenience to Corning, its adaptability to Olive culture, and the low price, at which you are offering it, makes it a property that should sell readily. Yours respectfully,

GEO. H. KRAFT, Sec'y Herbert Kraft Co. Bank.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

Mr. H. A. Alger, late of Brockton, Mass., writing from the colony under date of Dec. 22, 1897, says: "I can conscientiously say that the climate and scenery here cannot be surpassed in the State. I find none of those obnoxious pests or malaria here that are found in other sections. I consider it one of the most healthful places I was ever in, having gained 15 pounds in four weeks. The soil I think will grow anything. There is abundance of soil in the colony that will developa any kind of fruit that one wishes to raise. I consider that the outlook for Maywood is grand, and advise people looking for a home in California to investigate this colony."

Dr. W. P. Mattlewsay: "I have known several people to be cured of asthma by simply residing in Tehama County. As to pulmonary troubles generally, the climate of the western part of this county has been proven to have not only a palliative, but a curative, effect. Were I called upon by the government to locate a number of consumptives, I would place it in the western part of Tehama County, as a point easily accessible at all times of the year."

To those who prefer to pay cash and thereby get the benefit of the discount which cash commands, we offer the following lots at reduced prices till April 1, 1898:—

Lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of block 2, at $50.00 an acre. These lots are now in grain crop and cannot be delivered till July.

Lots 1, 2, and 4 of block 4, and lot 7 of block 3, at $50.00 an acre.

Lot 2 of block 6, lot 4 of block 17, lots 3, 6, and 7 of block 21, lots 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, and 8 of block 27, and lots 7 and 8 of block 28, at $35.00 an acre.

Lot 4 of block 59, lots 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of block 65, lots 3, 4, 7, and 8 of block 67, at $45.00 an acre.

Lot 6 of block 41, lots 1, 5, and 8 of block 43, all of block 44, lots 5 and 8 of block 45, and lots 4 and 8 of block 46, at $65.00 an acre.

Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, and 7 of block 54, at $75.00 an acre.

Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 8, of block 53, at $70.00 an acre.

Lots 1, 4, and 5, of block 72, at $50.00 an acre.

Detailed description of any lot or lots given at request. To thoroughly understand our plan of sale, read this paper of Dec. 22, 1897. Planting season extends to April 1, but the sooner trees are set the better. Terms for planting orchards furnished upon application.

If this proposition is such as you would like to take advantage of, don't hesitate on account of distrust. If we desired to misuse you, we certainly would not invite you to do your business through the Bank of Tehama Co., Red Bluff, Cal. Had our methods been wrong, we would not have been working at the same place and on the same proposition for seven years. Did this proposition not stand investigation, our money could not buy advertising space in this paper, for the management will not knowingly admit anything not meritorious or up to representation.

If you have not already sent for our booklet on Olive Culture in California, do so at once. It will surely interest you, and is to be had for the asking.

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ANOTHER flood of postals has been poured upon THE MAIL-BAG during the week, giving solutions of the "mulch-kine" scriptural puzzle propounded by C. A. M., Binghamton, N. Y. That a great majority of our readers are careful students of the Bible is evident from the fact that so many replies have been received, forty per cent being correct. One of the answers, sent by M. A. Powell, New Haven, Conn., is in metrical form, and reads as follows:

Don't let those little calves at home,
Pick straws and draw the ark of God,
Nor to the right nor to the left
Those cattle turn;
For God has marked them perfect road,
Straight to Beth-shemesh with their load
Then shall we trust
Jehovah to forsake utter them,
Philistines, many mighty men,
Unto the end.
For man to lived those faithful kine
Now as a sacrifice divine,
For God they die.

M. V. L., Elizabeth, N. J., sends the correct answer to the "Mulch-kine" puzzle, and gives the proper references, 1. Sam. 6: 7-14. As also do the following readers:

Food Cargoes for Starving Cuba.

HE WHOLE NATION RESPONDING TO THE CALL OF HER SUFFERING PEOPLE.

MANY THOUSANDS DYING OF HUNGER.

apid Work by the Relief Committee—"Christian Herald" Readers Urging the Work Bravely Forward—The Relief Fund Growing—An Opportunity for All to Help.

OUR first cargoes of American food. clothing. and medicines. which rrived in Havana several days ago. are now being distributed by General Lee and his official corps among the sick, starving and destitute Cuban concentrados. Although the details of this distribution have not yet been received. it is certain that these first evidences of practical sympathy rom Christian America will be the means of saving many lives and relieving much uffering. One of the shipments. consigned by the Central Relief Committee o General Lee. and sent by the steamship Vigilancia from New York. consisted of 0.203 packages of various sizes. containing ood. clothing and medicines. The food included bread. flour. oatmeal, peas, salt fish, acon. rice. potatoes and a variety of anned goods. In addition to these. here were sent a large number of packages containing quinine. the whole aggregating 1.000.000 grains—the largest shipment of the drug made from any American port since the close of the civil war.

Copyright N. Y. World.

A "HUNGER-CHILD."

Secretary Sherman has advised that not money but supplies be sent. and our Government gives us the assurance that the real sufferers will receive the full benefit of the contributions. which will be distributed by Americans only. Consequently all the money forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this work. on being turned over to the Central Relief Committee. will immediately be used in the purchase of food supplies, clothing and medicines. Spain has consented to allow all supplies for the relief work to enter Cuban ports free of duty. Shipments are now being made twice a week by steamer from New York. reaching General Lee's hands four days after sailing. Responses to the widespread appeals are coming in from many quarters. demonstrating that when our generous-hearted people are brought to realize the condition of the men. women and children in Cuba. they will come gladly to their aid.

Cablegrams from Havana. giving the substance of despatches from many points on the island. show no abatement of the suffering.

The correspondent of the Philadelphia Press (from whom we quoted last week). in his later despatches. gives some startling facts regarding the destitution. In the centre of the island. the war has reduced the once fertile country to the condition of a desert. Gen. Blanco is doing what he can for the starving concentrados. but with the means at hand it is impossible to do much toward relieving them. The deaths from starvation. direct and indirect. are very numerous. In the official news. they are put down as from "various causes." In Sagua. the deaths in a single month were 577. more than half of them being from famine. U. S. Consul Barker counted. in one forenoon (says the same correspondent). twenty-three dead bodies. Up to midnight. when the number had been greatly increased. the official record showed only eighteen deaths. The Mayor of Sagua. who conducts the official relief work there. admits that one-half of the population has died.

Major Geo. L. Donald of Mississippi. now in Cuba. has written that 90.000 persons have perished of starvation in the province of Santa Clara alone. within a year. He says, "one cannot go twenty steps without meeting some poor starving woman or child." C. W. Russell. Attorney of the Department of Justice. at Washington, who recently returned from Cuba. says the immediate question is not the war. but the relief of the 200.000 starving men. women and children. The distress must be relieved by us. otherwise they will certainly perish.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Sylvester Scovel. special correspondent of the New York World in Cuba. we are enabled to present several photographs on this page. which show some of the phases of suffering on that island. There are many of Mr. Scovel's photographs. however. which are of a character that would prove so distressing to sensitive natures that we refrain from reproducing them here. Gaunt living skeletons. that have once been comely matrons and maidens; little children whose emaciated bodies and skinny faces belong to the grave. rather than to living human beings; weeping mothers with averted faces holding up their shriveled babes. as though to appeal to us for pity; men who have already the seal of death set upon their bony faces. and whose swollen knees and feet and cavernous eyes tell of their terrible vigil with famine: husband and wife. slowly dying. side by side. and waiting with a hopeless resignation the fate that has already overtaken thousands around them. No pen can do justice to those all too real victims of hunger; no heart is so cold and unfeeling as to deny them sympathy. Mr. Scovel has prepared for us an illustrated pamphlet on the condition of the famine-stricken people of Cuba. and this presentation of the actual case. by an eye-witness who has been among the sufferers and knows whereof he speaks. will be sent free to any reader of this journal who sends name and address to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office. in the Bible House. New York. It is a complete. compact. graphic. and accurate statement. and will furnish all the information needful for those who are interested in aiding the work in churches. church societies. and Sunday-schools; and other organizations. All requests for copies of the pamphlet will receive immediate attention.

Copyright N. Y. World.

EVEN THE BABES ARE LITTLE ELSE THAN SKELETONS.

At Guines and vicinity two hundred and fifty pacificos (non-combatants). have died of sheer starvation. leaning only five now living. Ninety-eight died in the court-yard of the Guines Club. Around Havana eighty per cent. of the pacificos are too weak. from fever and starvation. to work. In Aguacate. Havana province. three hundred are dying of hunger. The local relief committee has exhausted its resources. In Havana City. at No. 82 Cadiz street. it is said two hundred and forty-three women and children are starving. and three hundred and thirty-nine patients in the hospital at Quinta Del Rey are destitute of food. medicines. and clothing. In Los Fosos over one thousand pacificos are starving. three hundred and forty-eight of them being women and children.

Stephen Bonsal. another Philadelphia Press correspondent. gives a thrilling account of the "starvation stations," or camps. on the line of the railway through Matanzas and Havana provinces. We make the following extracts from his letters:

Between 80 and 85 per cent. of these poor people have starved or been starved to death during the last eight months. and particularly since August. Dead bodies are daily seen in the streets. the principal streets. not the byways. One body lay on the sidewalk not twenty yards from the Governor's palace all day last week.

At another place the streets literally swarm with gaunt, starving men, women and children, falling down and kissing your feet and imploring you to save them from death. Mothers with dead infants in their arms. themselves ready to die, asking for money to buy their child food, if living; if dead, a clean death garment.

A Spaniard told me five children were found near there starving in a cave, sitting around the dead bodies of their parents. In the towns of the interior the situation is far more terrible than here; in places whole towns have been obliterated; in others from one-third to one-half of the population have disappeared. Three-fifths, at least, of the reconcentrados have died, or about 300.000, and the remaining two-fifths will be dead unless speedy relief comes.

These people, the same correspondent writes, subsist largely on yucca root, calabaza, and other plants, which cannot sustain life. Their huts are crowded and unwholesome.

A touching picture is presented in a letter written by a Cuban lady in Cienfuegos. Describing the death of a poor famine victim. She writes:

"Hijita, little daughter," said the woman, who was so weak she could not even turn over to see me, "I am dying; I know it. Do not waste any time on me, but save my little girls; I have three; they are so hungry, and I have not a crumb to give them." When I asked those who stood around where the children were, they beckoned to me to follow, and, when we were out of hearing, told me that the children were all dead and buried.

"She will be with her children in a very few hours," said an old man, shaking with fever, "and so will I, praise be to God."

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Only a Little Honey.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: I. Sam. 14: 43. . . .

I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die.

THE honey-bee is a most ingenious architect, a Christopher Wren among insects; geometer drawing hexagons and pentagons, a freebooter robbing the fields of pollen and aroma, wondrous creature of God whose biography, written by Huber and Swammerdam, is an enchantment for any lover of nature. Virgil celebrated the bee in his fabel of Aristæus; and Moses, and Samuel, and David, and Solomon, and Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, and St. John used the delicacies of bee-manufacture as a Bible symbol. A miracle of formation is the bee: five eyes, two tongues, the outer having a sheath of protection, hairs on all sides of its tiny body to brush up the particles of flowers, its flight so straight that all the world knows of the bee-line. The honey-comb is a palace such as no one but God could plan and the honey-bee construct: its cells, sometimes a dormitory and sometimes a storehouse, and sometimes a cemetery. These winged toilers first make eight strips of wax, and by their antennæ, which are to them hammer, and chisel, and square, and plumb-line, fashion them for use. Two and two, these workers shape the wall. If an accident happens, they put up buttresses of extra beams to remedy the damage. When about the year 1776 an insect before unknown, in the night time attacked the bee-hives all over Europe, and the men who owned them were in vain trying to plan something to keep out the invader that was the terror of the bee-hives of the Continent, it was found that everywhere the bees had arranged for their own protection, and built before their honey-combs an especial wall of wax with portholes through which the bees might go to and fro, but not large enough to admit the winged combatant, called the Sphinx Atropos.

Do you know that the swarming of the bees is divinely directed? The mother bee starts for a new home, and because of this, the other bees of the hive get into an excitement which raises the heat of the hive some four degrees, and they must die unless they leave their heated apartments, and they follow the mother bee and alight on the branch of a tree, and cling to each other and hold on until a committee of two or three bees have explored the region and found the hollow of a tree or rock not far off from a stream of water, and they here set up a new colony, and ply their aromato industries, and give themselves to the manufacture of the saccharine edifice. But who can tell the chemistry of that mixture of sweetness, part of it the very life of the bee, and part of it the life of the flowers?

Plenty of this luscious product was hanging in the woods of Beth-aven during the time of Saul and Jonathan. Their army was in pursuit of an enemy that by God's command must be exterminated. The soldiery were positively forbidden to stop to eat anything until the work was done. If they disobeyed they were accursed. Coming through the woods they found a place where the bees had been busy—great honey-repository. Honey gathered in the comb, in the trees until it had overflowed upon the ground in great puddles of sweetness. All the army craved, craved, craved it, not save Jonathan, who, not knowing the military order, put the point of his spear to the end of a piece of honey-comb in the ground, and, all glistening and tempting, it rested on the end of the stick he put it to his mouth and ate the honey. Jonathan ought to have died, and but for special intervention would have been slain. It was that Jonathan announces the awful mistake: "I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die." Alas, what multitudes of people in all ages have been damaged by forbidden honey, by which I mean temptation, delicious and attractive but damaging and destructive!

Corrupt literature, fascinating but deathful, comes in this category. Where one good, honest, healthful book is read now, there is a hundred made up of rhetorical trash consumed with avidity. When the boys on the cars come through with a pile of publications, look over the titles and notice that nine out of ten of the books are injurious. All the way from here to Chicago or New Orleans notice that objectionable books dominate. Taste for pure literature is poisoned by this scum of the publishing house. Every book in which sin triumphs over virtue, or in which a glamour is thrown over dissipation, or which leaves you at its last line with less respect for the marriage institution and less abhorrence for the paramour, is a depression of your own moral character. The booklindery may be attractive, and the plot dramatic and startling, and the style of writing sweet as the honey that Jonathan took up with his rod, but your best interests forbid it, your moral safety forbids it, your God forbids it, and one taste of it may lead to such bad results that you may have to say at the close of the experiment, or at the close of a misimproved lifetime: "I did but taste a little honey with the rod that was in my hand, an, lo, I must die."

Corrupt literature is doing more to-day for the disruption of domestic life than any other cause. Elopements, marital intrigues, sly correspondence, fictitious names given at post-office windows, clandestine meetings in parks, and at ferry gates, and in hotel parlors, and conjugal perjuries are among the ruinous results. When a woman, young or old, gets her head thoroughly stuffed with the modern novel she is in appalling peril. But some one will say: "The heroes are so adroitly knavish, and the heroines so bewitchingly untrue, and the turn of the story so exquisite, and all the characters so enrapturing, I cannot quit them." My brother, my sister, you can find styles of literature just as charming that will elevate, and purify, and ennoble, and Christianize while they please. The devil does not own all the honey. There is a wealth of good books coming forth from our publishing houses that leave no excuse for the choice of that which is debauching to body, mind, and soul. Go to some intelligent man or woman, and ask for a list of books that will be strengthening to your mental and moral condition. Life is so short and your time for improvement so abbreviated that you cannot afford to fill up with husks, and cinders, and debris. In the interstices of business that young man is reading that which will prepare him to be a merchant prince, and that young woman is filling her mind with an intelligence that will yet either make her the chief attraction of a good man's home, or give her an independence of character that will quality her to build her own home and maintain it in a happiness that requires no augmentation from any of our rougher sex. That young man or young woman can, by the right literary and moral improvement of the spare ten minutes here or there every day, rise head and shoulders in prosperity, and character, and influence above the loungers who read nothing, or read that which bedwarfs. See all the forests of good American literature dripping with honey. Why pick up the honeycombs that have in them the fiery bees which will sting you with an eternal poison while you taste it? One book may for you or me decide everything for this world and the next. It was a turning point with me when in a book store in Syracuse, one day, I picked up a book called "The Beauties of Ruskin." It was only a book of extracts, but it was all pure honey, and I was not satisfied until I had purchased all his works, at that time expensive beyond an easy capacity to own them, and with what delight I went through reading his "Seven Lamps of Architecture," and his "Stones of Venice," it is impossible for me to describe except by saying that it gave me a rapture for good books, and an everlasting disgust for decrepit or immoral books that will last me while my life lasts. All around the Church and the world to-day there are busy hives of intelligence occupied by authors and authoresses from whose pens drip a distillation which is the very nectar of heaven, and why will you thrust your rod of inquisitiveness into the deathful saccharine of perdition?

Stimulating liquids also come into the category of temptation delicious but deathful. You say, "I cannot bear the taste of intoxicating liquor, and how any man can like it is to me an amazement." Well, then, it is no credit to you that you do not take it. Do not brag about your total abstinence, because it is not from any principle that you reject alcoholism, but for the reason that you reject certain styles of food—you simply don't like the taste of them. But multitudes of people have a natural fondness for all kinds of intoxicants. They like it so much that it makes them smack their lips to look at it. They are dyspeptic and they like to aid digestion; or they are annoyed by insomnia, and they take it to produce sleep; or they are troubled, and they take it to make them oblivious; or they feel happy, and they must celebrate their hilarity. They begin with mint julep sucked through two straws on the Long Branch piazza and end in the ditch, taking from a jug a liquid half kerosene and half whiskey. They not only like it, but it is an all-consuming passion of body, mind, and soul, and after awhile have it they will, though one wine-glass of it should cost the temporal and eternal destruction of themselves, and all their families, and the whole human race. They would say, "I am sorry it is going to cost me, and my family, and all the world's population so very much, but here it goes to my lips, and now let it roll over my parched tongue and down my heated throat, the sweetest, the most inspiring, the most delicious draught that ever thrilled a human frame." To cure the habit before it comes to its last stages, various plans were tried in olden times. This plan was recommended in the books: when a man wanted to reform he put shot or bullets into the cup or glass of strong drink—one additional shot or bullet each day, that displaced so much liquor. Bullet after bullet added day by day, of course the liquor became less and less until the bullets would entirely fill up the glass, and there was no room for the liquid, and by that time it was said for the inebriate would be cured. Whether any one ever was cured in that way I know not, but by long experiment it is found that the only way is to stop short off, and when a man does that he needs God to help him. And there have been more cases than you can count when God has so helped the man that he left off the drink forever; and I could count a score of them, some of them pillars in the house of God.

One would suppose that men would take warning from some of the ominous names given to the intoxicants, and stand off from the devastating influence. You have noticed, for instance, that some of the restaurants are called "The Shades," typical of the fact that it puts a man's reputation in the shade, and his morals in the shade, and his prosperity in the shade, and his wife and children in the shade, and his immortal destiny in the shade. Now, I find on some of the liquor signs in all our cities the words "Old Crow," mightily suggestive of the carcass and the filthy raven that swoops upon it. "Old Crow!" Men and women without numbers slain of rum, but unburied, and this evil is pecking at their glazed eyes, and pecking at their bloated cheek, and pecking at their destroyed manhood and womanhood, thrusting beak and claw into the mortal remains of what was once gloriously alive, but now morally dead. "Old Crow!" But alas! how many take no warning! They make me think of Cæsar on his way to assassination fearing nothing; though his statue in the hall crashed into fragments at his feet, and a scroll containing the names of the conspirators was thrust into his hands, yet walking right on to meet the dagger that was to take his life. This infatuation of strong drink is so mighty in many a man that, though his fortunes are crashing, and his health is crashing, and his domestic interests are crashing, and we hand him a long scroll containing the names of perils that await him, he goes straight on to physical, and mental, and moral assassination. In proportion as any style of alcoholism is pleasant to your taste and stimulating to your nerves, and for a time delightful to all your physical and mental constitution, is the peril awful. Remember Jonathan and the forbidden honey in the woods at Beth-aven.

Furthermore, the gamester's indulgence must be put in the list of temptations delicious but destructive. You who have crossed the ocean many times have noticed that always one of the best rooms has, from morning until late at night, been given up to gambling practices. I heard of men who went on board with enough for a European excursion who landed without money to get their baggage up to the hotel or railroad station. To many there is a complete fascination in games of hazard or the risking of money on possibilities. It seems as natural for them to bet as to eat. Indeed, the hunger for food is often overpowered by the hunger for wagers. It is absurd for those of us who have never felt the fascination of the wager to speak slightingly of the temptation. It has slain a multitude of intellectual and moral giants, men and women stronger than you or I. Down under it power went glorious Oliver Goldsmith and Gibbon, the famous historian, and Charles Fox, the renowned statesman and in olden times, senators of the United States, who used to be as regularly at the gambling-house all night as they were in the halls of legislation by day. Oh, the tragedies of the faro-table! I know persons who began with a slight stake in ladies' parlor, and ended with the suicide pistol at Monte Carlo. They played with the square pieces of bone with black marks on them, not knowing that Satan was playing for their bones at the same time, and was sure to sweep all the stakes off on his side of the table. State Legislatures have again and again sanctioned the mighty evil by passing laws in defense of race-tracks, and many young men have lost all their wages at such so-called "meetings." Every man who voted for such infamous bills has on his hands and forehead the blood of these souls.

But in this connection some young converts say to me: "Is it right to play cards? Is there any harm in a game of whist or euchre?" Well, I know good men who play whist, and euchre, and other styles of games without any wagers. I had a friend who played cards with his wife and children, and then at the close said: "Come now, let us have prayers." I will not judge other men's consciences, but I tell you that cards are in my mind so associated with the temporal and spiritual ruin of splendid young men, that I would as soon say to my family: "Come, let us have a game of cards," as I would go into a menagerie and say: "Come, let us have a game with rattlesnakes," or into a cemetery, and sitting down by a marble slab, say to the gravediggers: "Come, let us have a game at skulls." Conscientious young ladies are silently saying: "Do you think card playing will do us any harm?" Perhaps not, but how will you feel if in the great day of eternity, when we are asked to give an account of our influence, some one should say: "I was introduced to games of chance in the year 1898, at your house, and I went on from that sport to something more exciting, and went on down until I lost my business, and lost my morals, and lost my soul, and these chains that you see on my wrists and feet are the chains of a gamester's doom, and I am on my way to a gambler's hell." Honey at the start, eternal catastrophe at the last.

Stock-gambling comes into the same catalogue. It must be very exhilarating to go into the stock market and, depositing a small sum of money, run the chance of taking out a fortune. Many men are doing an honest and safe business in the stock market, and you are an ignoramus if you do not know that it is just as legitimate to deal in stocks as it is to deal in coffee, or sugar, or flour. But nearly all the outsiders who go there on a financial excursion lose all. The old spiders eat up the unsuspecting flies. I had a friend who put his hand on his hip-pocket and said in substance, "I have there the value of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars." His home is to-day penniless. What was the matter? Stock-gambling. Of the vast majority who are victimized you hear not one word. One great stock firm goes down, and whole columns of newspapers discuss their fraud or their disaster, and are presented with their features and their biography. But where one such famous firm sinks, five hundred unknown men sink with them. The great steamer goes down, and all the little boats are swallowed in the same engulfment. Gambling is gambling, whether in stocks or breadstuffs, or dice, or race-horse betting. Exhilaration at the start, but a raving ruin, and a shattered nervous system, and a sacrificed property, and a destroyed soul at the last. Young men, buy no lottery tickets, purchase no prize packages, bet on no base-ball games or yacht-racing, have no faith in luck, answer no mysterious circulars proposing great income for small investment, drive away the buzzards that hover around our hotels trying to entice strangers. Go out and make an honest living. Have God on your side, and be a candidate for heaven. Remember all the paths of sin are banked with flowers at the start, and there are plenty of helping hands to fetch the gay charger to your door and hold the stirrup while you mount. But further on the horse plunges to the bit in a slough inextricable.

The poet Hesiod tells of an ambrosia and a nectar, the drinking of which would make men live forever, and one sip of the honey from the Eternal Rock will give you eternal life with God. Come off from the malarial levels of a sinful life. Come and live on the uplands of grace, where the vineyards sun themselves. "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is gracious!" Be happy now and happy forever. For those who take a different course the honey will turn to gall. For many things I have admired Percy Shelley, the great English poet, but I deplore the fact that it seemed a great sweetness to him to dishonor God. The poem "Queen Mab" has in it the maligning of the Deity. Shelley was impious enough to ask for Rowland Hill's Surrey Chapel that he might denounce the Christian religion. He was in great glee against God and the truth. But he visited Italy, and sailing one day on the Mediterranean with two friends in a boat which was twenty-four feet long he saw was coming toward shore when an hour's squall struck the water. A gentleman standing on shore through a glass saw many boats tossed in this squall, but all outrode the storm except one, in which Shelley and his two friends were sailing. That never came ashore, but the bodies of two of the occupants were washed up on the beach, one of them the poet. A funeral pyre was built on the sea-shore by some classic friends, and the two bodies were consumed. Poor Shelley! He would have no God while he lived, and I fear had no God when he died. "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish." Beware of the forbidden honey!

GROUNDS OF THE GOVERNOR'S RESIDENCE.

WHERE IT IS ALWAYS SUMMER.

Beautiful Bermuda and its Bowers of Bloom—Gunpowder and Lilies—Coraline Homes—The Perfection of Climate.

IN midwinter, a sixty-four hours' sail from New York City brings one into a summer land, a land of fruits and flowers, of the most perfect roads in the world—roads which make it a wheelman's paradise—and a land of such rest as busy people do not find in the progressive States.

The manners and customs of Bermuda resemble those of New England a century ago. We are bound to Bermuda by many natural and historical ties. Its early fortunes were interwoven with those of Jamestown, Sir George Somers founding the first settlement there in order that supplies might be produced for Jamestown. In the Revolution, the sympathies of Bermuda with her sister colonies were so strong that, at a very critical moment in American history, one hundred barrels of British powder found their way from Bermuda to America, and enabled Washington to achieve his first great victory in the revolutionary war, the evacuation of Boston by the British, March 17, 1776. At the quaint old town of St. George's, one is shown the exact spot from which that famous powder was taken. Now, Bermuda sends us the fruits of peaceableness, the best onions and potatoes that early New York markets receive, and—pretty thought and fact—at Easter time, the little islands which sent us gunpowder send us shiploads of Easter lilies.

One of the places which all tourists seek is "Fairy-Land," near Clarence Hill, the residence of the Admiral. In the magnificent lily fields of "Fairy-Land," more than one hundred thousand lilies may be seen blooming at one time. "Fairy-Land" is the residence of an American, General Hastings late of the U. S. Army, and his wife, a niece of ex-President Hayes.

St. George's, Bermuda, is the oldest English town in America. The only English settlement outdating it was at Jamestown, whose site is marked by a picturesque ruin. The oldest protestant church in America is at St. George's; the communion plate was presented by William III. in 1684; the baptismal basin by Governor Brown of Massachusetts in 1782.

The coast of Bermuda is one of the most beautiful in the world, many travelers pronouncing its effects even more brilliant than those of the beautiful Mediterranean. Flowers almost hide the white coraline houses which peep here and there from bowers of green foliage and gay blossoms. The climate is ideal, the temperature rarely exceeding 85 or falling below 50. It is curious to observe the mingling of the northern and tropical aspects—forests of native cedar, waving plumes of palms, the glory of the lemon, orange, and banana, all lending aid to the beauty of the islands. When Bermuda was first discovered by the English, it was inhabited by hogs. Bermudez, the Spaniard from whom it got its name, was wrecked there in 1515 en route from Spain to Cuba with a cargo of hogs. The unskilled mariners of those days told sad tales of the treacherous coast on which ships came to grief, where pirates hid their gold-en treasure, and from which doleful sounds were heard by passingships. Los Diabolos, the Spaniards called these islands. The tales that came to England of this mysterious land reached Shakespeare's ears, and so, when he wrote his "Tempest" and wanted to give his dainty Ariel a hard, uncanny task, he sent that airy spirit to "fetch dew from the still-vexed Bermuthes." When the English buccaneer, May, found these islands through shipwreck, he discovered the hogs, and also that they were the producers of the uncanny gruntings and squealings which Spanish superstition had attributed to devils. The first money of Bermuda was a hog on one face and a ship on the other.

The coraline quarries are one of the most interesting features. One finds them everywhere. If a man wants a plank for anything, he goes to the side of his yard and cuts out a slab of rock. The roadbeds are coraline rock, so firm, smooth, and porous, that in a few minutes after a rain, they are dry enough for wheelmen to go on their way rejoicing. Their sides are perpendicular walls, often thirty feet high, and covered with festoons of brilliant bloom. Particularly attractive is the road leading to the Governor's residence. It is customary for visitors to leave cards at the Governor's residence, in response to which they are invited to his reception.

BERMUDA ISLANDS, FROM GIBBS' HILL LIGHTHOUSE.

There are no beggars in Bermuda. Many negroes, Indians, and half-breeds are there, but they, like the whites, live in comfortable coraline houses that look like marble halls. There are public schools, and nearly everybody can read and write, yet opportunities for higher education are not found, and wealthy Bermudians employ private tutors or send their children abroad to be educated.

Neptune's Grotto, or "the Devil's Hole," as it is variously called, is one of the natural curiosities of the islands. It is a natural well, in which the fish, perfectly visible, are so numerous that they crowd each other. Among the inhabitants of "the Devil's Hole" are the beautiful angel fish, "so exquisite in their blue and gold, and with something so human in their mild, innocent faces, that they seem uncanny," as Julia C. R. Dorr said of them in her "Idyl of the Summer Islands." A more prosaic statement to be made of them is that they are a great table delicacy.

Bermuda is famous for abundance of fish,—having as many as one hundred and sixty-eight varieties. Fishing is a favorite pastime with many visitors, old and young. So are the pleasures of navigation. Sails in and out of the coral reefs are to be had for a song, and of water there is no lack, for Bermuda is but a speck on the bosom of the broad Atlantic. Its habitable area is but twenty square miles. From Gibb's Hill Light-house, one looks down on the entire group, and what a mere speck it is "in the illimitable waste of waters that stretch away to the horizon on every side"—a waste of soft and radiant hues, of purple, and gold, and amethyst and rose.

OUR FATHER'S CARE.

Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 6. Matt. 6: 24-34. Golden Text, 1. Peter 5: 7.

BY MRS M. BAXTER.

OUR Lord, having taught us the contrast between the meaningless, vain repetitions of the heathen to their false gods, and the prayer of his children to a heavenly Father who knoweth what things we have need of before we ask him, teaches us the gross sinfulness of anxiety. He has shown us after what manner we are to pray, seeking first in every petition God's interests, the honor of his name, the coming of his kingdom, the doing of his will. It is the prayer which becomes us; the prayer which puts God in his place and us in our place, and it takes away from us the unbecoming weakness of a selfish prayer, and at the same time the unworthy doubt whether God will answer us. If his interests are ours and our interests are his, then "this is the confidence which we have in him that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us, and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him" (1. John 5: 14. 15).

But true children are also willing servants; they serve their father as a hired servant cannot. Our service to our Heavenly Father must, moreover, be undivided. "No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other; ye cannot serve God and mammon. Therefore, I say unto you, be not anxious" (R. V.). The very prayer for the name, the kingdom, the will of our God is in itself a profession of service, a placing of ourselves at his disposal. But we must not part our service between him and another. We cannot. True service of God is all comprising. We can only serve God and our neighbor by serving our neighbor in our service of God.

We cannot serve God and mammon, whether that mammon be our own self-will, our Christian reputation, our personal tastes—our own interest in any way—or whether it be "men-service or the love of applause." We are "bought with a price"—our service belongs to another.

"Therefore, I say unto you, be not anxious.' The world is full of anxiety; it does not attempt to serve God, the whole world lieth in the wicked one (1. John 5: 19, R.V.) But, with sadly few exceptions, the church of Christ also is full of anxiety. The church does serve God, but she serves mammon too; and the one service counteracts the other. Look at the man of the world, keen after business; his heart set upon money making; how anxious he is! How eagerly he looks to the morning papers! How nervously he opens his letters and his telegrams! He has staked much on a certain business venture to serve himself. But he has no peace; the service of self is an anxious business; there is no peace in it. Look at the miserable gambler who for the pleasure of an hour's excitement will risk the bread of his wife and children, and the loss of all he has to maintain self-indulgence. Did you ever see a more fretful creature? Look at the woman of the world who has set her heart upon winning good marriages for her daughters. How anxious she is!

"Be not anxious" is the Lord's command, for anxiety implies distrust of God, and distrust of God implies sin. "Your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things" (Matt. 6: 32). Your Heavenly Father who is not deaf to the cry of the young ravens, which cry unto him for their food, and who feeds the birds of the air, which neither sow, nor reap, nor gather into barns, shall he not much more feed his own children who are of more value than many birds? Is not our Heavenly Father able to supply the requirements of his children of Israel from wearing old, and their shoes from wearing out, during forty years in the desert (Deut. 8: 4)? Is he changed now? Is he not to be trusted? Are not ye better, in the eyes of your Father, than the fowls of the heaven? And can you not trust him to do for you as much as he does for the little birds?

And what can anxiety do for us? Which of you by being anxious can add one cubit unto his stature? When did anxiety ever pay the rent, or heal the body, or save the reputation, or make the business scheme succeed, or marry the daughter, or place the son in a good position? When did anxiety ever bring money or workers for the work of the Lord? When did anxiety ever convert souls, or bring God's blessing upon a sermon? When did anxiety make a child obedient, or lead him to the Lord? Be not anxious.

The antidote to anxiety is faith in the living God. Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you (1. Pet. 5: 7). It is impossible to believe this and remain anxious.

And why are ye anxious concerning raiment (R. V.)? Why? Because we have such old fashioned clothes, and we do not think they look nice. How easy to tell your Heavenly Father! If he wants you to conform to the fashion, he can make it possible. But may it not be that the very straitness of your circumstances makes it easy in your case to be "not conformed to this world" (Rom. 12: 2)? There was no change of fashion among the children of Israel in the wilderness; but they always looked nice; God kept them from looking shabby. When God clothed Adam and Eve, he gave them clothing as a covering, not as an ornament. His ornament is "a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1. Pet. 3: 4), even though the outer garment of the body to which that spirit belongs be old-fashioned. If the great consideration in clothing be tidiness, cleanliness and suitable warmth, and fashion be the last consideration to be taken into account, there is not much room for anxiety.

The first reason for avoiding anxiety is lest we should serve two masters. The second reason is, "For after all these things do the Gentiles seek, and your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things" (v. 31, 32, R. V.). He knows and he cares. He is my Father, and he makes himself responsible for me. O, the wondrous unspeakable rest which this brings! Naturally it follows that the relationship between Father and child shall not be interrupted by distrust or disobedience, that our Father's children should persevere in the spirit of the prayer which he has taught them, and so seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. There are many who pray in the sense of urging God to help them in need, but with no idea of the reverence due to his name, or of submission to his will. They have read that he hears prayer, they want to make use of him to get their own desires they pray, and they wonder that they are not heard. "Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts" (James 4: 3).

God first is our true rule, and the only thing which a reverent mind sees to be true; but the kingdom of God and his righteousness; first thy kingdom come, for thine is the kingdom. Our Lord sets before us a high standard of prayer, and then enables us to live as we pray. And he takes the responsibility of making it answer for God's interests and for ours. "All these things shall be added unto you." We have yet to find one of God's children, wholly stayed on him, seeking only his glory, whom God abandons at the time of need. Be not therefore anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. God never lays impossible burdens upon his children. One day at a time is enough for us. If we believe he cares for us, we learn how to do our nearest duty undisturbed and leave the morrow to him.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

OUR Lord's teaching answers the questions which so perplexed Ecclesiastes. He, like so many in every age, could find no object in life that was worth pursuing. Christ points out such an object: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." To be a member of the kingdom, to become like God, to have his righteousness—there is something worth making the supreme concern. One who has chosen that, is raised above the common worries of life. He will not be ambitious to secure wealth, knowing that it is good only for this life; he will not be harassed about the future, for God knows he needs food, and he who provides for the birds will not let his children starve; he will not be given to ostentation, knowing that the utmost he can do will still leave him inferior to the flowers; he will not fret about his lot, for all the fretting will not lengthen his life. His thoughts are centred on better things, as much superior to them as life is to raiment. Christ does not counsel improvidence or laziness, but such a single and undivided pursuit of the one supreme object as shall make us indifferent to all other matters. He advises us to do the day's duty cheerfully, and go forward to meet the morrow with equanimity, in the calm assurance that, whatsoever it may bring, strength will be given us to do its duties and bear its burdens. This is the blessed life, which is impossible to the heathen, who know nothing of a loving Father.

LILIES OF THE FIELD FROM PALESTINE.

No man can serve two masters. Many have tried to do so, but no one has ever succeeded. Many are like the boy who, after an explanation of the Parable of Dives and Lazarus, was asked which of the two he would wish to be, replied: "I would like to be Dives while I live and Lazarus when I die." That is a way of making the best of both worlds, which must end in failure. A famous preacher, addressing a congregation of miners, put the situation forcibly when he pictured a miner who had worked in one pit, going over on pay-day to another pit and asking for wages. The master asks him, "Have you been working for me?" "Well, no; I have been working at the other pit," replies the man." "Then why do you come here for pay?" "Because your p is better than they give where I have be working." Few men have so much effr tery as that; but many attempt to se God in matters of observance and ce mony which are not difficult, but do not him rule their hearts and lives. St people when assailed by temptation sure to fall. Ralph Erskine says: " you see a dog following two men, you c not tell which he belongs to, while t walk together; but let them come t parting road, and one go one way and other another way, then you will kn which is the dog's master."

Take therefore no thought for the m row. That habit leaves us more at libe to give attention to the duties of to-d A person who is worrying about the fut and is oppressed by forebodings of com disaster is incapacitated for good wo In an approaching crisis the wise ma he who takes all the measures in his po to prepare himself for it, and then g forward to meet it without apprehensi One of Mr. Moody's hearers in Engl gave as a reason for not confessing Ch that she feared she could not contu stedfast. There was this trial and t difficulty that she would have to go throu Mr. Moody told her the fable of a cl which reckoned how many years it wo have to go on ticking, how many tick would have to give in a minute, how m in a day, how many in a year, and it s it could never do it. But its maker asl it if it could not do one tick at a time, the clock said it could. "Then," said clockmaker, "that is all you have to d The lady went away encouraged, many years afterwards when Mr. Mo met her and asked her how she was doi she answered, "Still holding on, one t at a time."

Is not the life more than meat? W a man devotes all his thought and e gies and time to the accumulation money, and when he has gained it, ho it and puts it to no good use, but is in only on making the heap larger, an lives his life out in labor and hards and dies leaving it all behind him, shows his folly. The late Mr. A. Stewart showed a visitor through great dry-goods stores, explaining to the ramifications of his retail, wholes and manufacturing departments. visitor was impressed with the vast of the business, and congratulated Stewart. He thought he must be a happy man. "What would you cons a fair compensation," asked Mr. Stew "for managing all this business?" visitor could not say off-hand, but he sure that for such work a man would serve a large remuneration. Mr. Stew asked him if he would be willing to dertake it for his board and clot "Certainly not," said the visitor. "W said Mr. Stewart, "that is all I get."

A LIGHTHOUSE FOR SEAMEN'S SOULS.

ood Work Being Done for Jack at the Gloucester Fisherman's Institute—His Worth to the Nation—His Needs.

THE Gloucester Fisherman's Institute was founded Nov. 10. 1891. for the purpose of improving the condition of seamen in the port of Gloucester and its vicinity: and establishing and maintaining a place for reading-rooms. libraries. social.educational. and religious meetings. A band of noble-hearted men and women felt their hearts oved with sympathy and compassion owards them "that go down to the sea in hips. that do business in great waters." hey felt that Jack needed a lighthouse o save him from dangers ashore as well s to warn him from rocks at sea. We who sit by our own warm firesides with ll our loved ones around us. when the inds are howling without. can hardly ealize the hardships and perils of the ailor's and the fisherman's life. nor the nxieties or heartaches of those who vatch for them. Not only is the seaman ontinually exposed to the peril of wind nd wave. but the breakers upon which is moral nature may go to wreck are eculiarly numerous. Coming into ports vhere he has no home. false lights lure im: and Jack. tired and cold: reckless. naybe. from his battle with the elements: r disheartened or disgusted. because the ea has not yielded its expected harvest: s often fain to follow.

REV. EMANUEL G. CHARLTON.

Emanuel C. Charlton. chaplain of the Institute. gives in brief and in nautical erms its history of progress. of dangers assed. and ends achieved: "Six years nave passed since we launched the Gloucester Fishermen's Institute on the great sea of opportunity. richly freighted. equipped. fitted. and manned. for an experimental mission voyage. Since when we have encountered some storms. run dangerously near certain hidden. unmarked. because unexplored. shoals. We have sometimes heard the roar of breakers under our lee. But with a sharp look-out ahead. and a firm hand on the helm. when danger threatened. we have tacked. wore ship. or shortened sails. as occasion demanded. When favored by fair winds and plenty of sea room. we have crowded on canvas until the timbers have creaked. the spars trembled. and our fellow voyagers have wondered. Commissioned by High Heaven to carry God's love. and real. hearty. human sympathy and aid to a noble body of imperrilled men! We have done it. and it is our pleasure now to report a successful and fairly profitable voyage. The G. F. I. has passed its propationary period. and ought no longer to be regarded as an experiment. but what it actually is. a practical. Christian Union Mission at work. These years of toil and activity have been richly crowned with mercies. and we have much evidence that our labors have not been in vain in the Lord."

In his report of Jan. 1827. he says:

I am glad to record a very evident moral improvement among our fishermen during the past eight months that the saloons were closed. During that period I found very few fishermen in the Lock-up, the best evidence that the men are not the corruptors of our morals that they have ever been charged with. and that the men who plead for open saloons for fishermen. first insult. then rob them.

The annual harvest of the American fisheries is $45.000.000: there are nearly 200.000 fishermen in the United States. and these fishermen are the American Coast Guard. Surely they are worth more than passing consideration at the hands of the Christian public. The fisherman's life. assailed by danger and temptation. and often full of weakness. is full of heroism and usefulness too. To this 200.000 fishermen there is but one Fishermen's Bethel. The Fishermen's Institute is a national necessity: it needs to and ought to be endowed. It is a harbor of refuge: it's bright light flashes through the darkness over waves of sin: its warm social and religious life revives perishing men: its navigation school equips and furnishes master mariners. Gloucester. a noted fishing-port on Cape Ann on the coast of Massachusetts. has 400 fishing vessels. manned by 6.000 men. and the Atlantic coast fisheries center there. That the sailors appreciate the advantages provided by the Institute is shown by the fact that its reading room is usually taxed to its utmost capacity. The Chapel services are well attended by devout, though often strange worshippers. for this is the stranger's Sabbath home and house of worship. always open. a sanctuary for weary souls. The Institute. beautiful for situation and near to all the larger sailor boarding-houses. and the center where men naturally congregate. is a cheerful and inviting shelter from the storm. and a safe refuge from gilded portals of death and despair. alas! too near at hand.

In the summer. out-door services are held and are well-attended. Services. talks. and entertainments are also given at the various summer hotels. At these, the guests becoming interested in the good work. have responded usually with generous contributions. In fact good people have needed only to hear and see something of this work in order to readily and gladly lend their aid. Good literature. comfort bags. clothing. etc.. have come from many sources. Three memorial libraries and a choice collection of rare coins from Mrs. J. O. Watson of Orange. N. J.. a bountiful supply of ice daily from Mr. Nathaniel Webster. contributions from the churches. many courtesies from the local press. a $200 appropriation from the American Seamen's Friend Association. the Thomas Niles Memorial Fund of $15.000. are among the many blessings for which the institution has occasion for gratitude. The Institute should have an endowment fund of $50.000. Here is an opportunity for some rich American. whose heart goes out to seamen. to raise a lasting monument to himself or to some one dear to him. Yet. if the rich American is slow to come forward and do himself and his fellows this act of grace. we know how the widow's mite was appraised by our Lord. and every offering for the furtherance of the work of the Institute will be gladly received and conscientiously applied by its officers and directors. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will take pleasure in acknowledging and transmitting any contributions sent to its care.

THE MISSION SCHOONER. "SHIP OF ZION."

A THIRTY YEARS' PASTORATE.

Dr. John Hall Resigns the Pulpit of the Fifth Ave. Presbyterian Church, New York.

AS briefly announced in this journal last week. Dr. John Hall. the eminent and beloved pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York. has resigned his pastorate. It is now thirty years since Dr. Hall was called to this famous pulpit. and. during that long term of service. his preaching. and above all. his singularly lovable character have won for him a host of friends in his own church and in other communities. His ministry has been characterized by those two qualities which one of the greatest writers of our time denominated. sweetness and light. It has been the sweetness of amiability and love. the charity which thinketh no evil. suffereth long and is kind: and. with this. an inflexible fidelity to principle and to the faith once delivered to the saints. Dr. Hall. though one of the most prominent leaders of the Presbyterian Church in America. has never been a leader of assaults on his brethren in the ministry. Conservative in his own belief. and preaching the orthodox doctrines of the faith. he has always displayed a loving tolerance for others who adopted different views. and has used his potent influence to promote peace in the disputes which have arisen from time to time. There was never any doubt as to where Dr. Hall stood on all matters of orthodoxy. nor has there ever been any doubt as to what course his kindly disposition would lead him to take in all controversies about the vagaries of his brethren. So it has come about that Dr. Hall is one of the best loved ministers of the city. and has experienced the fulfilment of our Lord's beatitude. "Blessed are the peacemakers."

Dr. Hall is an Irishman by birth. though he is Scotch by descent. He was born in Armagh in 1829. He was only thirteen years old when he passed his entrance examination at the old college of Belfast. and. he was only twenty. when after a brilliant academic career. he was licensed to preach. His first ministerial work was done in the rugged life of a missionary in the west of Ireland. Three years of devoted life was given to this field. and then an invitation. which must have been encouraging to a young man. came to him. offering him the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church. of Armagh. During the six years of his pastorate of that church. the young minister labored zealously in pulpit and in pastoral duty. and the church prospered under his labors.

"MOTHER ANN," THE OLD STONE WOMAN.

In 1858. Dr. Hall was called to Dublin to occupy the pulpit of St. Mary's Abbey. During that pastorate Dr. Hall initiated and carried to completion the building of Rutland Square Church.

In 1867. the Presbyterian Assembly of Ireland decided to send a delegate to the Assembly of the United States. and Dr. John Hall was selected to carry the greetings to his brethren on this side the Atlantic. He went to Cincinnati. where the Old School Assembly that year held its meetings. and there his voice was raised in an earnest and eloquent plea for unity and brotherly spirit that makes for peace. He made a similar appeal to the New School Assembly which was at Rochester. N. Y. During his visit. he accepted an invitation to preach at the Fifth Avenue Church. which then stood on Nineteenth Street and was without a pastor. owing to the retirement of Dr. Nathan L. Rice. So impressed was the Church by the vigor and eloquence of the young preacher that a call was sent to him by cable soon after his return to Dublin. He accepted it. and in November. 1867. began his long and successful pastorate.

During his pastorate the church has steadily grown in numbers and in influence. It was soon necessary to secure more commodious quarters. and the great building at Fifty-fifth street which. with its chapel and parsonage. cost more than a million dollars. was erected. It became a center of spiritual and philanthropic activity. It supported the Romeyn chapel in Seventy-fourth street.the Alexander chapel in King street. a mission chapel in Sixty-third street. a Chinese mission in Fifty-ninth street and a Children's Home at Atlantic Highlands. N. J. Besides these. the Sunday School. the Christian Endeavor Society and other agencies were in efficient work. and in all of them the pastor's energy and personal magnetism were moving and inspiring the workers. Dr. Hall has led a busy life during these thirty years. Besides his regular labors as preacher and pastor. he has been a regular contributor to the religious press. and has produced several valuable theological works. including "A Christian Home and How to Maintain It:" "God's Word Through Preaching" and other well-known books. In addition. he has served the Presbyterian Church as Chairman of its Board of Home Missions and as a Trustee of Princeton and Union Seminary.

The relations of pastor and church have been of the most intimate and cordial character. The pastor gave the church judicious and faithful service. and the church showed its appreciation by giving him the largest salary paid to any Presbyterian pastor in the world. He has been the friend and counsellor of the humblest member. and has been the benevolent helper of many a struggling Christian in this and other cities. His well-known kindness has not been altogether without its perils. In November. 1891. a man of unbalanced mind. not getting from Dr. Hall the attention to which. in his exaggerated self-esteem he deemed himself entitled. fired three shots at the distinguished pastor as he was leaving the church but providentially all failed to touch him.

It was with genuine sorrow that on January 9. the church received the news that Dr. Hall deemed it necessary to lay down the burden he has so long and so honorably borne. For more than a year past. he has felt that it should be on younger shoulders. and that a younger man was needed to efficiently fill the pastorate. The session urged him to accept assistance. but Dr. Hall believed that the man who did the work would be entitled to the honors of the pastorate. and in spite of the protests of his friends. insisted on retiring. He will probably be made pastor emeritus of the church. and will carry into his well-earned rest. the good-will. respect and affection of a host of sincere friends.

How You May Help Cuba.

WE believe that every one of God's children in our beloved Union has the cause of poor, stricken Cuba deeply at heart. Many letters have come to us, in which the writers ask to be informed how they can best help in the relief work which President McKinley and our Secretary of State have so eloquently urged upon the American people.

There are three ways of assisting in this movement to save the lives of the perishing population of that unhappy island, whose people have now no other means of succor:

First—You can give of your own substance, according as God has prospered you, and as your heart, touched like that of the good Samaritan, with a holy sympathy, may dictate. Even a mite, given in Christ's name, for such a purpose, will accomplish much. Remember, too, that it is the Master's own work—the same in which He took special joy while here on the earth, he fed the hungry, cured the sick, and comforted the sorrowful ones.

Second—You can plead the cause of Cuba with others, and thus bring many hearts into active sympathy with your own. Groups of friends, churches, Sunday schools, societies, and similar organizations may thus be brought into the movement, with the result of saving thousands of precious lives.

Third—You can give—irrespective of any money donation—your earnest prayers for the speedy succor of Cuba and the success of the work we have undertaken. Our first food cargoes have already reached Havana, and many of the starving are even now realizing the blessings of America's generosity. We need to make haste in order to do the most effective work. Let us, for Christ's sake, every [illegible] gladly in sending forward [illegible] to the Cuban.

CHINAS' PERIL.

SO rapidly does the aspect of the Chinese question change and so successfully have the great powers of Europe concealed their projects until the time arrived for their execution, that the public is even yet by no means assured that the situation is completely understood. It is evident that an understanding between Russia and Germany has reached some time ago, which was not disclosed. Russia, as China's self-constituted protector, might have reasonably been expected to object to Germany's seizure of the port of Kiao-Chau. In her alliance with France, she has another reason for opposing German aggression, but neither ground seems to have weighed with her, and, as China was helpless, the German project has been realized. Russia now occupies Port Arthur, with the consent of China, to counterbalance the advantage Germany has secured. England, whose trade with China is larger than either of the other powers, appeared to have gained no compensation; but it is announced that she is considering a proposal to lend China sixty million dollars for which some security must be provided. It will not, therefore, be surprising to learn that some territory is assigned to England as security for the money, and so England may, after all, have a share of the booty. There is reason to fear that China, for whose conversion to Christianity a host of missionaries have long and zealously labored, will not be favorably impressed by the depredations of these professedly Christian nations. Nor will it easily understand the declaration of the object of his mission, which was given by Prince Henry, the brother of the Emperor of Germany, on the eve of his departure to take command of the German expedition. Responding at a banquet at Kiel to the Emperor's address, Prince Henry said: "The aim that draws me on is to declare in foreign lands the gospel of your Majesty's hallowed person, to preach it to every one who will hear it, and also to those who will not hear it. This gospel I will have inscribed on my banner, and I will inscribe it whithersoever I go. As for those whose happy fate it is to be permitted to fare forth with me, I call upon them to impress the image of our Kaiser upon their minds and to let the cry resound far over the world—Most august, most mighty, beloved Emperor, King and Lord, for ever and ever." It will be as the commander of a powerful fleet, rather than as a preacher, that Prince Henry will secure the respect of the Chinese; but his mission is consistent with his gospel. In no other way could such a gospel be propagated. It is only the Prince of Peace who can succeed by the higher method:

PRINCE HENRY OF GERMANY.

My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight: but now is my kingdom not from hence (John 18:36).

Boys Steal a House.

Two boys, fourteen years old, were arraigned in a New York Police Court a few days ago on the charge of being concerned in the theft and destruction of a house. The judge, looking at the little prisoners who were evidently greatly terrified, expressed his astonishment at the charge. "What do you mean?" he asked. "These boys could not carry a hen house." The complainant explained that the two prisoners were only specimens of about a hundred boys in the neighborhood, who finding a small frame house unoccupied, had removed it piecemeal to make bonfires. When they were caught, they were hauling away the last section of the staircase. Doors and window-frames and shingles have long since been burned, and the complainant said if they were not restrained there would not be a vestige of the house left in a few days. He had been put in charge of the house by the owner, a lady who is traveling in Europe. His instructions were to find a tenant for it, but he had been unable to do so, and he was concerned about the owner's wrath when she returns, and finds the property in ruins and the greater part destroyed. If the house had been occupied this destruction could not have taken place. It was because it was empty and there was no one within to protect it, that the boys were able to dismantle it. It is so with human beings, as Christ pointed out. When he dwells in them they are safe from the depredations of the evil one.

Strange Use for a Cat.

A singular story of matrimonial estrangement comes from a village in New Jersey. The husband is employed in New York City, but owns a farm in the village, which he manages with the aid of a hired man to look after the laborers. His wife also gives her attention to the interests of the farm. They were married twenty-one years ago, but their life has been an unhappy one. His wife was a member of the church and was regular in attendance at the services. Soon after the marriage a sceptical book fell in the husband's way and he was affected by its teachings. He procured other books of the same kind and studied them until he became an avowed infidel. He was unable to convince his wife that her religion was false, but she had to bear his jibes and taunts and blasphemous remarks. He strenuously objected to her attending church, and was irritated by her fidelity to her religion. Finally their life became one of continual jarring and open quarrel. Their alienation increasing, they ceased speaking to each other, and when some communication was necessary, the speaker would address the family cat in the hearing of the other. This uncomfortable condition of affairs has continued for nearly twenty years. Recently, visitors to the farm noticed with surprise that the husband and wife are on speaking terms at last. It is not known how the difficulty was adjusted, but the husband and wife now address one another directly, and the cat's services are no longer required. That is much more agreeable and one may hope it will continue. There should not be even the fiction of an intermediary between husband and wife. There ought not to be any between man and his God, but, unhappily, there are many in all lands who think that the intercession of priests and saints is necessary. Their sense of alienation from God blinds their eyes to the truth which Christ came to reveal:

The Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me (John 16:27).

Compelled to Eat.

A strange difficulty with a prisoner has been puzzling the warden of the city jail of Baltimore, Md. The woman is resolved to starve herself to death. A reporter, who visited the jail to inquire about the case, says: "The warden, finding it impossible to induce her to eat, sent for the jail physician. He visited her and forced some milk down her throat by means of a metal tube. The woman fought against the treatment, but the weight and concentrated "persuasion" of four deputies were too much for her. On the following day she was compelled to take a little more milk, and the next day the physician again visited her and used a little more persuasion. The jail officials believe that as soon as the woman is convinced that she can be fed by force she will calm down considerably and find her appetite, which, during her previous incarceration in the institution, was very healthy. If she does not change her manner of existing, it is probable that the physician will find it necessary to try chloroforming her. When under the influence of the drug, she can be fed enough to last her for a week or two. At any rate, she stands a small chance of dying. Many people act in this way about spiritual food. They wonder that they do not make progress in the divine life, while they obstinately refuse to take the nourishment which God provides. But no force is used in His kingdom. The only people who attain spiritual growth are those whom Christ describes:

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled (Matt. 6: 6).

Decided by the Dog.

A judge and jury have been occupied for two days at Bridgeport, Conn., in hearing a case in which the question was as to the ownership of a valuable mastiff. About fifty witnesses were examined, but the principal one was the dog. It was on the mute testimony of the dog that the Court decided the case. The defendant, in whose possession the dog has been for months, introduced many witnesses to prove his claim that the dog belonged to him. He and his wife swore to the devotion of the dog to them, and said he was known by the name of Sancho. On cross-examination the plaintiff's attorney had the dog brought into the court. The defendant and his wife called "Sancho, Sancho," but the dog did not pay any attention to them. Then the plaintiff called, "Prince, come here, old fellow." The mastiff made a dash for him, jumping up among the lawyers and witnesses and scattering them right and left and almost upsetting the Justice in his efforts to reach his master. The action of the dog was so convincing to the Justice that he awarded the case to the plaintiff with costs. There is often a question as to whom worldly Christians belong, as they are not careful to follow their Master. The time is coming when a similar test to that which decided the dog's ownership will be made.

He calleth his own sheep by name and leadeth them out .. for they know his voice, and a stranger will they not follow (John, 10: 3, 4).

An Imprisoned Princess.

A romantic story of the release of an imprisoned princess is cabled to the New York Herald from Palermo. It appears Signor Maltese, a prominent lawyer of that city received about two weeks ago, a letter informing him that the Princess Carini with her blind daughter was shut up in her palace, and was being slowly starved to death, and was in danger of being murdered. He immediately made an investigation, and learned that one wing of the palace was occupied by a lawyer and his family, who was the agent for the management of the Princess Carini's property, which was very large, and was all in his hands. Suspecting that there was foul play, Signor Maltese applied to the Government for assistance. Suddenly one morning the Palace was surrounded by soldiers, and Signor Maltese, with two high police officials, broke in the doors and searched the place. There they found the Princess and her blind daughter, a girl twenty years old, locked in a rear room, which was without fire and bitterly cold. The two ladies were clad in foul rags and were very hungry. They had been immured in this room for four years. Some years before, when the Princess came into the possession of her property she had employed the lawyer to manage it for her, and as the duty occupied the greater part of his time, and he appeared devoted to her interests she consented to his bringing his family and occupying a wing of the palace. She was devoted to her afflicted daughter and knew but little of business matters, so she was easily persuaded to give the lawyer a power of attorney, so as to relieve herself of trouble. Then the lawyer shut her and her daughter in the room, refused to supply her with money, and prevented her communicating with her friends. He repeatedly threatened to kill them and treated them with gross cruelty. The Princess had frequently tried during her four years' imprisonment to invoke assistance, but until she got her letter into the hands of Signor Maltese the other day, she had been unable to obtain help. It is gratifying to know that her cruel oppressor is in prison and will be tried for his crime. During her long imprisonment the Princess must have bitterly regretted putting herself and her daughter in the power of such a man, and is doubtless now rejoicing in the deliverance that Signor Maltese has wrought for her. We can but wish that Satan's captives, who are held in the chains of habit and association, would, like the Princess, ask deliverance of One who can deliver them.

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will (II. Timothy, 2: 26).

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Dealing with Stubborn Daughters—Candor Between Engaged People—Young Stepmothers—John and his "Pardner"—Styles in Stationery.

ONE OF OUR friends desires aid in settling a purely personal question—the question of his marriage to a young woman whose circumstances in life have been very undesirable. No outsider can give advice worth consideration when a man's affections are engaged, but it is quite safe to say, in this and every case, that there can be no possibility of happiness or honor in married life unless there is entire candor and openness on the part of both man and woman, not only as to the present, but as to the entire past, in every particular. If there are revelations to be made, let both make them, and then begin the new life in forgetfulness and forgiveness of all which was wrong, and in humble trust in God. Deceit is like the spider's web, torn away by a puff of wind. Truth builds on everlasting foundations which will withstand all the storms of life.

My dear friends must be patient if I keep some of them waiting awhile for answers to their inquiries. Here is a puzzled mother who is disturbed over the stubborn will of a little girl of three. She says, "Husband tells me we must break Dorothy's will and teach her obedience." By all means, teach Dorothy to obey, but never, never, break her will. The will is to be trained, and guided, not broken. Avoid painful contests with your little daughter. Do not say, "You must do this or that," and enter on a fight to make her do it. If you are wise you will use gentleness and tact, influence her imagination; say, "Mother asked you to do this, dear," and when you must punish, let it be for the first disobedience, and be done with it. If Dorothy refuses to pick up the book or the anything, pick it up yourself and put it away for the day. Don't spend your morning trying to make her pick the offending object up. Put her in the corner if you like for not doing it, but don't fight with a baby. I am giving you advice out of much experience for, though my friends laugh at me because I haven't the right ideas about kitchen aprons, and, on the whole, make me convinced that I had better let that subject alone hereafter, I am very sure there isn't anybody who knows me who will not say that I've succeeded wonderfully in bringing up quite a family of children, not all my own, either, in blood-bond, but all my own in dear love. I must mention the children, and I'd like, if I could, to gather both you and Dorothy in my motherly arms and tell you a bedtime story tonight.

I READ with the deepest interest and desire to help if I can the letter which comes to me from you, dear Caroline D. To many, take all the trouble and heart burnings to a friend, which you have only in an effort to extricate yourself from your present difficulties, would seem a small matter, but I do not want to be assured that I regard your confidence in me as a most precious thing. Every woman who knows that her husband will come home to his dinner and comfort. You are good enough, my dear, to feel that you have failed in your duty to your husband, to your home, to your little step-son, no longer than yourself. For a period of several years, it is important that you do to the best of your ability, with strong, loving love, you have managed the home and, indeed, ever since your mother's death you have taken entire care of the younger children, and done everything for your father's comfort. That he should marry again surprises you; that his choice should fall on a girl so young and inexperienced is at once an amazement and a chagrin beyond the power of speech to describe; yet people who know the world will tell you that men in similar conditions often behave in a similar way.

Your father's wife will, of course, be the mistress of his house, and you must in some measure defer to her. The part of common-sense will be to receive her kindly, smooth her pathway with your brothers and sisters, accord her the attention which is her due, in the relation she bears to your father; in short, be honestly as friendly as you can. All may go well. You and she may prove unexpectedly congenial. Your father will be happy if this is the case, and you will appear more dignified if you accept the situation with graceful tact, than if you rebel against it.

One thing is evident, that a great burden is to be rolled off your shoulders, and that you, being of full age, and a very capable woman, are now free to go away, engage in work, and live your own life outside your father's house, if you do not find that you are wanted or needed there any longer.

John is a splendid fellow, a devoted husband, a good provider, an excellent citizen. But John's wife would like it better if he were a trifle more orderly. John, on his side, complains that he has not a place in the house to call his own. "I can never find anything where I leave it. Mary is bound to pile my newspapers on the top shelf, to tie a string round my letters and stick them behind the clock, to put my razors out of sight, and hang her dresses in my closet on top of my Sunday coat. I often wish I had one room in which I could do as I please."

Two years ago I was a guest in a great house where there were many rooms, and here, Mary, taking taking John at his word, had given him a big, sunny chamber, where he had full liberty to keep his things in the wild confusion and fearful chaos men fancy they like. What was the result? John came to breakfast one morning and remarked, pleasantly: "My dear, I wish you would occasionally take time to put my den in some sort of order. I'd rather keep my traps in our room anyhow, they're handier to get at, and if you want my den for Jack's playroom, in stormy weather, pray take it and welcome."

John, dear fellow, is the happier, for a Saviour for every age, and every man and woman until time shall be no more.

Dear Lucia, your mother is right. A young girl cannot receive costly presents from any man outside her family, unless, indeed, from her betrothed husband. A flower, a box of candy, a book, may be sent by an admiring acquaintance and accepted by a maiden, but never jewelry, nor articles of dress. Your mother did her duty in returning the gifts sent you by the man in question, and I am sure he will not take offence when he reads her gracious note of explanation in the matter.

DEAR MARGARETTA E. P.:—I am very much pleased to hear about your little society. There is a similar one on the street where I live. The girls meet once a fortnight to read Shakespeare, and one of them always writes a little essay on some part of the story under discussion, which she reads, while the rest criticise. That is the only part of the programme I do not quite like. A little group who meet to sew might select one of their number to read aloud—anything, poems, stories—whatever the girls preferred.

I thank you for your very nice letter, and I send my love to all the young friends who care for me.

FAMINE RELIEF WORK AT KANIGIRI, INDIA, CONDUCTED BY REV. GEO. BROCK.

Relief Work in India.

How "The Christian Herald" Famine Relief Fund Found Employment for Starving Men at Kanigiri.

ONE of the most serious difficulties in the work of famine relief in India which all the missionaries perceived, was the result likely to follow a long continued distribution of gratuitous funds. The most self respecting natives preferred to work for the money that was paid, but there were some, as there are in all communities who are willing to live on charity and when they have been kept for a time without work, are reluctant to work when they have opportunity. Recognizing this fact, many of the missionaries, having the best interests of the people at heart, looked around for even useless work that could be done, when work of practical utility was not possible, and paid money in wages rather than in charity. Happily, however, there was in nearly all cases some useful work that could be commenced such as the digging of wells and such like works of public utility.

On this page is a picture reproduced from a photograph, of one of these works which the funds contributed by our readers rendered possible. Rev. Geo. F. Brock, Baptist missionary at Kanigiri, in the Nellore district caused several wells to be dug in the surrounding villages, thus giving employment to starving men. There being still a large number entreating to be set to work, he secured a supply of stone, scantlings and straw for thatching, at his own expense, and with these a large shed was erected for public meetings and a rude house which could be utilized for purposes of Christian hospitality. The picture on this page represents the work in progress. The money supplied by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund paid the wages of the laborers and care was taken to select such as were out of employment and in urgent need of help. The gratitude of the men for this relief was touching to witness and Mr. Brock was requested to convey it to all the contributors to our fund.

We regret to learn from Mr. Boggs that in his district, as that of Mr. Brock, and other Baptist missionaries, there is the greatest apprehension. The monsoon which has brought relief in rain to the parched land in so many parts of India has wholly or partially failed in the great district in which the Baptist missionaries are laboring, and famine is now staring the people in the face. The following letter from Dr. Samuel W. Duncan, Foreign Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, which we briefly alluded last week, eloquently describes the need of help:

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH,

My Dear Sir:—We had supposed that all danger from famine was past, so far as our missions were concerned, but there has been an entire failure of the northeast monsoon, affecting at least eight of our stations, more severely than ever before; among them Ongole, Kanigiri, Cumbum, etc. In fact as Mr. Brock of Kanigiri writes: "Our Christians are starving to death right about us. The famine in this part has been coming on for three years, and has now taken hold." We must evidently forward relief to these stations at once, and at present we are without funds. I write to ask if you have any funds at your disposal for famine relief, and if you are able to help us at this extremity. Portions of our mission fields have been abundantly watered, but the north-east monsoon seems to have been limited in its range as never before, affecting most disastrously a portion of our district. An early reply will be heartily appreciated. Faithfully yours,

(Signed) SAMUEL W. DUNCAN,
Foreign Secretary.

There is reason to hope that the International Denominational Committee, which is administering THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, will send prompt relief.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Old-Fashioned Knitting.

n Art that Is Disappearing as Machinery dvances—Knitting Needles and Sheaths.

THERE are few handicrafts that seem more antiquated than knitting. The word brings up before you the picture of a dear old grandmother sitting in her corner, her knitting needles icking in and out of the stocking grow- g under them. Pinned on the left side f her bodice, just above the belt, is a knitting sheath."—a heart-shaped bit of elvet or silk, or some fine stuff, with goose-quill in it as a needle-rest. Holidays and birthdays she was ure to receive a lot of "knitting- heaths." Some of them would be ade like butterflies, the quill being he body, the silk or velvet the vings; and all would be quite fine vith "brier" or "cat-stick" finish- ngs. She could knit without watch- ng her needles; she told stories and nit, read her Bible and knit. And ou think of her and the Bible and nitting together. And you will be urprised to search your concor- ance and find that no such indus- ry is mentioned in the Bible. In act, knitting is the youngest of im- ortant textile manufactures, no nention of it occurring earlier than he beginning of the fifteenth cen- ury. Caps were knit before stock- ngs. An Act of Parliament in Henry VII's time, mentions knitted voollen caps. By 1553, the indus- ry had much advanced, for Ed- vard VI's subjects wore "knitte ose, knitte pelicotes," and knitte gloves, and hosiery is mentioned as trade; and Edward's wardrobe nd that of his father, Henry VIII, ncluded the esteemed luxuries of ilk hose.

The first knitting-machine was in- vented by Rev. William Lee, a graduate of Cambridge, who worked patiently and perseveringly over his "stocking-frame" until it combined such admirable qualities that its es- sential features continue in use as basis for the elaborate mechanical devices of our day. The great knitting mills employing many hands turn out garments wonder- ful for smoothness and fineness; and the old art of knitting with needles, as practised now is usually pastime rather than necessity. Yet, in spite of the busy mills, there are hands which still ply the needles, turning out socks and gloves, (which wear the warmer may be for the love that helped in their mak- ing) for there are yet grandmothers who cling to the accomplishment of their early days. Shepherds, watch- ing their flocks, beguile their quiet hours with the gentle industry, and the fisherman's wife between the mending of nets and other cares, knits like the old dame in our illustration, while she waits for her husband to come home with his haul of mackerel or other "food of the sea."

THE OLD FISHERWOMAN AND HER KNITTING NEEDLES.

Country-Bred Girls.

Many of the world's greatest women, says an exchange, have been girls, who, reared on farms, have successfully sought fame and fortune in the busy centres. It is also true that the greatest number of those women who make up the dregs of the city's wickedness have been girls who, reared on farms away from knowledge and the temptations of sin, tired of the drudgery of farm life, have gone into the cities, hoping for pleasanter lives and easier work. Most of them enter store, factory or some one's kitchen. Best off are those who choose the last. The life of a clerk in a city store is anything but easy. Only a few can rise to the position of head salesman, and they are the only ones really well paid. Standing all day wait- ing on unreasonable customers, always with pleasant faces no matter how weary the brain and body; exposed to the great- est temptations, it is no wonder that so many fall.

Lack of Home Sunshine.

Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as the flowers need sun- beams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases, they are apt to seek it: if it displeases, they are apt to avoid it. If home is a place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault- finding in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.

Games from Salem.

It is not generally known that many of the pleasant home games that entertain our young folks come from Salem, Mass. That old town seems to have the inven- tive faculty specially well developed. An exchange says: "Those of us who can recall the pleasure of a tee-to-tum march to the Mansion of Happiness, never knew, perhaps, that to Miss Abbot of Salem we were indebted for the beguiling of our youthful days. The first home game ever issued in this country was designed by her, and appeared in 1840. The "Mansion of Happiness" came out soon after. Croquet owes its origin to the makers in Sa- lem; it was a party of Salem ladies who devised that still popular and memory- strengthener game of Authors. Salem's newest thing is a post office game where miniature postmen traverse the city."

Innocent Games.

All games innocently played are inno- cent, an exchange remarks, and only such things as are in themselves hurtful to the child should be positively forbidden, and then only after you have given him an opportunity to exercise his own judge- ment and will power, remembering always the parents' part is not so much to control the child as to teach him self-control. Usually just the fact that you do not ap- prove of a thing is sufficient restraint. In- deed being stringently strict is often a means of making children deceitful and untruthful. This applies not only to a child's games but to his reading and his playmates, both such potent factors in the formation of character.

Brave Little Hearts.

Children of the most tender years some- times surprise their elders by such dis- plays of self-denial and nobility of charac- ter as would be admirable at any age. A contemporary tells of a lady who was walking homeward from a shopping ex- cursion, carrying two or three packages in her hand, while by her side walked her lit- tle boy. The child was weary: the little feet began to lag, and soon a wailing cry arose:

"I'm too tired! I want somebody to let me wide home!"

The mother looked about her, but there was no street car going in her direction. She took one of her parcels and gave it to the child.

"Mamma is tired, too, and I must help her to get home. She is glad she has such a brave little man to take care of her, and help to carry the bundles."

Instantly the little fellow straightened, his step quickened, and he reached for the offered parcel, saying, stoutly: "I'll tarry 'em all, mamma." It was only the old les- son that our Father is always teaching us: "Try to lighten another's burden, and the loving service shall smooth thine own path."

THE VILLAGE CHURCH.

SOMEWHAT as vagrant winds waft in the fragrance of the rose,
Or gleam of sunshine gilds the path that leads through drifted snows,
The memory of the time comes back o'er wastelands of the past,
When clouds about our early ways no mar- ring shadows cast;
And more than all, the Sunday morns, in summer glory fair,
When mother sang the old-time hymns, and father led in prayer!

Out in the graveyard each white tomb loomed like a hoary head,
The near-by brook sang tirelessly to cheer the dreamless dead.
Upon the hillside one could see, where shim- mering sunbeams lay,
And butterflies seemed flowers a-wing, the lazy cattle stray;
And up to God went thankful praise—it welled from everywhere—
As mother sang the old-time hymns, and father led in prayer.

O church among the circling hills, by well- nigh all forgot!
O voice that sang old "Happy Day" as saints I thought could not!
O sire, who had your share of woe, but walked the ways obscure,
In patience and with dauntless breast, with thoughts and motives pure!
If I could but be young a day, and spend that day back where My mother sang the old-time hymns, and father led in prayer.

Advice From a Statesman.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Lyman D. Gage, whose suc- cess in life has already been made the subject of a biographical sketch in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, gives this practical advice to a young man looking for a beginning in the battle of life. Mr. Gage wrote advis- ing him: "To look around him and put his hand to the first honest work that offered, watching for the opportunities of life, but never try- ing to break open doors." That has been Mr. Gage's plan all his life. When he was a boy he worked in a fish, fruit, and soda water store for five dollars a month, and con- tinued there two years.

Throughout his young manhood Mr. Gage's plan was always the same. He took hold of whatever came to him, and kept at it till he had saved a little money to get some more schooling, or until a better place was offered to him. As messenger in a country bank at Rome, N. Y., he was allowed to go behind the counter and help count the money. That made him an expert in money- counting, and detecting bad coins and notes. He also clerked in a bookstore at eight dollars a month. Again, he worked in a sash and door factory, and got twelve dollars a week. In two years he saved from his wages three hundred dol- lars. With that he went to a busi- ness college, and studied bookkeep- ing. He was for a while night watchman in a lumber mill for ten dollars a week. In every place he learned everything he could. While he was night watchman a place in the bank was offered to him at five hundred dollars a year. In the banking business he was promoted rapidly from one place to another till he became a bank president. High Christian principles was at the bottom of it all.

Simple Living.

A writer in The Kingdom suggests that in these days of widespread public lec- tures, some evangelist or other should devote attention to advocating the duty of simple living. "More than all," he says, "let him preach against slavish work, dis- honest work, overwork. Life is sacred, time is sacred, effort is sacred. Neither may be squandered, nor abused. The food, the clothes, the shelter that preserve the body at its best, the social utilities, the intellectual, æsthetic, and moral ac- cessories tested by the standard of man's moral wellbeing—to attain these let man labor arduously, honestly, with pleasure: and this being done, let him turn to the higher and better things. All the while, at work or play, or contemplation or study, let him take peace of mind.

On a Missionary Plantation in Alabama.

SCHOOL LIFE.

As one plantation is almost a little world within itself, where a great variety of work is carried on, of course the "deestrict' school and the "schoolma'am" must find a place. As soon as we were sure of a roof over our heads and a place to set our trunks, we began to take observations in regard to material for a school. There were many little children, and older boys and girls, and young men and women, and fathers and mothers also who could not distinguish one letter from another, and writing was almost an unknown art. "John X. Smith, his mark," is the popular way of signing the name here. They seemed very much delighted that we had really come to live among them and give them what they called "a white man's opportunity."

While we were debating what kind of a shelter we could find in which to open a school, the trustees of quite a large colored M. E. Church, near here, came and said they had been talking over the subject and had decided to offer us the use of their church if we would start a school.

The building was large, but there were no desks, of course, or any place to put books or hang hats or shawls, and the long benches so nearly filled the room that the narrow aisles near each side would not permit of two passing each other. There was just one little stove, with its front door broken off and its short stove-pipe stuck through the north side of the house, so that whenever the wind came from the north, and that would be on all the cold days, it would blow straight down the pipe and render a fire an impossibility. But in spite of the inconveniences, the cold and the mud, which on some days was no insignificant matter, the children came; the first day forty, and before the end of two weeks one hundred and twenty were enrolled with an average attendance of one hundred and ten.

As all possible grades, from immense [illegible] primer classes up to the [illegible] reader, were represented, we found [illegible] the time and strength of one teacher were entirely inadequate. So a young woman from one of the mission schools in Selma was secured as an assistant. Since then we have set up a new stove, the pipe of which goes straight up through the roof, and with a new teacher and a new stove things go on much more smoothly. [illegible] recitation rooms, [illegible] sometimes to have two [illegible] and two classes reciting at the same time in a room where [illegible] a hundred pupils.

[illegible] very delightful work [illegible] more endearing to [illegible] than [illegible] in [illegible] months of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

These numbers tell about shipload of corn being eived in India, and in the me mail, I received a let- from Mrs. H. L. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be interested to know that hen the native Christian, in Korea eard about the great famine in India, ey were so stirred with sympathy at, poor as they are, none earning more an five dollars gold per month, they ntributed voluntarily three hundred and ty yen (about one hundred and seventy- e dollars gold), which has been forarded there. Some of the Christian omen gave their silver wedding-rings to e sold for this purpose.

It does seem a blessed privilege to be ack in the work in Korea again—the eld consecrated by our most precious it, the husband that our children never arned to call father. Koreans are very ond of children, and they always prove a reat bond of attraction.

We have three letters of warm greeting rom Pyang Yang. Dr. Follwell sends ictures of the Hall Memorial Hospital, nd writes: "I exten dto you my sincerest congratulations upon your return to this country, which lies so near and dear to your heart. I am sorry I am to far away from Chemulpo to be unable to welcome you in person, but I look forward in the near future to meeting you and rejoicing with you in the wonderful growth of the Gospel in Pyeng Yang." Rev. Noble writes: "Welcome back to Korea. I wish you were coming right to Pyeng Yang, we need you so much. The Koreans are asking 'When will Mrs. Hall return, and when will she be here?'"

The way has opened so that if the appropriations which have been asked for at home be granted, we can obtain the finest site in the city of Pyeng Yang for our W. F. M. S. work, and we hope that we may go there next spring.

In the mean time I am wanted to take charge of the Greene Hospital in Seoul, which has been closed since the departure of Dr. Busteed to the homeland on health leave. It does seem a pity that doctors here are so overworked, while many of our physicians at home suffer from lack of work.

There have been a number of changes in Seoul during our absence. The new Palace is built just across the street from us. It is in native style of architecture. Many of the streets of the city have been widened, and so smoothed that jinrickishas may be used here now almost as well as in Japan.

Since our departure from Korea, the political aspect has changed completely: then everything was being done according to the advice of our enterprising neighbor, Japan, who secured Korea's independence from China. But, alas! Korea finds it necessary to lean upon somebody, and now it is Russia.

Korea has recently made her King an Emperor, and changed her name from the Kingdom of Korea to the Empire of Tai Han (Great Han). But her increased greatness as yet seems to be but in name. The astrologers were consulted as to the most lucky time for the King to assume his new title. The time selected, three o'clock in the morning of Oct. 12, was marked by a drenching rain, which probably did not enter into their calculations. An altar, called the Altar of Heaven, was built on purpose for the occasion on the site of the old reception hall, where Chinese ambassadors were entertained. Oxen, sheep, and pigs were sacrificed, and His Majesty in a yellow robe, assumed the title of Emperor.

The very latest event in Korea has been the Imperial funeral, when there was interred what could be found of the remains of the late Queen, at one time since her death degraded in rank to a concubine, but since raised to an Empress.

Sunday and Monday, Nov. 21 and 22, were very pleasant. As early as Saturday evening, thousands of soldiers and citizens were gathered in front of the new Palace, and both sides of the streets through which the funeral procession was to pass, were lighted with tall lanterns, some in white and some in red silk gauze. Inside the Palace walls, thousands of candles were burning in the building where the Imperial casket was lying in state. Incense was also kept constantly burning, and sacrifices were made, mostly in the form of offerings of meats, vegetables, fruits and sweets, piled high upon plates.

The procession began at 6 A.M., Sunday. It was quite Oriental save that the army and police were in their European style of uniforms. One thousand four hundred and forty-four men were employed in carrying the Imperial bier in corps of one hundred and twenty each. Beside the lanterns, there were rich banners and gay streamers, flags, fans, and umbrellas, rusty spears and wooden swords. There were six life-size paper horses painted in white and grey. There were the "spirit horses," and were burned as soon as the remains were interred, that the departed soul might ride upon them on her journey to heaven. There were also six "devil chasers," huge, horrible-looking masks, completely covering the men carrying them upon horseback.

Foreign representatives, naval officers, foreign advisers, missionaries, and teachers were invited to attend the funeral ceremonies, the last of which took place at 2 A.M., Monday, Nov. 22, when after several hours hard work the Imperial casket was placed into the grave.

Will you not pray for missionary work here, and help "hold the ropes" for us?

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor, I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

NO CONDEMNATION.

There is but one way to escape condemnation, and that is by righteousness, which is being set in the right attitude—having the right tendency. If an inventor being ignorant of natural law, proceeded on the assumption that water could rise above its source, he would fail, no matter how skilfully his invention was constructed; but if he recognized the tendency of water to seek its own level and applied the law of nature to his purpose, the obstacle would be removed. So in spiritual things the man who opposes himself to the divine law is doomed to failure, which is condemnation. When we see a young man of wealth associating with drunkards, gamblers, and vicious people, we know what the end of his course will be. That path has only one end. If he does not turn around and quit such associations, he will come to ruin. There is no need of any one to condemn him; he condemns himself. When he turns away from his vice and reforms, there is hope of his escaping ruin, but not until then. So, when the sinner turns from his sin and seeks through Christ's power, the higher life, he may escape the doom which awaits the persistent sinner. This turning is what is meant by conversion. It is the sinner halting in his pursuit of worldly pleasure and any kind of wickedness and stretching out his arms to God, beseeching him to enable him to lead a good life. If he is sincere, if he has strong faith in Christ he will be saved. His feet are set in the upward path and he escapes condemnation. His desire to lead a new life, his seeking righteousness, is counted to him for righteousness. Howsoever feeble and frail he may be, he will succeed with the power that Christ imparts to him. He walks after the spirit, or according to the spirit, and not after the flesh. There is no condemnation for such a one, but the best blessings. He is in line with the divine nature and purposes and there is no limit to the development of his nature. As Paul says in the passage under consideration (Rom. 5: 1; 8: 1–4) the law could never produce such a change. It could forbid us doing this and that, but it could not implant a desire for holiness. The love of Christ as shown in his life and death alone could do this. It is through faith in him, by which we lay hold on divine power, that we turn to righteousness and escape condemnation.

CHRISTIAN CONFIDENCE.

Young converts are frequently dismayed as they contemplate the difficulties of the Christian life. They discover that the ecstasy which they felt at their conversion is not permanent, their love of Bible-reading and prayer decreases, and they begin to doubt if there is anything in conversion after all. Worse still, they may fall into sin, some sin which they thought they had quitted forever, and they feel ashamed and disgraced. They no longer have confidence in their power to keep the pledges they have given, or to lead a Christian life. It is at this stage that the divine promises are found especially precious. When there is desire but no power, what better offer can there be than that of strength? Doubt as the difficulties and dangers surrounding him, could not have more rejoiced the tempter than fear of his God than the young Christian does when he realizes it. The young Hebrew outlaw in the mountains, surprised with the topic (Deuteronomy 30:6) which God took his own method to circumcise the heart. God was to him as real as earthly parent. The young Christian, with his better knowledge of the divine nature, has better reason for confidence. God has shown in giving his Son what he is prepared to do for his people. There is no limit to the help he will render, if there is only to be the power to render it. Does one need protection from temptation? It is promised. Does the flame of faith and love flicker and seem likely to fail altogether? He can rekindle it and has promised to do so. Do we sorrow over failure and sin? He expresses love and tenderness and pity as he sees in his strength. Who has not seen a child starting to walk hesitatingly with the mother's hand on its dress, pausing and looking back, and then, as the mother withdraws her hand, running forward with confidence? Is not this a picture of God's dealing with us? Is he not withdrawing his hand, leaving us to walk alone, that we may learn by a fall its own weakness and the necessity there was for her guidance. Such knowledge may be good for the child, and a fall in some place where the mother sees no serious injury will be done, may inspire caution in more dangerous places. It is thus that God deals with his children. Whatsoever our need, we are encouraged to look to God, and he who desires our development more than we can desire it, stands waiting to supply it. He will not deliver us in our own despite, nor give us holiness without our own effort, but he works in us both to will and to do and gives us the power that we have not of ourselves. This is the life eternal which Christ promises to all who trust in him.

Gospel Gems from Moody

ome of His Striking Utterances at the Carnegie Hall Revival Gatherings.

DWIGHT L. MOODY, the well-known evangelist, has lately been addressing very remarkable audiences at Carnegie Hall, New York. He spoke with all his old-time fervor: and that his orts were blessed, was evident from the enes of deep emotion that were of daily currence among his auditors. Some of is characteristic utterances are given elow:

he Sin of Covetousness.

"Avoid the sin of covetousness. Get nto the habit of giving. It's a good habit. ome of the rich men in New York ought go down into the tenement districts and ve for a week. A week would be enough r them. Then they should build decent ouses for the poor people to live in, with enty of light and air, and with parks for ie children to play in. They wouldn't et more than 2 1-2 or 3 per cent. on their oney, but they would get plenty of inter-st in another way. That's what George eabody did in London. He invested his oney that way and there was no row ver his estate. A big funeral and a big wsuit—that's about the end of many reat fortunes."

low He Reached an Infidel.

"I was in the North of England years go, preaching in a little town, and a wo-an came to me and said she wanted me o talk to her nephew. She said: 'I ave got him to promise to come to one f your meetings by giving my word I ould never ask him to go to another eligious service. I want you to talk at im. He will come with me to-night.' told her she was making a mistake: iat I could do nothing for the boy: that e would not let me get at him. She told ie he was an infidel and didn't believe in ie Bible, and thought that I was a hum-

"Now, I didn't like the prospect, but ou can't get away from the persistency of woman. When night came, I was in opes the boy had stayed away. But there vas the boy, with his aunt, about two-hirds of the way down the church. His unt had got him in the pew, and she sat t the entrance, to keep him from escaping. ug.

"I saw that the only way I could reach im after the sermon was to go over the acks of the pews. I saw his aunt stand-ng with her back to the pew to keep the oy in until I could reach him. But the oy saw the trick we were putting up on him, and fled over the backs of the pews to the rear as I was climbing over those in front. I said to the aunt: 'Don't des-pair. We shall get him yet.' Eight years afterward, I was in the little city, and that oy, then a successful man, came to me and told me he had been converted a year after I left. I got him to go before a meeting of 3,000 drinkers and tell his ex-perience, and he was instrumental in rescuing hundreds of those men."

Greater New York on Fire.

"There are 600 churches in the Greater New York. I think there is 100 per cent. greater interest in religion here now than there was last year. I think a prophet is never without honor save in his own country. I think it was a great mistake to let Dr. Talmage go. I think it would be a great thing for those newspapers that want a sensation to hire Madison Square Garden and bring Dr. Talmage there for thirty days."

Good Samaritans.

"We have some good Samaritans yet. I know a man in this city who gave out five hundred dollars a day in small sums. He would not allow a servant to answer his door-bell for three hours every morning, but answered it himself and never turned a visitor who called, away empty-handed. He was the Vice-President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he went to his office every day and wrote checks to give away, and didn't sign the corporation's name to 'em, either, but, 'William Thorr,' and he paid 'em out of his own personal bank account. Thank God for rich men such as that! They kill anarchy mighty quick. We can't all do as these rich men do, but we can all do little things, and they are just as important."

"Hitch On" and "Cut Behind."

"I was in a New England town the other day, and all the boys were sleighing. I saw a big sleigh—we call it a 'pung' up there—being driven through the streets by an old man who looked like Santa Claus. He was calling out to the small boys to grab on, for a pung is like a 'bus, it always holds one more. There were already about twenty rollicking boys on board, when one little fellow dropped off behind. I watched him. He tried, but couldn't catch up, and pretty soon he began to look out for another chance for a ride. A man's sleigh was standing near by, and the boy began to eye the man. When the man in the sleigh started off, the little fellow jumped on behind, and the man grabbed up his whip and struck him directly in the eye, and I thought the eye had been put out, but it wasn't. Now, that's the way we go through this world. Some say, 'Hitch on, hitch on;' others, 'Cut behind, cut behind.' The hitch-on people fill the churches, and the cut-behind ones empty them."

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant Simple, but Safe Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable.

The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery-risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs and difficult breathing; headache, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has a time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach.

To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlanson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet, composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids.

These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and, not being a patent medicine, can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: Catarrh is a local condition resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom, passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure, but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling.

I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, billiousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book, mailed free, on stomach troubles, by addresing Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

CLOSE TO CHRIST.

Refering to the proverb that "a man's character is known by the company he keeps," a great teacher remarks that the proverb might go further and say that his character is determined by the company he keeps. Experience confirms the fact. There is nothing more difficult than to keep a pure mind and high aims and impulses in the midst of vicious surroundings. We unconsciously influence others and unconsciously receive the influence of others. Association with a man of good character and elevated nature has often redeemed a youth from evil and given him an impulse after good. All our hopes of salvation are based on this principle. It is by association with Christ, by a closeness of union with him, like that of the vine and its branches, that we become fit for the presence of God. From his nature comes the power that alone can redeem us from the power of the brute within us. There is nothing occult in this principle. The purity and beauty of a noble nature are felt by all who are within its influenc and it is the same influence intensified by divinity that affects us as we live near to Christ. Realizing this fact, men have gone into monasteries and women into convents and others have given themselves wholly to lives of seclusion, to reading and to prayer. But that is to lose sight of the object of association with Christ. The power that Christ gives is a power for service, not for idle absorption. In one of the passages associated with the Topic (Matt. 17: 4; Luke 10: 38-42) Peter showed the same spirit. He wished to build tabernacles on the mountain top and to stay there. What would have become of the world if his selfish wish had been gratified? Luke charitably makes the excuse for him that he did not know what he was saying; and truly some excuse was needed. The divine grace never comes so fully into any man's soul, as it comes to him who is going to impart it to some one else. The study of Christ's life and character, the confidential intercourse with him in prayer are an avenue by which his spirit enters into our nature and when we go from his presence into the world, our lives should be redolent with the heavenly atmosphere and should speak to the world of him. To do among men what Christ would do if he were here, to be patient, forbearing, helpful, tender, sympathetic, in short to be Christ-like, that is the best use to make of the companionship to which it is our privilege to be admitted.

A Farmer's Institute.

We have numberless institutes of all the arts and sciences—institutes where music, painting, sculpture, astronomy, geology, ethnology, zoology, and every art and science that can be practical or ideal are presented in lecture, discussion and demonstration; bankers, doctors, lawyers, stenographers, craftsmen of every class and kind have their conventions, where they meet and exchange ideas and experiences and formulate improved methods as to the conduct of business. We are happy to note that farmers are beginning to waken to the importance and value of like counse among themselves, exchanging their ideas and improving their methods by similar interchange. We take pleasure in calling attention to an instance of this in a Wisconsin Farmers' Institute, held recently in Merrill, and in giving the names of some of the papers read and discussed. "Potatoes," "Corn and Grasses," "Rotation of Crops," "What Constitutes a Good Dairy Cow," and a number of similar subjects, of interest to practical farmers everywhere. One of the themes was illustrated with tables prepared by the State Experimental Station. A milk test was made of samples furnished by farmers, and all subjects were illustrated by excellent drawings. An anecdote with a good point was told of a Swiss farmer, who, on referring to the "poor farmers of America," was asked how he knew American farmers were poor?" and replied: "I buy straw produced in America and I know the American farmer who sells it is a poor farmer, or he would use it as a fertilizer for his soil." The proper division of farms into fields, the values of clover, oats, barley, winter wheat or rye; times and seasons for sowing, re-seeding reaping; the best methods of breaking ground, etc., were all considered and discussed interestingly and with lasting profit. This sort of convention shows wide-awake up-to-date business intelligence, and promises progress and prosperity for the rural sections whose farmers hold them.

Coffee and Ministers

Coffee is a native of Abyssinia. It found its way into Arabia in the sixth century, and probably as a substitute for wine when that drink was prohibited by the Koran. By the sixteenth century it had reached Cairo in Egypt; but here the great men rose up against it and declared it contrary to the law of their prophet and injurious to both soul and body. Ministers preached against it and it doubtless would have been abandoned had not the Sultan come to its aid and declared it to be unobjectionable. In Constantinople and also in Italy it met with opposition both from the clergymen and from the physicians. Medical science to-day calls coffee a diffusible stimulant and the testimony of the physicians would certainly induce us to be wary of making a friend of it.

Doctors, ministers, lawyers, editors and brain workers in general indorse Postum Cereal Food Coffee, the new table beverage. It is made entirely of nature's grains and can be digested by the weakest stomach, and rebuilds the gray matter in the nerve centres.

Boil Postum full 15 minutes and make it black and rich as Mocha, then add pure cream and you have a magnificent drink.

Substitutors drug their concoctions to give them a coffee flavor. Genuine packages of Postum have red seals and the words, "It makes red blood," thereon.

HALF AN HOUR WITH CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER

SUPPOSE you resolve that in the coming year you will devote a small fraction of your time—it is astonishing what can be accomplished in half an hour set aside from each day—to the cultivation and development of your higher and nobler side. Suppose that you steal away from the drudgery of life, from the bank, the shop, the office, thirty minutes and give it to the unfolding of those faculties which will bring you in contact with the highest and noblest things.

Can you imagine the tremendous change in your life—the uplift and the inspiration which a year thus spent would bring? If you are at a loss to know just how you might do this in the most profitable way, we can make you a suggestion. In the wonderful new Library, prepared under the direction of Charles Dudley Warner, you will find gathered together the greatest thoughts, the most perfect products of the master minds of all ages. This marvellous collection comprises the best, the most interesting, the most instructive and enobling that has ever been spoken or written by the famous men of all times.

Do you know about this extraordinary work? Have you seen it? Do you realize what it might mean to you?

Suppose you owned this splendid Library and gave it no more than the little fraction of a day we suggest. Think of the knowledge and culture you might acquire in a year! Think of what a new world would be opened unto you! You would not be wasting your time over the petty chronicles of the daily newspapers—you would be spending it in the society of the world's immortals, the heroes of history, the great poets and thinkers and scholars of all ages. Could you make a more profitable resolution than to do just this?

No one need remain without such a magnificent Library now. Under the plan of Harper's Weekly Club, through which the Library is being distributed, you obtain the work for about half the publishers' prices, and, if you wish, pay for it a little at a time. The Library is nearly complete, twenty-eight volumes are ready—only the printing of the final issues remains. When the work is finished this unusual offer will be withdrawn. If you act now you can save a great deal of money, and, more than this, pay for the work in your own way. This is an opportunity to equip your home with the finest library which has ever been gathered together in small compass since the making of books began. Can you afford to neglect it?

A postal-card addressed to Harper's Weekly Club, 93 Fifth Avenue, New York, will secure you full information regarding the Club plan, the Library itself, and the special terms which, for the month of February only, are open to those who become members. On March 1st the price is to be advanced. We believe we are doing our readers a service in advising them to investigate this remarkable offer at once.

Feels Like a Young Woman

CERTAIN CURE FOR INSOMNIA

GILLETTE, WYOMING, MAY 4 1897.

Sirs: I have been using the Electropoise since Sept., 1896. Have taken three courses of treatment and feel like a young woman, although my age is 57. I can do as much work now as I could ten years ago. Am getting over insomnia and can sleep and eat well. In fact, I think the Electropoise better than all medicines together.

Enclosed please find ten dollars for another instrument. This is the third I have ordered since purchasing mine. MRS. S. M. WILSON.

DELIVERED FROM THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

FRANKLINTON, KY., MAY 18, 1894.

I cannot find sufficient words to express my estimate of the Electropoise. It has literally taken my wife out of the grave. The third time she used it the tumor in her side broke, and her improvement has been rapid and steady. She has gained over fifty pounds in the last three months. It needs no words of praise; its works stand for what it is, a curative agent without a rival. I must admit I bought it without much hope of its doing good in this case, as the physicians had pronounced it incurable. Yours truly, MICHAEL CONDRAN.

THE GOSPEL IN A COLORADO PRISON.

CHAPLAIN R. M. BARNS, of the Colorado State Prison, at Canon City, sends us this interesting account of convict life in that institution:

Our State Prison is located at Canon ity, one hundred and sixty miles south- est of Denver, on the banks of the rkansas River, and at the mouth of he world-celebrated Royal Gorge. In his beautiful valley rise the frowning rison walls, behind which more than six undred men and women are confined for lmost every crime, from petty theft to urder. All are under the supervision of Varden Cleghorn. In this miniature orld are represented twenty-five nation- lities. No other State Prison is more osmopolitan. Many of the convicts are ien of intelligence and superior culture, nd some are graduates from the Univer- ties of Europe and America. The dis- ipline is firm, but not cruel, the chief ought being reformation and, as far as ossible, preparation for restored citizen- hip. The old methods of physical pun- shment are largely abandoned, and in- entives to good conduct are constantly resented. The average attendance at ight school is one hundred and sixty. he library contains about four thousand olumes, the librarians being four of the ost intelligent convicts. The men in he first grade are entitled to one book a ay and the others one a week.

A popular feature among the prisoners s the music and Chapel service. Our usic is led by a quartette and orchestra. ttendance upon Chapel service is en- irely voluntary, so that prisoners may not eel that religious worship is a part of heir punishment. Eighty per cent at- end every Sunday, joining in song rising prayer, singing the "Gloria," and lis- ening attentively. Many have shown vidence of hearts having been touched y the message of Gospel love. In these hapel exercises, eight or ten gvards, un- rmed, are all that are needed. The reaching contains no bitter allusions to poor convicts" or "bloody-handed trans- ressors." Occasionally a short address s made to the convicts by one of their wn number—man or woman—who has een moved to speak on spiritual things, ut such incidents are not of frequent oc- urrence.

In the Connecticut State prison at Hart- ord there is a paper published by the con icts, in which the following unique and nstructive maxims appear: First—If pos- ible, be well and have a good appetite. If hese conditions are yours, the battle of ife is already half won. Many soul and heart troubles arise really in the stomach, hough it may seem strange to you. Second—Be busy. Fill the hours so full of useful and interesting work that there shall be no time for dwelling on your roubles, that the day shall dawn full of expectation, the nightfall full of repose. Third—forget yourself. You never will be happy if your thoughts constantly dwell upon yourself, your own perfections, your own shortcomings, what people think of you, and so on. Fourth—Expect little. Expect little of life, not too much of your friends. Fifth—Trust in God. Believe that God is; that he really knows what is best for you.

The Klondike Band's Progress.

Letters from various points in Pennsyl- vania contain intelligence of the progress of the band of revival workers under Cap- tain Alexander de Soto. At Altoona, Mifflinton, Huntington, Port Royal, and Lewiston Junction, good meetings were held, with packed houses and excellent spiritual results, were noted. Good work was also done in Pittsburg, Derry, Johns- town, and elsewhere. Many kindnesses are shown to the travelers, for which they are deeply grateful. While the band were walking from Derry to the next stopping place, following the railway track, a bundle was observed on the track at a point about a mile from George Station. The travel- ers on reaching it found a man lying frozen and unconscious. They pulled him off the track just in time to save him from an express. His face was covered with blood. They carried him to the depot, and after some time he revived and was able to be sent to his home, some dis- tance off. He had fallen off a train while intoxicated, and the providential arrival of the band saved his life.

What a Gift of $25 Did.

Among the many contributions that are sent to this journal to be applied to specific causes that deserve the attention of the benevolent, few gifts could accomplish more than that of $25, which was recently sent to the Catharine Mission in New York City. It was a part of the "Lord's Tenth," which was sent for distribution by the Christian captain of a lake steamer sometime ago. Miss M. A. Delaney, one of the managers of the Mission, writes us as follows:

We were often at a loss for some articles of clothing to help a poor man or woman, who gave evidence of conversion, and who was go- ing out to look for work. We used the money for that purpose, and many a poor one was helped to a position by having on a clean shirt or an apron when applying. I trust the man who sent the "Lord's Tenth" may have many on that day when the Master shall say: "I was naked and ye clothed me," and "Inasmuch as you did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did unto me."

Free.—A Wonderful Shrub,—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botan- ical product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. C. Darling, of North Constantia, N. Y., as told in the New York World of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis, after, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was pre- paring to die. Similar testimony of extraordinary cures of Kidney and bladder diseases of long stand- ing, comes from many other sufferers, and 1200 hos- pital cures have been recorded in 30 days. Up to this time the Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder dis- order, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and re- ceive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free

THE TERRORS OF CONSUMPTION.

Remarkable Discovery of an American Medico-Chemist, and its Great Value to Humanity.

How Every Reader may Obtain Three Free Bottles of the New System of Medicine that Cures.

THE FREE DR. SLOCUM NEW SYSTEM OF MEDICINE.

THOSE WHO USE THEM GET WELL.

NOTE.—All readers of The Christian Herald, anxious regarding the health of themselves, relatives, or friends, can have Three Free Bottles of the Doctor's New Discoveries, as repre- resented in the above illustration, with complete directions, by sending full address to Dr. Slocum's Labratory, 98 Pine Street, New York City.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

Foremost among the world's greatest Medi- co-Chemists stands Dr. Slocum of New York City. His efforts, which for years had been directed toward the discovery of a positive cure for consumption were finally successful, and already his "new system of treatment" has, by its timely use, permanently cured thou- sands of apparently hopeless cases, and it seems a necessary and humane duty to bring such facts to the attention of all individuals.

He has demonstrated the dreaded disease to be curable beyond a doubt, in any climate.

Indisputable facts prove that the Doctor's New Discoveries are an absolute cure for Con- sumption and all bronchial, throat, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, winter ca- tarrhal affection, scrofula, rheumatism, gen- eral decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all wasting conditions; and to better de- monstrate its wonderful merits to suffering humanity, he will send Three Free Bottles (The Dr. Slocum New System of Medicine) with full instructions, to all readers of The Christian Herald who send for them.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving name and full address.

There is no charge for medicine or corre- spondence-advice—strictly confidential.

Knowing of the undoubted efficacy, every sufferer should take advantage of this most liberal proposition.

Please tell the Doctor when writing that you read this generous offer in The Christian Herald.

THE SPIRIT OF GIVING.

NOR what we give, but what we share,
The gift without the giver is bare.

He gives nothing but worthless gold
Who gives from a sense of duty.
But he who gives a slender mite,
And gives to that which is out of sight,
That thread of all-sustaining beauty,
Which runs through all and doth all unite,
The hand cannot clasp the whole of his alms,
The heart outstretches its eager palms,
For God goes with it and makes it store
To the soul that was starving in darkness before.

—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

New York State's Saloons.

In answer to numerous letters and inquiries asking for statistics showing the proportion of saloons to inhabitants in the distinctively rural districts of the State, as compared with the cities, Hon. Henry H. Lyman, State Commissioner of Excise for New York, has had the following table of averages prepared:

Table showing average number of drinking saloons (including hotels, saloons, and clubs), to each one thousand inhabitants in the State of New York in existence Sept. 30, 1897, etc. (Census of 1892):

Average for the whole State	3.5
Average for the whole State (not including the cities)	2.8
Average of the forty-one cities in this State	4.5
Average for cities of the first class	4.3
Average for cities of the second class	4.0
Average for cities of the third class	4.5
Average for cities paying $300	4.
Average for cities paying $350	4.5
Average for cities paying $500	4.3
Highest, Long Island City	8.1
Lowest, Jamestown	2.6

In this table, the statistics properly belonging to the rural districts have been differentiated from those of the cities. The result is that the ratio for that part of the State, outside of the cities, is much lower than that for the cities, and also below the average for the State as a whole. In the State at large, there is one saloon to every 285 inhabitants, while in the State—outside of the cities—there is one saloon to every 357 inhabitants. Under the provisions of the Raines Law, over one-fourth of all the townships of the State are absolutely "dry," allowing no liquor to be sold even on a physician's prescription, while nearly sixty per cent. have already done away with saloons, although in many such towns they allow liquor to be sold at hotels.

Another interesting fact brought out by this table is the apparent effect of a higher license on the ratio of saloons to inhabitants. An increase of $200 in the cost of a license, seems to effect the reduction of five-tenths of one saloon per thousand people.

Progress of Medical Science in Lung Diseases.

A little book, published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 55th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Lung Diseases, Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption are fully explained, their differences shown, and their cure by medicated-air inhalations pointed out.

Dr. Hunter was the founder of the practice of treating lungs by direct medicated-air inhalations, the inventor of the first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of lung complaints, and the discoverer of the only germicide which cures consumption by destroying the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs of the patient. His treatment consists of three parts: 1st, breathing into the lungs specific germicidal remedies three times a day, by means of his inhaling instruments; 2nd, anointing the chest with antiseptic oils which volatilize by the warmth of the body and surround the patient by a zone of medicated air, and 3rd, filling the chamber in which he sleeps with medicated vapors, which soothe the inflamed bronchial tubes and air cells, and keep up a constant curative action on the lungs. All that medical science has yet found out for the relief and cure of lung complaints is embodied in Dr. Hunter's treatment. Patients of the highest intelligence and respectability in all parts of the Union have been cured by it and point to it as a wonderful success. Capt. A. L. Post, Esq., of Newark, N. J., was reduced to the last stage of misery and extraordinarily long descent. His physician and family gave him up as hopeless. His death was looked for from day to day. He had repeated hemorrhages, great difficulty in breathing, and was so terribly emaciated and weak that he could not stand or turn over in bed without assistance. Dr. Hunter's treatment was of no avail after consulting the best physicians had failed. It stopped the hemorrhages, cleansed the lungs of great quantities of foul matter, enabled him to breathe freely, restored his appetite, built up his flesh and strength, and he now weighs 190 lbs. Cases of over 30 years' standing are cured. Those who are afflicted or interested should call upon or write to Mr. Hunter, at 117 Washington Street, Newark, N. J., and such is the confidence in the book you can get it free by addressing Dr. Hunter, at 117 West 42th Street, New York City.

Croup Cure

is what many a mother is looking for, something absolutely safe and reliable, that will disarm her terror of that dread rattling, strangling cough, so fearful to the mother, so fatal to the child. Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is a croup cure that can be relied on. Thousands say so. Mrs. W. J. Dickson ("Stanford Eveleth") author of Romance of the Provinces, writes from Truro, N. S.:

"That terror of mothers, the startling, croupy cough, never alarmed me so long as I had a bottle of Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house."

The Dollar Came Back.

A Los Angeles Sunday School Experience That Might Bear Repetition.

TWO men one day were sitting together in an office on Broadway, in our beautiful city of Los Angeles, writes J. B. in the California Independent. They were conversing on different subjects relating to religion and education, especially in their relation to the young. One was a Scotchman, the other a Jew-German—a good Christian man—whose name, let's say, was Abraham. The Scotchman declared the remark that the religious education of the young in Southern California was but slight and superficial—not so solid and real as it ought to be: that this arose from the Bible not being read as a lesson book in the public day schools: from its being little or never read at the homes of the children, and from its being but little read in most of the churches. The people do not take Bibles with them, generally leaving them in the churches: and the hour or so weekly that is devoted to the Bible lesson in the Sunday Schools, is far too short a time to imbue the minds and memories of the young with a knowledge of the Scriptures. He ventured further to add that in consequence of this state of things, there was a lamentable ignorance among the young, even of the moral law which is summarily contained in the Ten Commandments, and that if Abraham would agree to test this state of things it could be done on an early Sunday. How? By his going to the Sunday School of his church with a dollar to be given (say, fifty cents each) to the first boy and girl who would rise and repeat from memory correctly the Ten Commandments without previous notice.

Abraham agreed to make the experiment, and the Scotchman placed a dollar in his hand for the purpose, with the understanding that if no one, boy or girl, could say them with reasonable correctness, the money was to be returned; or if only one, boy or girl, could say them, he or she was to get the whole dollar. Abraham made the experiment the following on a succeeding Sunday. He informed the superintendent of the proposal made by a friend of the children and for their good. The superintendent undertook to make the test at the close of the school session, in the presence of all the children, their teachers and Abraham. There were about 250 children and thirty teachers present, this being one of the largest and best organized Sunday Schools in the city. On the children being informed of the matter were invited to stand up and fulfill the request, a referee having been appointed to adjudge the winner without favor or prejudice, six or seven boys and girls stood up and tried their best, but with only partial success, no one being able to complete the recitation of the Ten Commandments correctly or even almost so, so that the referee did not award the dollar to any one. So the dollar, finding no claimant, came back by the hand of Abraham into the pocket of the Scotchman, to his surprise and concern for the young in Southern California.

Like the dove that was sent out the window of the ark, which found no resting place for its feet and came back to its window and was taken back into its cote, so the dollar, finding no boy or girl to rest upon and bless, came back into the little pocket-ark from which it was issued on its mission to Sunday School scholars.

And here the reflection cannot help being made that, if this so happened in one of the best-organized schools in the city, what would happen in one of the worst? Probably not one of the scholars could tell if asked which was the first, or the second, or the fourth of the Ten Commandments.

Remarkable Self-Denial.

One of the most notable instances of self-denial that has recently appeared is that of a lady who, once wealthy, found her income suddenly reduced to a minimum. She contrived, however, by dispensing with servants and by other economies, to reduce expenditures to about one-half the diminished income, saving so a year to help missions. Then by numerous means, as ingenious as laborious, she earned a further sum of $1,000, assisting missions to the extent of $1,350, nearly twice her own income. And her life—one long act of self-denial as some would esteem it—is by her own confession "one long song of praise."

A Total Disability Claim of $1,650 Paid to a Man who was Afterward Cured.

The Monitor, a newspaper published at Meaford, Ont., Canada, first discovered this case two years ago, and published it at length which now seems, owing to the cure of it, to be a miracle. The facts were so remarkable that many people doubted the truth of them. They said: "It is too remarkable; it cannot possibly be true; the paper is mistaken, and the man, although he may think himself cured, will soon relapse into his former condition," etc., etc. The accuracy of its report called in question, the Monitor determined to find out definitely whether the facts were as stated, and whether the man would really stay cured. They accordingly kept a close watch on the case for two years after the first article appeared, and have just now published another article about it in which the original reports are completely verified, the cure is permanent, and they publish a fac simile of the check given by the Canadian Mutual Life Association for $1650.00 amount of total disability claim paid by them to Mr. Petch.

The first account stated that the patient (see address below) had been a paralytic for five years, that there was such a total lack of feeling in his limbs and body, that a pin run full length could not be felt; that he could not walk or help himself at all; for two years he was not dressed; furthermore that he was bloated, was for that reason almost unrecognizable, and could not get his clothes on. The paralysis was so complete as to affect the face and prevent him from opening his mouth sufficiently wide to take solid food. The doctors called the disease spinal sclerosis, and all said he could not live.

For three years he lingered in this condition. Then by some friends he was advised to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He took them and there was a slight change. The first thing noted was a tendency to sweat freely. This showed there was some life left in his helpless body. Next came a little feeling in his limbs. This extended, followed by prickling sensations, until at last the blood began to course freely, naturally and vigorously through his body, and the helplessness gave way to returning strength, the ability to walk returned, and he was restored to his old time health.

I am in even better health than when I gave you the first interview."

"Do you still attribute your cure to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills?" asked the Monitor.

"Unquestionably I do," was the reply. "Doctors had failed, as had also the numerous remedies recommended by my friends. Nothing I took had the slightest effect upon me until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. To this wonderful medicine I owe my release from the living death. I have since recommended these pills to many of my friends, and the verdict is always in their favor. I shall always bless the day I was induced to take them."

Such is the history of one of the most remarkable cases of modern times. Can any one say, in the face of such testimony, that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not entitled to the careful consideration of any suffering man, woman or child? Is not the case in truth a miracle of modern medicine.

To make the evidence complete we publish above a fac simile cut of the check received by Mr. Petch from the Canadian Mutual Life Association, being the amount due him for total disability. It is unnecessary to add that this life insurance association did not pay this large amount of money to Mr. Petch, except after the most careful examination of his condition by their medical experts. They must have regarded him as forever incurable.

Many Lives Lost.

There are more lives lost from taking cold than from all other causes combined. The cold develops into Catarrh of the Head, and the discharge runs down into the throat and into the stomach and lungs, causing Indigestion, Bronchitis, Consumption and death. The only way to reach and remove the trouble is by the inhalation of a warm, antiseptic, healing vapor. Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure is the only known remedy that meets these requirements. Cost, $1.00 per month. Booklet, "Plain Facts about Catarrh," and sample, absolutely free by mail, to any one mentioning this paper. Address Dr. J. W. THE CORNISH AMERICAN PIANOS AND ORGANS

NOTE. The success of our Winter and Holiday Offers has been unprecedented even in our record of phenomenal business. Thousands of Cornish American Pianos and Organs have been sold during the last 90 days at our special prices. Our vast resources were taxed to the uttermost to fill our orders on time; our factories have been and are now running 13 hours a day, and never before has such a chorus of praise been raised at the excellence of the products of our house. But we are going on to even better things, and our past success is but a stimulus to a far greater triumph. Our New Special Offers will transcend all previous efforts to supply the public direct with the most beautiful creations of the piano and organ maker's art at such prices and on such terms as may well seem incredible. We make this positive statement, that every Cornish American Piano and Organ is practically a gift at the price we offer it at, and further that every instrument shipped by us is protected by our own personal warrant, and that means a million dollars guarantee at the back of every piano and organ sold. As an example of what we are doing, we make, for a limited period only, the following special offers on two of our very latest and best instruments.

SPECIAL OFFER On Our Entirely New Cabinet Reed Organ, THE SILVER CHIME $35.00 BUYS THIS ORGAN

CORNISH AMERICAN ORGAN. Style No. 29.000.

Full Size. 5 Octaves. Double Reed Action. 122 Reeds. 10 Stops. 15 Combinations.

REMEMBER that a PROMPT RESPONSE to this advertisement will secure a DISCOUNT of $10.00 on the list prices as quoted in our 1898 Catalogue on any Organ, or $20.00 on the list prices if you buy a Piano. PROVIDE YOUR ORDER AT ONCE. Write to-day

While this photo-engraving is an exact picture of one of the handsomest Cabinet Reed Organs ever invented by us, the instrument is far better even than this looks.

The "SILVER CHIME" is the result of our efforts to bring a really first-class instrument within the reach of all our friends, and of all our bargains it is decidedly the greatest. Note, then, that for a limited period only, we offer this beautiful instrument for the very small sum of $35.00 (thirty-five dollars), provided you send us all cash with your order. No agent or dealer could possibly sell you such an organ for twice as much money. Remember, also, that we are the only firm of actual makers of pianos and organs who sell exclusively to the public at first cost, and that it is practically impossible for you to buy upon the terms and prices we sell at from any other firm on earth. We will consider any special offer you may make us, if you prefer to purchase it on the installment plan.

Better send CASH WITH YOUR ORDER. Your pocket is richer as you get the benefit of a handsome cash discount, and as for taking any risk in sending money in advance, you know our motto is—all—"No Satisfaction, No Pay." Your money and the forward freight charges will be immediately refunded if the instrument sent you is not entirely satisfactory and as represented after 30 days' trial in your own home. You take no risk; we have plant and property and hard cash to the extent of over ONE MILLION DOLLARS to back up our contracts.

NOTE.—We can supply this organ in low top case, elegantly finished front and back, suitable for Church, School and Lodge, at the same price.

Perhaps, however, you are more interested in a Piano, we therefore make you this

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

M. V. L., Elizabeth, N. J. Will you please ask your readers to solve for me this Scriptural puzzle:

"A casement held a wondrous view,
And all the living world looked through."

We commend this new Biblical problem to our readers, many of whom were actively interested in the solution of the first two problems in the series. The answers should be sent in on postal cards.

Constant Reader, Wickford, R. I. What is the meaning of the word "Nemesis?" 2. Why is it said we are living in the nineteenth century, now 1898?

1. It means "retribution," or "righteous anger." In legend, Nemesis was a Greek deity, whose mother was Night. 2. Because it is correct, as you can ascertain by counting the centuries from the beginning of the Christian era—the first rounded century being from the year 1 A. D. to 100 A. D., the second from 101 to 200 and so on, until we reach the nineteenth, which runs from 1801 to 1900 when the twentieth century begins January 1, 1901.

Subscriber, Pole, Ill. 1. Has anything been heard of Andree since his balloon ascension? 2. Was John Talmage the missionary to China, related to Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage? 3. Where can I get a good map of the United States? 4. Where can I get a copy of Doddridge's Rise and Progress?

1. A few days ago a message was sent to Stockholm by a seal-hunter who had found it on one of Andree's carrier pigeons. The pigeon was sent out two days after Andree started. The message said that the balloon had traveled, at that time, 136 miles. Andree expected to reach the Pole in twenty-five hours from the time of starting, but this message shows that in forty-eight hours he had covered only one-fifth of the journey. The message said that the balloon was then going eastward, which is cause for apprehension. Andree hoped that a south wind would carry him to the Pole. 2. Yes; his cousin brother. 3. Write to Rand and McNally, New York and Chicago. 4. Write to Mr. J. F. Jewett, 77 [illegible] Hope, New York, who can probably find one for you in some second-hand bookstore.

G. K., Ivins, N. D. Did Christ die for the whole world or only for those who believe?

Hundreds of volumes have been written on this question. It is sufficient for us to know that by his death, the whole world may be saved. "Whosoever believeth in him shall not perish." If some king were to issue an ordinance of pardon to all subjects, the ordinance would be a free gift, but it would avail only for those who accepted its conditions. It does not limit the efficacy of the atonement that it does not embrace all. Whosoever will may come.

intelligence about it, and avoid the causes that bring the temptation upon you. If it is drinking, you should avoid the proximity of saloons and walk a mile or so out of your way rather than pass one. Whatever the habit is, you know enough of yourself to be aware that there are predisposing causes which you should avoid. Then, a great help is to keep the mind actively employed. Take up some study or occupation that will interest you and occupy your thoughts. When you feel the temptation approaching, get to some absorbing employment. Do your utmost, relying on God for the power he gives to those who need it and ask for it.

A. H. H., Mt. Pleasant. When was the Christian era fixed? If it was intended to date from the birth of Christ, why did it not begin on Dec. 25, in the year of his birth? Does any nation have so correct a chronology as that of the Bible?

There were many eras in use for several centuries after Christ, and there was much confusion. It was not until the sixth century after Christ that our era came into general use among Christians. Dionysius Exiguus, who proposed it, tried to make it date from the conception, not the birth, of Christ, but he was in error, and it would involve much confusion to rectify it now. There is no reliable chronology in the Bible. Many efforts have been made to construct a chronology upon it, but they have all failed. The modern Jew admits the fact, and his era dates from the creation, not from the deliverance out of Egypt. He reckons that the creation took place 3,761 years before our era, which is an obvious blunder. All dates prior to the period of Solomon, secular as well as Biblical are in doubt.

I. C. S., Poynette, Wis. To what period do the last eight chapters of Ezekiel's prophecy refer?

To the period of final restoration to which other prophets refer, when the northern and southern sections of the Hebrew nation shall be united under the Messiah, to be never more driven out of their land. Ezekiel was one of the earliest exiles who was carried away with the king and chief nobles before the destruction of Jerusalem. The latter chapters read as if they were written soon after the news of the capture and destruction of the city reached him in Babylon. He had already pointed out the cause of the national ruin in the desertion by the people of their God. He proclaimed forgiveness to the penitent. He predicted in detail the retribution which should fall on their enemies. Then, he mind oppressed by the national humiliation, he looks far ahead and sees a future glory surpassing all that has gone before, when the ancient theocracy was restored and God himself reigned over them. His description of the restored temple is extremely graphic. In fact, as an eminent writer points out, we have a clearer idea of this temple which never existed than we have of Solomon's or Herod's Temple.

E. H. B., Potomac, W. Va. If coal is mined extensively, is it not likely to cause a depression of the surface, involving injury to buildings?

There have been cases of that kind, but the usual custom is to have walls, or at least pillars of coal, which support the roof of the mine. It would be detrimental to the interests of the owners, and risky for the miners, to excavate in such a way as to cause the roof of the mine to fall in.

New Subscriber, Pittsfield, N. H. Do you believe in dreams? I dreamt the world had come to an end, and Christ descended to earth calling every one together. When He came to me, He gave me a question to answer, and when I answered it right, He said I could go to heaven. Do you think there is anything in a dream like that?

The philosophy of dreams—and indeed the whole phenomena of dreams—have puzzled the wisest in all ages. The Bible tells us repeatedly of warnings and signs given in dreams. To what extent we should give heed to these peculiar experiences, it is difficult to determine. Yet they cannot be wholly ignored. Both ancient and modern science teaches that dreams are, in many cases, "the re-embodiment of waking thoughts" but uncontrolled by the reason. See Eccles. 5:7 and Isa. 29:8.

Mrs. T. E. S., Archer, Fla. Where can I get the names of the very earliest missionaries in distant lands, and the dates at which they began work?

The best source of information is the "Dictionary of Missions," published by Funk and Wagnall. There are also "One Hundred Years of Missions," by the same firm, and "Protestant Missions," by Scribners, N. Y.

Mrs. M. T. R., Marengo, Ill. In your last issue Jan. 12th, in OUR MAIL-BAG, a question was asked by Mrs. O. R., Davenport, Ia.: What book and chapter in the Bible contains the alphabet. I have heard the question asked many times, with the invariable quotation given Ezra, 7:21. When I was quite a child, the question was put to our Sunday School, and I was quite sure that with all the queer names and places found in the Bible I could find numbers of verses that had all the alphabet in. The test was reading the Bible through from lid to lid, and scanning every verse that I thought might have the entire alphabet in. It was a failure. But I will, for the pleasure of the curious, give you the result of my search. I found nine other verses with all the alphabet but one letter. I will enclose them, as you may perhaps for the same reason that I have given see fit to publish them:

1. Kings 1:9; 2. Kings 16:18; 1. Chron. 4:16; 1. Chron. 12:40; 2. Chron. 36:10; Ezra 7:21 (the one always quoted); Ezekiel 28:13; Daniel 4:37; Haggai 1:1; Galatians 1:14.

H. R. H., Philadelphia, Pa. A woman owns a store property in the business section of this city, and it is for rent. A man offers her $4,000 per year, he making all alterations and intending to open a saloon. The proprietor is a Christian woman. Do you think it would have been right to have accepted the offer?

Decidedly not. The most prolific cause of vice, misery, and crime is drink, and no Christian should have anything to do with the degrading traffic.

Rev. Thomas V., Kilmore, Ireland. 1. What is the population of the world? 2. Of the whole, how many are under twenty years of age?

1. Estimated at 1,487,000,000. 2. Probably two thirds, but there are no reliable data upon which to base an estimate.

L. C. A., Philadelphia, Pa. I am a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and availed myself of your offer of the Art Bible and the paper for one year for five dollars, paying one dollar down, and promising to pay one dollar a month thereafter until paid for. I consider myself extremely fortunate, for your Art Bible is, unquestionably, the most beautiful premium that we have ever seen. What I want to know is whether you wish me to remit now or wait until you send me notification and direction how to address the envelope?

We thank you for your very complimentary reference to the Art Bible. In regard to the matter of settlement, you should not wait until we send you notification. We do not send notices except when people are remiss in their payments, which, evidently, will not happen in your case. Direct the envelope simply to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, and in the lower left-hand corner of the envelope write the word "Art Bible."

Subscriber, Greenville, S. C. Is the disease, consumption, mentioned in the Bible? If so, what part?

See Lev. 26:16 and Deut. 26:22.

W. J. D., Hancock, Mich. 1. A man and wife who have emigrated from England to this country, have children born here. Are the children, correctly speaking, Americans or English? English-Americans. 2. Can the children of Chinese, Irish, or Negro people, being born in England, be called English, or being born in America be called Americans? 3. What is it that makes a person a freeborn American?

1. They are Anglo-American by descent but American citizens by right of birth and nationality. 2. You are confusing the questions of descent and nationality. A man may be a New Zealander by descent; yet if his parents came here, before he was born, and made this country their home, he would be an American by birth and nationality. If, however, a child is born at such a time as its parents are merely visiting or passing through a foreign country, he retains the nationality and citizenship of his parents. 3. To be born on American soil and under the Stars and Stripes.

Jessie R. B., Covington. What can be said in brief of the progress made and the work accomplished by Christian missions in the last one hundred years?

The question is a very broad one, but it can be compactly answered. The fruitage of a century of missionary effort have been: 280 societies at work in the heathen world; $14,000,000 annually gathered and expended; 10,000 foreign workers; 71,000 native helpers; 500 separate fields; 19,290 different stations; 8,000 churches; 1,300,000 communicants; 3,000,000 believers in Bible truth; 7,000 Sabbath schools, with over 1,000,000 pupils; 680,000 mission schools, seminaries and colleges. At the beginning of this century only 5,000,000 copies of the Bible in the whole world. Now it is published, in whole or in parts, at the rate of over 6,000,000 copies a year, and accessible to nine-tenths of the world's population.

A "FEAST AND GIFT DISTRIBUTION" AT THE ROSEBUD INDIAN AGENCY, S. D.

On this occasion the Indian women were the hosts and the visiting members of the Women's Missionary Societies of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the guests of honor. Over 1,200 shared in the feast. The tribes represented were the Yanktons, Yanktonais, Fetones, Santees, Brules, Rosebuds. The whole scene is a striking illustration of Indian progress and Christian fellowship. WORKING FOR CHRIST IN A CENTRE OF SIN.

The New York Evangelistic Training School and Settlement and its Gospel Labors.

EXTERIOR OF THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

THE story is told that, some one hundred years ago, at the English court, the question was asked: "Where is Selina, Countess of Huntington?" A court beauty replied: "She is praying somewhere with her paupers." The then Prince of Wales ventured, "I think, my lady, when you and I get to the gates of heaven, we will be glad to catch at her skirts."

In these days of Christian progress and widespread evangelization, there are many who, like the Countess, are willing to serve the Master among the poor and lowly. Devoted Christian workers have established, in almost every city of our Union, institutions that are centres of missionary and philanthropic effort. One of the most effective institutions in New York City, is the Evangelistic School and Training Settlement, which is located alongside of what was ten years ago known as "Hell's Kitchen," at No. 253 West Thirty-second street, near Tenth Ave., and is a picturesque indeed, when compared with the surroundings. Above the brown-stone Roman arch are engraved the words: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Mrs. J. Fowler Willing is the founder of the institution. Her study has the atmosphere of literary culture, and in it are curios from the capitals of Europe, fine engravings on the wall, rare books, music, and all that goes to make up a refined home life. Mrs. Willing, who has spent a large part of her time for many years in church work, is the author of some twelve books on religious topics, and is widely known as a lecturer, evangelist, and missionary in almost every city of the Union. Some two years ago at the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London, Mrs. Willing was appointed Superintendent of the World's Evangelistic Training, and the Settlement here in New York is a part of her work.

The students, are in the main, college graduates. In the class now at the Settlement are one young graduate from Texas, one from Mt. Holyoke, a teacher from Wellesley, and one who carries a diploma from Syracuse University with a three-years' post-graduate course from Cornell. The course of study is intended to fit the student for the best practical service in Christian philanthropy.

The institution is supported mainly from Mrs. Willing's private means, supplemented by contributions from W. C. T. U. women all over the land, The Carnegie Union, and such ladies as Mrs. Demorest, Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, Mrs. St. John Gaffney, Mrs. Stanley and others, have taken an active interest in the work, and hold meetings in the large and beautiful chapel.

The Settlement work is gradually influencing the home life of the vicinity. The students visit each day in the tenement houses, and conduct boys' and girls' classes, and young men's and young women's meetings, give kindly instruction to overworked mothers, and dispense food and clothing to the needy. Their contact with the slum-dwellers has greatly improved the general character of the neighborhood. The work is in a densely-settled community. In one block near the mission house, are at least two thousand souls. To every window you may count one family—and poverty, improvidence, and too often drunkenness, reign within. Drink is the root of nearly all the misery and poverty in the district. It is with such people and surroundings that the Settlement workers have to deal. They are spreading among them the Gospel of Jesus Christ and the duty of right living, and in this self-sacrificing work they are deserving of the most cordial support.

MRS. WILLING'S STUDENT CLASS AT THE EVANGELISTIC TRAINING SETTLEMENT.

MR. MOODY INVITES ALL.

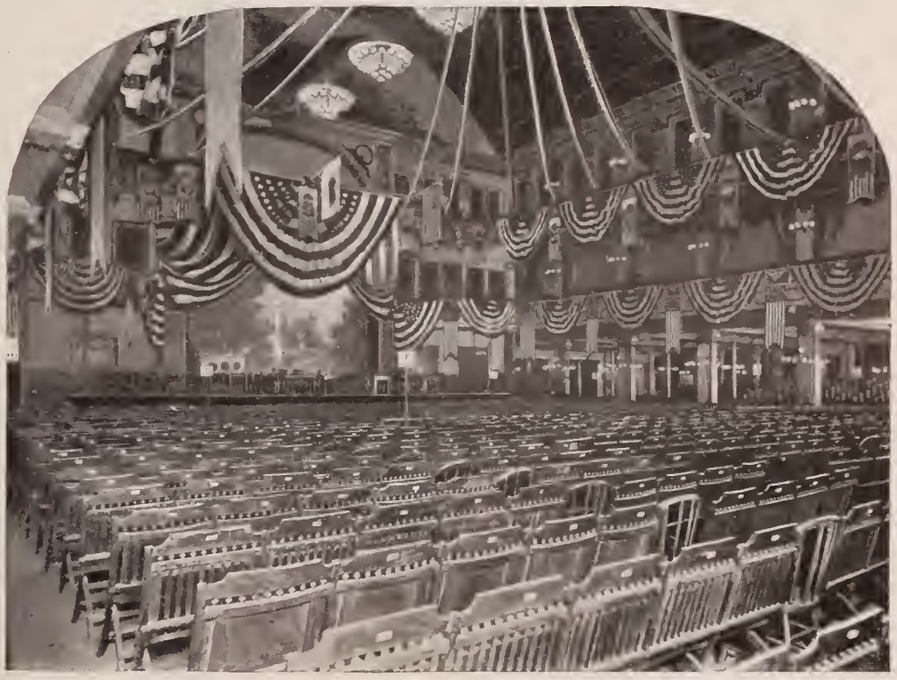
A Great Revival Week to Begin in New York on March 13.

ON March 13 Mr. Dwight L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, who only lately closed a remarkable series of revival meetings in Carnegie Hall, New York city, will begin a new revival movement on a much larger scale than anything that has been undertaken in the metropolis in recent years. So much spiritual benefit has resulted from the Carnegie Hall gatherings that urgent demands were made in many quarters for a continuance of the grand spiritual work which had begun to be felt throughout a very large section of the country. Accordingly, the Industrial Building, known as the Grand Central Palace, between Forty-third and Forty-fourth streets, and Lexington avenue and Depew place, New York City, has been secured for Mr. Moody for the week from March 13 to 20, when it is expected that one of the grandest series of revival services ever seen on this continent will then take place.

It is intended that the gatherings in this great centrally situated building shall not only be available to city dwellers, business men and others in New York, but to the thousands who, from the surrounding cities, towns and villages, will come thither for the express purpose of attending the services, when they know of the ample accommodations and the conveniences of transit.

Those wishing to come to the meetings from any point in New Jersey, Westchester, Staten Island or Long Island, or even more distant localities, can travel from starting point to destination under cover all the way and back again to their homes. Cold weather, rain or even snow, therefore, need not deter those who wish to attend.

The Lexington Avenue electric cars pass the front door of the Industrial Building, and one block off, two lines of horse-cars pass. The building is near to the Grand Central Station, and people from the suburbs, no matter from what district they may come, can be under shelter all the way. The elevated road runs into West Forty-second Street Station, and there is a covered passage connecting the station with the main hallway, so that persons who come from any of the ferries or railroads by the elevated can step right into the hall of the Industrial Building without going into the open air.



VIEW OF THE GREAT HALL WHERE THE MOODY REVIVAL MEETINGS WILL BE HELD.

Mr. Moody's programme, as far as arranged, contemplates holding meetings from 9 to 12 A. M., from 2 to 4 P. M. and from 8 to 10 P. M., daily. Prayer meeting will be held at 9 o'clock in the morning; at 10 A. M. a sermon will be preached, and at 11 A. M. Mr. Moody will himself preach to the audience. At 2 o'clock, some of the pastors who are to be associated with Mr. Moody in these services will officiate, and at 3 P. M. Mr. Moody will again take the platform. In the evening, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman or some other well-known pastor, will conduct the meeting. Mr. Moody will preach twice a day during the entire week.

The great hall of the Industrial Building, or Grand Central Palace, is one of the largest in the country in point of seating capacity. There are 7,000 chairs, and more can be provided, if necessary, so that as many as 10,000 can be comfortably accommodated. The platform is a spacious one and will be filled by a large choir during the services. Adequate provision has also been made for overflow meetings and after-meetings. Owing to the peculiar construction of the hall, three meetings can be held simultaneously, without disturbing each other.

Our photograph partially shows the interior of the hall, which is altogether one of the handsomest ever devoted to public assemblage. The great building is itself a sight well worth going many miles to see.

Our readers and their friends, both in and out of town, should not neglect this opportunity to attend these services, by which it is hoped to reach as wide a circle of hearers as possible, in order that, under Divine blessing, the truth may be spread abroad and many souls awakened and brought into the light.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor and editors, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

The Men and Women now Needed.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Esther 4: 14. . . . .

Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

ESTHER the beautiful was the wife of Ahasuerus the abominable. The time had come for her to present a petition to her intimo is husband in behalf of the Jewish nation, to which she had once belonged. She was afraid to undertake the work, lest she should lose her own life; but her cousin, Mordecai, who had brought her up, encouraged her with the suggestion that probably she had been raised up of God for that peculiar mission. "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

Esther had her God appointed work. You and I have ours. It is my business to tell you what style of men and women you ought to be in order that you meet the demand of the age in which God has cast your lot. So this discourse will not deal with the technicalities, but only with the practicabilities. When two armies have rushed into battle, the officers of either army do not want a philosophical discussion about the chemical properties of human blood or the nature of gunpowder; they want some one to man the batteries and take out the guns. And now, when all the forces of light and darkness, of heaven and hell, have plunged into the fight, it is no time to give ourselves to the definitions and formulas and technicalities and conventionalities of religion. What we want is practical, earnest, concentrated, enthusiastic, and triumphant help.

In the first place, in order to meet the special demand of this age, you need to be an unmistakable, aggressive Christian. Of half-and-half Christians we do not want any more. The Church of Jesus Christ will be better without them. They are the chief obstacle to the church's advancement. I am speaking of another kind of Christian. All the appliances for your becoming an earnest Christian are at your hand, and there is a straight path for you into the broad daylight of God's forgiveness. You may this moment be the bondmen of the world, and the next moment you may be princes of the Lord God Almighty. You remember what excitement there was in this country, years ago, when the Prince of Wales came here—how the people rushed out by hundreds of thousands to see him. Why? Because they expected that some day he would sit upon the throne of England. But what was all that honor compared with the honor to which God calls you—to be sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty; yea, to be queens and kings unto God. "They shall reign with him forever and forever."

But you need to be aggressive Christians, and not like those persons who spend their lives in hugging their Christian graces and wondering why they do not make progress. How much robust-ness of health would a man have if he hid himself in a dark closet? A great deal of the piety of to-day is too exclusive. It looks inward. It needs more fresh air, more outdoor exercise. There are many Christians who are giving their entire time to self-examination. They are feeling their pulses to see what the condition of their spiritual health. How long would a man have decent physical health if he kept all the time feeling his pulse instead of going out into active, energetic work?

I was once in the wonderful, bewitching [illegible] of North Carolina. I [illegible] with the beauty of flowers, and yet when I would take up one of these exquisite [illegible] the leaves [illegible] the roots were gone. You could hardly tell that it had ever been a flower. And there are a great many Christians who [illegible] the last fifteen years been examining their experiences to see what there is there, and there is nothing left in them.

The effect of self-examination is a dark one. Instead of advantage to their Christian character, I consider it a damage. When I was a boy I used to have a little piece in the garden that I called my own, and I planted corn there, and every few days I would pull it up to see how fast it was growing. Now, there are a great many Christian people in this day whose self-examination merely amounts to the pulling up of that which they only yesterday or the day before planted. Oh, my friends, if you want to have a stalwart Christian character, plant it right out of doors in the great field of Christian usefulness, and though storms may come upon it, and though the hot sun of trial may try to consume it, it will thrive until it becomes a great tree, in which the fowls of heaven may have their habitation. I have no patience with these flower-pot Christians. They keep themselves under shelter, and all their Christian experience in a small, exclusive circle, when they ought to plant it in the great garden of the Lord, so that the whole atmosphere could be aromatic with their Christian usefulness. What we want in the church of God is more strength of piety. The century plant is wonderfully suggestive and wonderfully beautiful, but I never look at it without thinking of its parsimony. It lets whole generations go by before it puts forth one blossom; so I have really more admiration when I see the dewy tears in the blue eyes of the violets, for they come every spring. My Christian friends, time is going by so rapidly that we cannot afford to be idle.

A recent statistician says that human life now has an average of only thirty-two years. From these thirty-two years you must subtract all the time you take for sleep and the taking of food and recreation; that will leave you about sixteen years. From these sixteen you must subtract all the time that you are necessarily engaged in the earning of a livelihood; that will leave you about eight years. From these eight years you must take all the days and weeks and months—all the length of time that is passed in sickness—leaving you about one year in which to work for God. O my soul! wake up! How darest thou sleep in harvest time, and with so few hours in which to reap? So that I state it as a simple fact that all the time that the vast majority of you will have for the exclusive service of God will be less than one year.

"But," says some man, "I liberally support the Gospel, and the church is open, and the Gospel is preached; all the spiritual advantages are spread before men, and if they want to be saved let them come and be saved—I have discharged all my responsibility." Ah! is that my Master's Spirit? Is there not an old book somewhere that commands us to go out into the highways and the hedges and compel the people to come in? What would become of you and me if Christ had not come down off the hills of heaven; and if he had not come through the door of the Bethlehem caravansary; and if he had not with the crushed hand of the crucifixion knocked at the iron gate of the sepulchre of our spiritual death, crying, "Lazarus, come forth?" Oh, my Christian friend! this is no time for inertia when all the forces of darkness seem to be in full blast—when steam printing-presses are publishing infidel tracts, when express trains are carrying messengers of sin, when fast clippers are laden with opium and strong drink, when the night air of our cities is polluted with the laughter that breaks up from the ten thousand saloons of dissipation and abandonment when the fires of the second death already are kindled in the cheeks of some who, only a little while ago, were innocent. Oh never since the curse fell upon the earth has there been a time when it was such an unwise, such a cruel, such an awful thing for the Church to sleep. The great audiences are not gathered in Christian churches; the great audiences are gathered in temples of sin—tears of unutterable woe then baptism, the blood of crushed hearts the awful wine of their sacrament, blasphemies their litany, and the groans of the lost world the organ dirge of their worship.

Again, if you want to be qualified to meet the duties which this age demands of you, you must, on the one hand, avoid reckless iconoclasm and, on the other hand, not stick too much to things because they are old. The air is full of new plans, new projects, new theories of government, new theologies, and I am amazed to see how so many Christians want only novelty in order to recommend a thing to their confidence; and so they vacillate and swing to and fro, and they are useless and they are unhappy. New plans—secular, ethical, philosophical, religious, cis-Atlantic, trans-Atlantic—long enough to make a line reaching from the German universities to Great Salt Lake City. Ah, my brother, do not take hold of a thing merely because it is new! Try it by the realities of the Judgment Day. But, on the other hand, do not adhere to anything merely because it is old. There is not a single enterprise of the Church or the world but has sometime been scoffed at. There was a time when men derided even Bible societies, and when a few young men met in Massachusetts and organized the first missionary society ever organized in this country, there went laughter and ridicule all around the Christian Church. They said the undertaking was preposterous. And so also the work of Jesus Christ was assailed. People cried out: "Who ever heard of such theories of ethics and government? Who ever noticed such a style of preaching as Jesus has?" Ezekiel had talked of mysterious wings and wheels. Here came a man from Capernaum and Gennesaret, and He drew His illustrations from the lakes, from the sand, from the mountain, from the lilies, from the corn-stalks. How the Pharisees scoffed! How Herod derided! And this Jesus they plucked by the beard and they spat in His face, and they called Him "this fellow!" All the great enterprises in and out of the Church have at times been scoffed at, and there have been a great multitude who have thought that the chariot of God's truth would fall to pieces if it once got out of the old rut. And so there are those who have no patience with anything like improvement in church architecture, or with anything like good, hearty, earnest church singing, and they deride any form of religious discussion which goes down walking among everyday men, rather than that which makes an excursion on rhetorical stilts. Oh, that the Church of God would wake up to an adaptability of work! We must admit the simple fact that the churches of Jesus Christ in this day do not reach the masses. There are one million people in London who never hear the Gospel. The great majority of the inhabitants of this capital come not under the immediate ministrations of Christ's truth, and the Church of God in this day, instead of being a place full of living epistles, known and read of all men, is more like a dead-letter post-office.

"But," say the people, "the world is going to be converted; you must be patient; the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of Christ." Never, unless the Church of Jesus Christ puts on more speed and energy. Instead of the Church converting the world, the world is converting the Church. Here is a great fortress. How shall it be taken? An army comes and sits around about it, cuts off the supplies, and says: "Now we will just wait until from exhaustion and starvation they will have to give up." Weeks and months, and perhaps a year pass along, and finally the fortress surrenders through that starvation and exhaustion. But, my friends, the fortresses of sin are never to be taken in that way. It they are taken for God it will be by storm; you will have to bring up the great siege guns of the Gospel to the very wall and wheel the flying artillery into line, and when the armed infantry of heaven shall confront the battlements you will have to give the quick command: "Forward! Charge!"

Ah, my friends, there is work for you to do and for me to do in order to this grand accomplishment. I have a pulpit. I preach in it. Your pulpit is the bank. Your pulpit is the store. Your pulpit is the editorial chair. Your pulpit is the anvil. Your pulpit is the house scaffolding. Your pulpit tis the mechanics' shop. I may stand in my place and, through cowardice or through self seeking, may keep back the word I ought to utter; while you, with sleeve rolled up and brow besweated with toil, may utter the word that will jar the foundations of heaven with the shout of a great victory. Oh, that we might all feel that the Lord Almighty is putting upon us the hands of ordination! I tell you, every one, go forth and preach this Gospel. You have as much right to preach as I have or any man living.

Hedley Vicars was a wicked man in the English army. The grace of God came to him. He became an earnest and eminent Christian. They scoffed at him and said, "You are a hypocrite, you are as bad as ever you were." Still he kept his faith in Christ, and after a while, finding that they could not turn him aside by calling him a hypocrite, they said to him: "Oh, you are nothing but a Methodist!" This did not disturb him. He went on performing his Christian duty until he had formed all his troops into a Bible class, and the whole encampment was shaken with the presence of God. So Havelock went into the heathen temple in India while the English army was there and put a candle into the hand of each of the heathen gods that stood around in the heathen temple, and by the light of those candles held up by the idols General Havelock preached righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. And who will say on earth or in heaven that Havelock had not the right to preach? Go preach this Gospel. You say you are not licensed. In the name of the Lord Almighty, I license you. Go preach this Gospel, preach it in the Sabbath Schools, in the prayer-meetings, in the highways, in the hedges. Woe be unto you if you preach it not!

I remark again that in order to be qualified to meet your duty in this particular age, you want unbounded faith in the triumph of the truth and the overthrow of wickedness. How dare the Christian Church ever get discouraged? Have we not the Lord Almighty on our side? How long did it take God to slay the hosts of Sennacherib or burn Sodom or shake down Jericho? How long will it take God, when he once arises in his strength to overthrow all the forces of iniquity? Between this time and that there may be long seasons of darkness, and the chariot wheels of God's Gospel may seem to drag heavily; but here is the promise and yonder is the throne, and when omniscience has lost its eyesight and omnipotence falls back impotent and Jehovah driven from his throne, then the Church of Jesus Christ can afford to be despondent, but never until then. Despots may plan and armies may march and the progresses of the nations may seem to show they are adjusting all the affairs of the world, but the mighty men of the earth are only the dust of the chariot wheels of God's providence. And I think before the sun of the next century shall set, every last tyranny will fall, and with a splendor of demonstration that shall be the astonishment of the universe, God will set forth the brightness and pomp and glory and perpetuity of his eternal government, and of the starry flags and the emblazoned insignia of this world God will make a path for his own triumph, and returning from universal conquest he will sit down, the grandest, the strongest, highest throne of earth his footstool.

I prepare this sermon because I want to encourage all Christian workers in every possible department. Hosts of the living God, march on! march on! His Spirit will bless you. His shield will defend you. His sword will strike for you. March on! march on! The despotisms will fail, and paganism will burn its idols, and Mahometanism will give up its false prophet, and the great walls of superstition will come down in thunder and wilt at the long loud blast of the Gospel trumpet. March on! march on! The bestirrement will soon be ended. Only a few more steps on the long way; only a few more sturdy blows; only a few more battle cries, then God will put the laurels upon your brow, and from the living fountains of heaven will bathe off the sweat and the heat and the dust of the conflict. March on! march on! For you the battle for work will soon be passed, and all the outflashings of the judgment throne and the trumpeting of resurrection angels and the upheaving of a world of graves, and the hosanna and the groaning of the saved and the lost, we shall be rewarded for our faithfulness or punished for our stupidity. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and amen.

FACED PERIL TO WIN SOULS.

How a New Nebraska Settlement was Captured for Christ by a Brave Missionary of the American Sunday School Union.

WHILE a missionary of the American Sunday School Union in the State of Nebraska, some years ago, my attention had been called to a certain neighborhood, where they said the ...ol-house could not be secured for ...ious; services that the people were ...innels," and that they did not pro... to have their school house "dese...ed" by "Sunday-school and "preach... It was then ...k, and I was still ...r fifteen miles from ... nearest town, horses ...d and about worn out ...self; but there was no alternative, and ...ad to push on.

As I was passing the next house, the ...mer was just driving in. He had been ...town. I called to him. I told him my ...perience with his neighbors, and also ...d him that I would not give ten cents ... acre for land in a community like that. ...didn't wonder that they were having ...d times and suffering, for God could not ...ile upon a people like that. He said: "Stranger, I had about made up my ...nd to get out of here myself. If I could ...d somebody to buy my place I'd go to-...rrow. Come in and stay all night with ...."

I did not need a second invitation but ...ove in. We were unhitching our horses. "Say, stranger," said he, "they are hav... an anti-monopoly meeting at the school-...use to-night: we better go up."

Of course, I consented, and after supper ... went immediately to the school-house. ...e were late. The promised speaker ...s not there and the farmers were mak... their speeches. It wasn't long until ...arly all had spoken. Finally, some ...e suggested that they should give the ...ranger a chance, but others seemed to ... afraid lest I should preach, and I ...rdly knew what to do. At last, one ...an suggested, "let him preach; what's ...e difference let us have a speech." The chairman then said: "Stranger, can't you make us a speech?" Whereupon I arose and said, "I am not used to political speeches, but lately I was in Chicago, and you know they had a National Convention there. Perhaps you would like to hear about it. There was a man there who made a splendid speech. I took some notes and I will give them to you the best I can."

It was a good speech, and full of stories and incidents which I gave as best I could. The anecdotes were entertaining and created quite a little merriment.

"Say, stranger," asked one farmer, "can't you make us another speech to-morrow night?"

"Really," I said, "this is the only political speech I have, and that belongs to another man; yet I do not know but I might give you one of temperance. How would that do?"

They said it would be all right. The next day I visited every family in the neighborhood, and round there were a number who did not believe as did the board of directors. So that night, at the close of my meeting, by previous arrangement, a brother got up and moved that they have another meeting the next night. Four or five were on their feet at once to second the motion. Of course, I remained. That night I gave them a Gospel temperance address. As soon as I was through, a good old lady jumped to her feet excitedly, and said:

"I motion you that we ask this here brother to stay and preach us a reg'lar, old-fashioned, unadultered Gospel sermon to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. I think it is a shame that we have lived here like a lot of heathen: we have had no preaching, nor nothing."

At least a half dozen were on their feet at once to second the motion. I asked all those who were in favor, to stand. Every one, except the three members of the board of directors, was up at once. When I asked those who were opposed, to stand, no one arose: so, of course, the call was unanimous.

The schoolhouse was opened the next day and a Sabbath School was organized. This was in the spring. It continued during the summer, and in the fall we held special meetings with them, and one after another gave their hearts to Christ. We visited nearly every family in the neighborhood, but were advised not to call upon the President of the Board of Directors, because he had "purchased a whip on purpose to thrash me." One day I was driving by, but I felt I must go in, so I went to the door and knocked. His wife came to meet me.

"Don't come in here," she said. "If you came in here and he found it out, he would kill you."

"Your husband is not such a wicked man as that," I said.

She said she was afraid he was. I asked her where she was. "In the cornfield," she answered: but don't you go to see him."

I got into my wagon and drove as near as I could to where he was, hitched my horse to the fence and then went over to him. He did not notice me until I came close to him. "How do you do?" I said. "Just as I please; what are you doing here?" "I am calling on the different ones who haven't been out to our meetings, we are having some grand meetings at the schoolhouse, I wish you had been there last night. Three or four of your neighbors gave their hearts to Christ." And I gave him their names.

"Yes," he said, "I know you: I have seen carloads of just such fellows as you. You are around here trying to stir up these people: then you will raise a lot of money, stick it in your pocket and skip the country."

He then began to abuse me roundly. I stood there until he was through, then put my hand on his shoulder, and offering a word of prayer for God's blessing upon him, and to help him to become a Christian, turned and went off.

As I was about to announce the opening hymn that night at our service, he came in. He reached out his hand to me and gave me a warm handshake. I asked, "What is the matter?" I then sat down and told him he might tell the congregation. He gave them our experience in the cornfield, said he had watched me until I was out of sight; and he then knelt down on his knees. With tears in his eyes, he said, "I made up my mind not to get off my knees until I had found a Saviour that would give me strength to stand by and take such abuse as I gave him without a word. He then went around the room to his neighbors, grasped them by the hand and pleaded with them to give their hearts to God. There were between forty and fifty conversions before that meeting was over. A church was organized there, a building erected and dedicated to the Gospel work, and that man is now one of the officers of the Church.

THE OLD FISHERMAN'S PRAYER.

I feel for mariners of stormy nights,
And feel for wives that watch ashore. Ay, ay!
If I had learning I would pray the Lord
To bring them in; but I'm no scholar, no;
Book-learning is a world too hard for me:
But I make bold to say, "O Lord, good Lord,
I am a broken-down poor man, a fool,
To speak to thee; but in the Book 'tis writ,—
As I hear say from others that can read.—
O Lord, good Lord, but in the book 'tis writ,
How, when thou camest, thou didst love the sea,
And lived with fisherfolk, whereby 'tis sure
Thou knowest all the peril they go through,
And all their trouble. As for me, good Lord,
I have no boat; I am too old, too old—
My lads are drowned; I buried my poor wife;
My little lassies died so long ago,
That mostly I forget what they were like.
Thou knowest, Lord; they were such little ones,
I know they went to thee, but I forget
Their faces, though I miss them sore. O Lord,
I was a strong man; I have drawn good food
And made good money out of thy great sea:
But yet I cried for them at nights, and now,
Although I be so old, I miss my lads,
And there be many folk this stormy night,
Heavy with fears for theirs. Merciful Lord,
Comfort them; save their honest boys, their pride,
And let them hear next ebb the blessedest,
Best sound—the boat-keels grating on the sand.

A GOSPEL ON WHEELS.

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, an interesting description was given of the evangelistic work conducted last summer and fall among the cranberry pickers of Cape Cod, by Mr. H. B. Gibbud and others, in which all the paraphernalia of a traveling evangelist's outfit were employed to advantage. We present to-day a photograph showing a work of somewhat similar character. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Wheeler have for several years past been successfully conducting itinerant Gospel in a unique fashion. Many Gospel Wagons have come into use, since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, some five years ago, sent a party of converted young men through the New England States in a wagon that was at once a dining-room, sleeping chamber, traveling car, audience hall, and platform.

MR. AND MRS. WHEELER IN THEIR GOSPEL WAGON, "GLAD TIDINGS."

Mr. Wheeler writes us from Oneida, N. Y., as follows:

I had the privilege of being Mr. Gibbud's assistant for about three years. The Holy Spirit led me into this service. He raised up friends who generously subscribed to a fund to secure for wife and self a handsome Gospel wagon to do work through the country towns, cities, and villages. The horse and harness were given by H. B. Andrews, President of the Rescue Mission, Syracuse. The wagon was presented by the citizens. We started last September, and have preached the Gospel to thousands of people, and have seen results. We founded a Rescue Mission in this town about three months ago, and over fifty have confessed Christ, and we have had numerous requests for prayers. Our wagon is called the "Glad Tidings." We have been well received all along the line. We go into the slums, and have not once been insulted or molested. We are both cornetists, singers, preachers, and personal workers, and we desire nothing more than to bring honor and praise to Christ, our king, by preaching his Gospel and winning souls.

Alaskan Hardships.

In a letter to the Western Rural, Dr. Gardner B. Pond, writes from Alaska giving this unique description of the present condition of affairs in the mining section.

Three years ago Alaska was a land of peace and quiet almost heavenly. Now it is a land of toil, of privation, hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness. We can feel the new atmosphere which these gold-seekers have brought with them, and it worries us. We see an end or the old regime, the old Alaskan hospitality, a thing unique, a hospitality unequaled on the face of the earth—we see it doomed. I have had invitations to take little jaunts for pleasure; for example one to Herschel Island—a little matter of 4,000 miles there and back. As I had gained a little in experience, I kindly but firmly refused that little trip, but the invitation illustrates the old condition of things. This hungry multitude that has come has dried up the springs of good-fellowship. The lust for filthy lucre persuaded even the United States commissioner to make of his office a restaurant, where for a consideration the wayfarer might obtain the elastic beef sandwich. Many have asked me concerning Klondike and the Alaskan gold regions in general. To these questions I usually reply that as to the quantity of gold in Alaska, believe the reports; as to the hardships, they wont hurt a healthy man if he takes care of himself. As to the shortage of provisions and the difficulty in getting provisions there, the reports are not overdrawn, although this year may see that difficulty largely removed by the building of new boats by the transportation companies."

The Sunday School

THE CALL OF MATTHEW.

Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 13. Matt. 9:9-17. Golden Text, Matt. 9:9.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE ministry of the Lord Jesus was very varied. He had just been healing the paralytic, having previously declared to him the forgiveness of sins, and thereby aroused the enmity of the scribes and Pharisees. But the multitudes, when they saw the paralyzed man arise, take up his bed and walk, glorified God which had given such power unto men. Unto men! Why did they generalize? Could they not see that power was not inherent in humanity; it was Jesus only who possessed it. O, how men love to generalize in the things of God! It is thus they take off the edge from the words and the facts which God designs to penetrate heart and conscience.

But everywhere God finds prepared ones, such as lay to heart the very things which produce only a passing impression on others. "As Jesus passed from thence he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom." Others saw the man, but they did not see what Jesus saw. To them Matthew was only a man of business following his ordinary occupation. Jesus saw a heart ready to receive him. Guided step by step every hour of his life from above, Jesus knew that his hour was come to speak to this man, and "He saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him." O, how we need in our dealing with souls this close guidance! Only God knows how the heart is prepared for the word we might speak, and if it is spoken out of season it may do more harm than good. "A word spoken in due season how good is it (Prov. 15:23)! God hath made everything beautiful in his time. When a sense of self-importance, a feeling that I must speak to such and such an one, and that no one else would do as well exists, the corruption of the self-life acts as a non-conductor, and the Spirit of God cannot flow through us to that soul. When a legal pressure comes upon us: "I ought to speak to such an one! I shall feel condemned if I do not," the self in our spirit will impart its savor to what we say and spoil it. It is only where we are in direct line with God, yielded up to his Spirit's presence and power and direction that our words can be a power. All truly good works are prepared beforehand that we should walk in them (Eph. 2:10), and their result is sure. Everything answered in the life of our Lord, everything fitted. There was no loss of time, no waste of words or of strength. He means that it should be thus with us also, that our lives should be a continuous carrying out of the will of God, and ourselves a continually open channel conveying God to others.

Nicodemus came to Jesus by night, but the Lord called Matthew in broad daylight, as all was to be immediately fruitful to others, and this without any constraint or forcing. In Luke 5:28 we read, Levi, the same as Matthew, "left all, rose up and followed him." He was a public personage in a public place, and those around him must see and know that he had become a disciple of Jesus. And let us not shrink from confessing Christ or seek to hide it. He made unto him a great feast in his own house, and gathered a great company of publicans and others to sit down with them. Matthew would see the end of his money, which he now cared to value in giving up friends and his acquaintances the opportunity to come in contact with Jesus who had so revolutionized his life.

The cold feeling of the Pharisees was at once aroused, but being probably afraid to approach Jesus, they asked his disciples to account for his actions. "Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?" It is a bad sign when men do a thing second-hand. If the Pharisees had come in a spirit of inquiry, they would certainly have gone to Jesus directly, but they were critics, not inquirers, wolves in sheeps' clothing. When Jesus heard it, he met them as he had met the devil who had inspired them, with the Word of God. "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth: I will have mercy and not sacrifice, for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

He was quoting from the prophet Hosea, in that striking appeal, "O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee? for your goodness [or mercy] is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets, I have slain them by the words out of my mouth, and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth. For I desired mercy and not sacrifice, and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings. (Hos. 6:4-6). The Pharisees were the descendants of those whose mercy was as a morning cloud and as the early dew, yet they deluded themselves into a belief of their great superiority to the publicans and sinners; but they had no heart to help them. O how true it is that only those who know themselves as redeemed sinners can help other sinners! It is from the lowest place, not from the highest, that we can help others.

God's love to sinners, to enemies is our message to the unsaved nominal Christian, to the Jew, Mohammedan, and to the heathen. "God will love you if you are good," is the subversion of the Gospel so often taught to children. "If I am born bad and God does not love me, how can I ever be good?" argues a thinking child who has been so taught. God loves the world as it is in all its sin and filthiness, for he gave his own Son to atone for sin, to save, cleanse and transform the sinner. Such is our glorious good tidings. "Go ye and learn what that meaneth," what that meaneth for thee, what that meaneth for the most hopeless and lost who are around thee. O what hope for those whom our wicked hearts have looked down upon and despised!

"Then came to Him the disciples of John, saying, 'Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but Thy disciples fast not?' And Jesus said unto them, 'Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the day shall come when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them; then shall they fast." John the Baptist had already made use of the name of bridegroom in relation to the Lord Jesus. "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase, but I must decrease" (John 3:29-30.) In the few who received Him and who left all to follow Him the Lord recognized the daughter which should hearken and consider, which should forget also her people, and her father's house, so should the King desire her beauty (Ps. 45:10, 11). The presence of Christ was to such the presence of the Bridegroom. The time for fasting should come when he should be taken away, and they left on earth despised and rejected as he had been. And this fasting is not only fasting from food, but also from useless taking from anything which may distract from Him whose right it is to absorb our heart's deepest attention whatever may be our necessary occupation.

No man putteth a piece of new cloth into an old garment, for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment and the rent is made worse. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles (or wine-skins); else the bottles break, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles and both are preserved." No mixture of the new life of Christ with the old man of forms and rites and ceremonies, which is put off with his deeds.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ONE of the most vital principles of Christianity is enunciated in this week's lesson. It is the fact, which distinguishes the religion of Christ from all other religions, that its offers are addressed to open and avowed crimes. If a religion is to make men better, then bad people are those who have the greatest need of it. It is easy to see what a crowning glory this is to our faith. It excludes none but those who exclude themselves. All are welcome, and if any one judges himself to be wicked and unworthy of it, he is the one to whom it addresses itself. It asks no questions as to the past, it recognizes no evil as sufficiently great to prevent a man being eligible for membership. It asks only if he is sorry for the past wrongdoing, if he desires to become pure and good, and if he is willing to put himself in Christ's hands for deliverance, with full confidence in his power to save him from the wickedness that has befouled him and threatens to bring him to utter ruin. If he is sincere in this, and it would seem to be a very small requirement, Christ accepts him, and proceeds to work a cure. Rightly is such an offer described as "gospel." It is the greatest, most welcome offer that could be made to a degraded and corrupt world.

Old bottles. We, who are accustomed to the use of glass bottles, do not perceive the point of this comparison. The Oriental bottle was a very different thing from our bottles. It consisted of a skin, usually the skin of a goat. The interior of the animal was removed, its feet cut off, and the skin tied up, the impurities thoroughly removed by scouring, and the bottle was ready for use. After a time, the bottle becoming hard and worn, the wine fermenting, would strain it beyo its strength, and there would be a r like there is in an old shoe after it is th oughly soaked and dried. In spite Christ's warning, men have tried to new wine of true religion into the bottles of formalism. His disciples th selves tried it when they wanted the G tile Christians to obey Jewish laws. He VIII., of England, is conspicuous in tory as one who attempted the same th He quarreled with the Pope, and posed to do without him, while retain the integral principles of Popery. when faith and love and the knowle the people obtained from the Bible into their hearts they made short work the forms and ceremonies which them bound. Cuba's Appeal Not In Vain.

CHRISTIAN AMERICA HASTENING TO THE RESCUE OF THE STARVING PEASANTRY.

THE RELIEF FUND STEADILY GROWING.

Shipments of Food and Clothing to General Lee—Ravages of the Famine—Terrible Sufferings of the Reconcentrados—Pen-Pictures by eye-witnesses—Photographs taken by Correspondents in the Famine Field.

CUBA'S despairing appeal to Christian America for relief from the fate which threatens her starving peasantry has not been made in vain. With characteristic promptitude, our people are everywhere bestirring themselves, and we hear of organized movements in many States for the purpose of raising relief funds, wherewith the Central Committee appointed by the President may purchase food, medicine and clothing. Contributions are now coming in rapidly, and already the Committee has been able to make several shipments of supplies to General Lee, our Consular representative at Havana, under whose supervision the distribution is taking place. We are able to assure our readers and the public generally that, thus far, the Spanish Government has afforded all needed facilities to General Lee and his assistants, and that not only are all the relief supplies admitted free, but there has been no disposition to impede the work, or to prevent the same reaching the proper beneficiaries. General Lee's despatches distinctly bear this interpretation. Contributors can therefore send in their donations to the fund, feeling assured that every gift will reach its proper destination, and will be the means of bringing hope and gladness to some poor Cuban home, where misery and long-continued hunger seemed to afford no room for hope this side the grave. Every steamer leaving New York for Havana carries consignments of food, clothing, and medicines from the Relief Committee to General Lee. A sample shipment sent a few days ago, included:

two hundred and fifty barrels of potatoes, five hundred barrels of pilot bread, fifty boxes of fish, fifty bags of rice, two hundred barrels of meal, five hundred thousand grains quinine, five cases of hollow-ware, three cases of canned goods, and two cases of drugs.

On Wednesday, Jan. 26, forty-eight thousand pounds of rice were included among the shipments. Our artist has shown in an illustration on the first page one of the Ward Line steamers taking on relief stores at her New York pier for Havana. Despatches from Cuba give further accounts of the widespread suffering. Thousands of the starving have been brought to Havana, and many buildings are transformed into temporary infirmaries. There is no money to buy food or medicine. An American visiting one infirmary, gave the money he had had been had there in days. The inmates of those places—men, women and children—lie about in the last stages of starvation. Children die upon the bare floors. One babe lay dead on a cot beside its dying mother, who was too weak to be conscious of its fate. It is sometimes difficult to distinguish the dead from the living. A correspondent writes:

The condition of the reconcentrados and the frightful suffering which they have undergone is the one growing horror of the Cuban war. Those are the people that have suffered; these are the people that die.

Mr. E. J. Gibson, correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, writing within the last few days, says:

A LIVING DEATH.

Consul-General Lee is getting returns from various parts of the island as to the relief needed. So far the indications are that two hundred thousand persons are now starving to death. The amount already contributed by the United States is hardly a drop in the bucket. With ten cents for each person, it would take twenty thousand dollars a day to stop the terrible death rate among these starving people. General Lee's office is besieged every day with applicants for help. The relief fund adds greatly to his labors, but he willingly does what he can.

At Sagua, the relief administered to the worst cases among the starving consists of four ounces of bean soup daily. Crowds gather at the relief headquarters, and friends carry the food to those who, through weakness, are unable to walk. Mr. Gibson further adds:

Congressman King and I have seen hundreds of reconcentrados, starving at Santa Clara, the capital of the province. I have personally seen thousands of starving reconcentrados. General Lee has been getting returns from all over the island as to the number needing help, and he places it at two hundred thousand. I have been in numerous small towns with a population each of only a few hundred, where from three thousand to seven thousand reconcentrados were penned up. The death rate in those places has been terrible.

In Washington all the recent information received on the subject of the famine more than confirms the statement of an official attached to the Department of Justice, who, on returning from a recent visit to Cuba, estimated that 200,000 had already died of starvation. Mr. H. V. Boynton, a well-informed writer of the deaths from famine, says:

Double that number is now believed to be nearer the truth than the figures named. This relief work is a task as stupendous as it is sorrowful and heartrending. With every assistance, only a small proportion of those in the direst need can be helped.

BURYING FAMINE VICTIMS AT SAGUA.

This coffin—a plain, pine box—was used to carry to the grave ten young victims. It is probably still in use by the villagers of that stricken district.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S "Cuban Famine Pamphlet," giving the fullest and most reliable information, from official sources, as to the character and extent of this terrible visitation, and illustrated with many photographs recently taken by Mr. Sylvester Scovel in Cuba, will be sent free to all who may write us asking for it. Single copies or a number of copies may be had, as desired.

To those who, in the Master's name and for his sake reached out the hand of succor to the suffering in still more distant fields, the magnitude of the Cuban need will not be regarded as affording room for discouragement, but rather as an incentive to earnest and active relief work. Many thousands of precious lives were saved in Russia and Armenia, and hundreds of thousands in India, where the sufferers were counted by millions. Many lives are even now being saved in Cuba, by the efforts that have been put forth. Every gift, no matter how small, if given from the heart and in the right spirit, will be doubly blessed. To rescue some poor helpless one in Cuba should be the duty of every reader of this journal, and indeed of every American who has in his breast a spark of sympathy for human suffering. Every contribution to the Relief Fund, sent to this journal, will be duly acknowledged, and with other contributions will be promptly forwarded by the Committee to Gen. Lee in the form of food, clothing and medicine. The following contributions have been received during the week:

Approaching Valentines.

WE are near a day set apart for jollity and wholesale fun. February 14 and St. Valentine's Day, established in honor of a bishop who lost his head. A festal observed on both sides the sea, admired and denounced. The arousal of sport, and the implement of disgust. It was celebrated long before we were born, and will be observed long after we are dead. Though different from all other hilarious days, it has its uses. Fourth of July for patriotism, Thanksgiving Day for the review of national mercies, Christmas Day for the celebration of the great advent; but Fourteenth of February, demonstrative of tenderest sentiment and crackling fun. At the doorbells, mysterious postmen vanishing down the steps before you have time to recognize them. About six million valentines fluttering in the excited grasp, and thirty million people wondering where they come from. Do not allow your interest in this annual holiday to lessen as you get older.

We cannot spare it from the calendar. You may have cultured your taste until nothing short of a Bierstadt, or a Church, or a Kensett, or a Raphael can please you; but you are to remember that one hundred thousand dollars' worth of pictures such as these, would not please the children so well as two or three grotesque valentines. Mirth above one's capacity is no mirth at all.

There can come no harm to the childish mind from the caricatures that enter your house on St Valentine's night. The doggerel which they read with such boisterous gyration will not hinder to them future poetic taste. Let the missives fly until all our cities resound with laughter. The more jog-eat children have before ten or fifteen years of age, the better will they be able to stand the pressure of severe life when it comes upon them. We have no sympathy with those parents who try to have children be existent the sorrows of the old folks. They who begin the hard work of the world without having had their natural share of juvenile merriment, begin under mighty disadvantage. Alas for those whose life is a everlasting Ash Wednesday preceded by no May blossoms.

Valentine's Day has its uses in expression of higher and more tender sentiment. There comes a time between eighteen and twenty-five years of age, when one does not know exactly what is the matter. You get dreamy. You sit looking at one figure in the carpet for an hour, as though you had never seen it before. After some long conversation which expects an answer has been addressed to you, you look up vacantly and say, "Wh-a-t?" Some tease of the family takes it upon himself to announce the diagnosis of your disease. You dare not write a letter expressive of your feeling, for you do not want to commit yourself, and at just that time the uses of the valentine come in. The selection is made, reckless of expense, with glistening eye and throbbing heart, which the merchant of the valentine understands, but of which he says nothing. In that purchase, good poetry takes the place of doggerel, and the design is suggestive of hearts in various stages of surrender. At such crises of feeling, the valentine seems to be a necessity.

Marriage No Lottery.

IN ancient Rome, at the festival of the Lupercalia, the names of young women were placed in a box, from which they were taken by young men as chance directed: intimating that marriage was a lottery, and that any one proposing it, only puts his hand in a box from which he may chance to draw a fortune or a misery. There is no lottery about it. In the vast majority of cases those are affianced who ought to be affianced. You denounce some marital engagement as unfit because the parties are unlike. That is the way it ought to be. If the one is sanguine the other needs to be phlegmatic. If the one is frivolous, the other needs to be grave. If the one is poetry, the other needs to be prose. Most wonderfully does God set the solitary in families. It is not putting your hand in a box where there are a thousand ballots, but, in most cases, a matter of divine selection. It appears to "just happen so," that they met on some excursion, or in some parlor, or in some street, or in some church; but there was nothing accidental about the meeting. By eternal goodness the whole affair was arranged. If God controls the smaller affairs of our life, will he leave to haphazard the most important affair? If you think that it is all a lottery, the selection of one's chief companion, you pay but poor compliment to your home. The Bible says, "a good wife is from the Lord," but took it for granted that we might easily guess where the other kind comes from.

Trouble, the Great Educator.

MISFORTUNE and trials are great educators. A young doctor comes into the sick-room where there is a dying child. Perhaps he is very rough in his prescription, and very rough in his manner, and rough in his feeling of the pulse, and rough in his answer to the mother's anxious question; but years roll on, and there has been one dead in his own house; and now he comes into the sick-room, and with tearful eye he looks at the dying child, and he says, "Oh, how this reminds me of my Charlie!" Trouble, the great educator. Sorrow—I see its touch in the grandest painting; I hear its tremor in the sweetest song; I feel its power in the mightiest argument.

Grecian mythology said that the fountain of Hyppocrene was struck out by the foot of the winged horse Pegasus. I have often noticed in life that the brightest and most beautiful fountains of Christian comfort and spiritual life have been struck out by the iron-shod hoof of disaster and calamity.

It took all our past national distresses, to lift up our nation on that high career where it will march along after the foreign aristocracies that have mocked and the tyrannies that have jeered, shall be swept down under the omnipotent wrath of God, who hates despotism, and who, by the strength of his own red right arm, will make all men free. And so it is individually, and in the family, and in the Church and in the world, that through darkness and storm and trouble, men, women, churches, nations, are developed.

LET SLEEPING DOGS LIE.

WHAT infinite prudence, forbearance, and wisdom there are in these four words! In the home life, if we wish to get along comfortably, how much depends upon our ability to ignore little disagreeable events, little querulous remarks. Papa has come home from business surly and silent—it is a way papas have, when they are mentally and physically worn out—but what is the use of commenting on the fact? A good dinner, and a few words in season, will put all right in an hour; and the evening likely ends in smiles and sunshine. In family affairs it is a dangerous thing to ask such irritating questions as, "What is the matter? What have I done now?" Sulking is not always to be avoided—but it can easily be made into an active quarrel by demanding explanations about it. If the dog of recrimination sleeps, it is better to let him alone than to wake him up and set him barking and worrying through every room in the house.

Children easily forgive, and even respect parents who are strict, and curtail their pleasures through principle, but they become impatient, and eventually contemptuous at the snarling and nagging that is only caprice, or the result of some personal inconvenience, such as a bad cold, or a disagreeable visitor, or an ill-fitting dress. It is indeed above human nature to expect any one to profit by household wrangling, and as far as I can ever see, nobody is made better for trials through this medium.

Then in social life, what scrapes we should keep out of if we would only let sleeping dogs lie. Frequently we do, and say, things which it would have been wiser not to have done or said; then if we have any prudence left we will deny ourselves the luxury of explanations. We should only succeed in waking up the dogs of rumor, and suspicion, and evil speaking; for nothing is truer than that they who begin to excuse themselves, accuse themselves. Far better trust to the good nature of our friends, to their instinct and experience of our character and lives, and to that mysterious process of justification, called, "living it down." We see this course confirmed constantly in the manner of our preachers; the man who simply makes statements, interests us; the man who explains, tires us.

And if in the way of our duty we come upon the sleeping dogs of envy, malice, hatred, prejudice, etc., what would it avail us to awaken and try to reason with them? Our very justice and honor would provoke them to attack. If we could show them our hearts, sorrowful and bleeding, they would not see. They are blind and deaf, and they wish to be so, in order that they may injure without pity and without remorse. This is a pack that rends as well as barks. If they sleep, tread softly, and go to this side, or the other, to avoid them.

Young people have often a foolish pleasure in awakening dogs they can neither pacify nor control. They twit their acquaintances with the one intolerable failure, or foolishness, of their lives,—a lost love, or lawsuit; the savage review of their book, the household skeleton, or a social slight,—and so manage by a constant worrying, to turn a vapid dislike into an active hatred. And though they may call such a course by some very fine, good name, it is really neither more nor less than an ill-conditioned temper, malicious and quarrelsome, troubling itself about matters with which it has no business to meddle.

The great test of a good heart is to be good at home; patient with those whom it is our duty to be patient with; considerate of their physical exhaustion, and of their moral and spiritual limitations. Grand virtues are made for grand occasions; and such occasions come at long intervals in any life; but that sweet tact, that gracious observance of household trifles on which the happiness of the home depends, is an every day, and every hour and moment virtue, and one of the greatest blessings of humanity.

For it is sometimes as real a virtue to restrain a truth as to speak it. A man or a woman may be in a very vile temper, but to tell them they are so—though it is an undoubted truth—may make matters much worse. Candid people are often very cruel people, and in their own way as bad tempered as those whom they accuse. To pass by a transgression, to turn aside wrath with a smile or a sweet answer, to let sleeping dogs lie, is not this better than to be offensively plain-spoken, quarrelsomely candid, and thus rouse all the sleeping dogs in their own and other people's paths, and make them give tongue to all the country side? Blessed are the peace-keepers; blessed are the men and women who have the courage, and the forbearance to let sleeping dogs lie!

Amelia E. Barr

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., editor chief of this journal, was married at Allegh Pa., on Saturday, Jan. 22, to Mrs. Eleanor M. lier, of that city. Mrs. Collier was the wido the late Mr. Charles Collier, a prominent law of Allegheny. She is a member of the Presbyrian Church, the pastor of which, Rev. Wil Robinson, D.D., performed the marriage mony.

It has been estimated that out of the population of the Eastern District of London one in a hundred attends any place of worship.

DESTROYING CURRENCY.

ONE of the most interesting operations of the United States Treasury is that of the destruction of t: bills which have been sent in for re-emption. From an article in this month's ju e of the new publication, Success, we l rn that notes to the value of a million dlars are condemned on an average ery day. They reach the Treasury from nks in all the States, and when they ve become dirty or dilapidated they are t reissued. Every bundle of money re- ved is turned over to an expert, who, er carefully counting and inspecting notes, to see that no counterfeits are ong them, places them together in small ckages, and marks on the wrapper the ount contained in each bundle. They e then passed under the machine, which nches a hole in each corner of every ckage: and cut into halves, lengthwise, e-half is sent to one division and the naining half to another, to be re- unted by two other people. All counts ist tally with each other before the bills ready for destruction. The next move to transport the bills to the Bureau of graving and Printing, where they are luced to pulp by what is called macera- n. Into an immense revolving cylinder ntaining several disintegrating chemi- ls, the bills are thrown. The pulp thus duced is pressed into sheets, which re- mble white cardboard. This substance sold by the Government for about forty llars a ton, the money received paying e entire expenses of maceration. The dinary citizen witnessing the destruc- n of bills, which he toils so hard to get d are so precious to him, might con- ler it waste, if he did not know that the lls are not money, but only the Govern- ent's promise to pay money. To him ey are as good as money, because he nows the Government will keep its pro- ise. It is much to be wished that he lt the same conviction about God's pro- ises. He has better ground for the as- rance, but if he had as strong faith he ould lead a different life.

These all died in faith, not having received the omises, but having seen them afar off, and were rsuaded of them and embraced them, and con- ssed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the rth (Heb., 11:13).

Wife's Discovery.

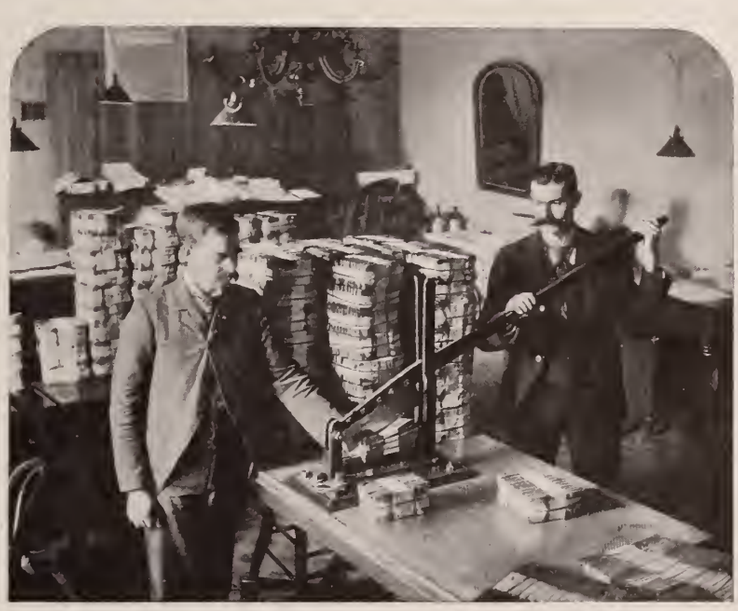
Among the romances of the Pension ureau is one that has recently been pub- shed by a journal of Louisville, Ky. A oman residing in that city applied for a ension as the widow of a veteran. She ated that her husband, who served rough the war and was badly wounded, ent West in 1868, and as she had heard othing from him since that time and had ason to believe him dead, she was en- tled to a widow's pension. It appears at when the man left home, poverty was ressing heavily upon him and he prom- ed his wife that he would send for her as oon as he could obtain remunerative em- loyment. She secured a situation in a ealthy family which moved away from e city. The husband had no good news o give for sometime, and did not write to er. Eventually, he drifted to Fort Worth, Texas, where he obtained a posi- on on the police force. There he made e acquaintance of a man who had re- ently come from Louisville, and who, robably misled by a similar name, told im that his wife had fallen ill and died. The husband was stricken down by the ews. A severe wound in the head hich he had received at the battle of hiloh, rendered him very susceptible to ental trouble, and he was prostrated be- ore he could verify the story of his wife's eath. When he recovered he took no teps to do so, and mourned her as dead. The wife, meanwhile, not hearing from im, and not knowing where to write, con- luded that he must be dead. She lost er situation and was in sore need when he applied for a pension. The commis- ioner investigated her case and notified er that her husband was not dead but as living in Oklahoma. She wrote him mmediately and a happy reunion of hus- band and wife resulted. Thus the woman's application, though rejected, was the means of bringing her happiness she never dreamed of. It is so sometimes with those who in their trouble go to God for relief. They do not always get what they ask for, but they may get eternal life, which is infinitely better.

Unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think (Eph 3:20).

A Prisoner's Disappointment.

A report recently received by the Minister of Justice in the Canadian Government from a Commission appointed to investigate the prisons states that in a certain penitentiary the letters written by the convicts during several years had not been mailed and the letters addressed to the convicts had not been delivered to them. They were thrown into a vault and had been lying there until the Commissioners found them. It is not stated why the letters were thus held back. Possibly some rule of prison discipline had been infringed, but there ought to be some very good reason to justify such a severe punishment as intercepting a prisoner's letters. If it was done without cause it was very cruel and doubtless had sad results. One case of the kind is quoted. A prisoner who was held for a first offence wrote to his family expressing his contrition and promising to lead a new life when he came out if they would forgive him. He begged them to write him a word of affection and pardon to cheer him. As his letter was not mailed and no letter from his family ever reached him he left the penitentiary at the end of his term in a very hard and embittered state of mind. It is a pity that he did not know and realize that his Father in heaven was ready to forgive and was loving him. The encouragement he needed to begin a new life is precisely that which God offers, but like this convict, men often do not know that he is ready to give it.

Not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance (Rom. 2:4).



CUTTING UP SOILED AND MUTILATED CURRENCY IN THE TREASURY.

A Singular Fatality.

The death of two men at Pittsburg, Pa., occurred on January 20, through a remarkable oversight. A bridge is being built there across a ravine through which the Pennsylvania Railroad runs. The two main girders have been in position for some days. The derrick which handles the material stands between the girders alongside the railroad track. On that morning, two workmen walked out on a plank thrown across the girders and went to work repairing the derrick. The plank was secured to the girders by a rope, the ends of which hung down over the railroad tracks. The men did not think of the rope, and kept at work. As the accommodation train swept around a bend in the road, the smokestack of the engine brushed the rope, which caught on the ventilator of one of the cars and was dragged forward. The weight on the rope bent the plank, and the rebound shot both men in the air. One of them fell on top of a passenger coach and was carried 200 feet, falling into the ditch at the side of the track. He was killed instantly. The other fell alongside the water-rail, his head striking the ironwork of the bridge. His skull was fractured, and he lived only a few minutes. It is unaccountable that the men should not have foreseen some such result occurring from that dangling rope. It was a fatal oversight. There is reason to fear that an analogous oversight is being made by some who bear the name of Christ. They have not separated themselves from the world sufficiently to be safe. The love of some amusement or some evil habit clings to them and may entangle them in the ways they had left.

If after they have escaped the pollutions of the world they are again entangled and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning (II Peter, 2:20).

A Baby's Betrothal.

A romantic story of a recent wedding is told by The Youth's Companion. It says that eighteen years ago a young man was spending his vacation in a fishing village in Massachusetts. He became very fond of a girl baby of whom the keeper of his boarding-house was the happy mother. One day, he said to the mother: "Will you give me that babe for my wife?" The mother had known the young man for several summers; she liked him, and therefore, answered promptly, "Yes." He thanked her and asked: "Will you promise never to tell her that you have selected me as her husband?" The mother promised and she observed the conditions of the singular betrothal. The girl baby grew up, and summer after summer the young man courted her. When she was eighteen he married her, and not till then did she know that she had been betrothed to her husband while in her cradle. The young man must have had unusual constancy of affection to wait so long for his wife, and it would have been a great disappointment to him, if, when she grew up, she had refused to marry him. It is such disappointment that God represents himself as feeling, when his people on whom he has lavished his love and care turn away from him and will not love him:

Nevertheless, I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth. (Ezek. 16:60).

Suicides Losing Insurance.

A decision of the United States Supreme Court handed down last week ought to be made known everywhere in view of the increasing disposition to commit suicide. The case before the Court was a claim for half a million dollars which was made on various life-insurance companies by the heirs of a man who committed suicide. Justice Harlan, who pronounced judgment, stated explicitly that no life-insurance company need pay the policy on the life of any man who, while in the possession of his reason, killed himself. The suicide, in this case, therefore, failed in his plan to enrich his heirs at the cost of the companies. Perhaps this decision may operate beneficially in deterring others from the crime that is becoming so common. It is much to be wished, too, that the consequences of the crime which are yet more common, might also be realized, so that men might turn away from the sins which lead to it.

He that doeth it destroyeth his own soul (Prov. 6:32).

Music in a Vault.

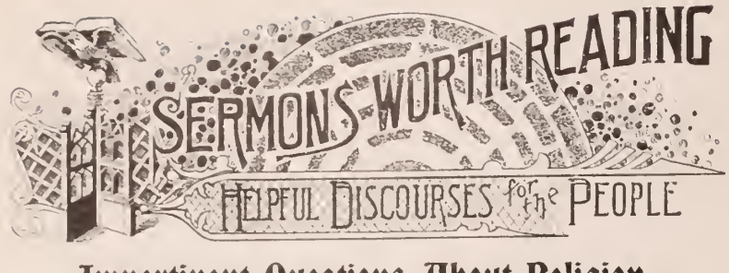
There is a novelty, according to a despatch from Saratoga, N. Y., in the cemetery of that town. In the receiving vault a casket is lying, awaiting the completion of a beautiful mausoleum which is being constructed for its permanent resting-place. Beside the casket is a musical-box which is wound up every day by the widow of the man whose body is in the casket. She goes to the vault at the same hour every day and sits there for an hour or two while the musical-box plays his favorite tunes, and when she quits the vault her face shows that she has been weeping. She says that she has ordered for the new tomb a mammoth music-box from Switzerland and she will make it a part of the interior furnishings of the tomb. She says that her husband's views of the future life were such that he believed the sounds of the airs which cheered him on earth could reach him after his death. Accordingly, among the airs that any music-box designed for the tomb of the deceased must have are "The Heart Bowed Down," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." One cannot but admire her regard for his wishes, especially if she has more sense than he had, and is aware how useless the duty is that she is performing. It is a pity that as he was so fond of music, her husband did not make it his supreme concern to enter that abode of which John had a vision.

I saw them that had gotten the victory . . . . stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God, and they sing the song of Moses (Rev., 15:2).

Beguiled by a Mirage.

Travelers in the deserts of Arabia and Africa have often told the story of the mocking vision, which is seen by the thirsty men and animals who fancy that they see not far away abundant water. A similar story is sent to a San Francisco journal by the superintendent of a cattle ranch in New Mexico. He says that near the Mexican border the air is so thin and pure that the mirage is extremely vivid, and only those persons who know by actual experience that what they see does not and cannot exist on the plains, can believe that the spectacle is an optical delusion. He states that not long ago a man who set out from Juarez, Mexico, to go to Los Palomas, in New Mexico, nearly lost his life through this delusion. He was driving a wagon loaded with merchandise and had reached a point below Deming, when he saw a short distance off on his right, a beautiful lake shaded by trees. Both he and his team were very thirsty, so he turned out of his course to get water. After traveling several miles, the lake seemed as far off as at first. But it was there, clear and distinct before him. Never thinking of the mirage, he continued in the direction of the lake and fancied he could feel on his face the fresh breeze from the water. As the distance did not appear to diminish, the idea that it was the mirage, of which he had heard, but had never seen, dawned on him, and he turned back to the road. But night fell before he reached it and he lost his way. In the morning he could not recognize any indication of his proper course, and all his efforts to find the road were unavailing. He knew, however, that his only hope of safety was to persevere, and eventually, after a delay of four days, succeeded in reaching his destination. Many a man has had a similar experience in the journey of life. The world offers him satisfaction in many ways, but they are all delusive, and only in Christ can true content be found.

Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst (John 4:14).



Impertinent Questions About Religion.

Sermon by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D.D., First Baptist Church, Nashville, Tenn. Text: John 21-22. . . . . } What is that to thee?

NOT many days after the resurrection of our Lord, he appeared to Peter and other disciples on the seashore. To remove all doubts from their minds as to the reality of his physical presence, he took a meal with them. After eating, he took Peter aside to speak privately with him. Peter, looking back and seeing John following after them, said, "Lord, what shall this man do?" Jesus answered, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." Bible students do not agree as to what Peter meant by this question—What shall this man do?" It seems to me that the only object Peter had was to find out whether the Master wished John to hear what he was about to say to him. But whether Peter meant this or something else, it is very evident that the Master's reply was a rebuke to Peter—"What is that to thee?"

REV. J. B. HAWTHORNE.

Jesus was wont to encourage his disciples to come to him with all their difficulties, but he did not always give them the information which they sought. When it was necessary to correct misapprehension and remove error from their minds, his responses were generally very direct. When the disciples brought to him one who was born blind, and asked whether the blindness was a penalty for the child's own sin or the sin of his parents, he told them that it was neither for the child's transgression nor for that of his progenitors that the affliction was sent upon him.

Sometimes when he was asked to interpret a parable which he had spoken, he gave them a full and satisfactory explanation; but, when they came to him with questions born of idle curiosity, he rebuked them, and sometimes very severely.

When some of them asked, "Are they few that be saved?" he would not answer, because the question was indicative of unlawful curiosity. Knowing that they could derive no benefit from a discussion of the subject, he replied, to them, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." When some enquired, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore unto us the kingdom of Israel?" he answered, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power."

The great lesson which Christ teaches by his manner of dealing with the disciples is, that there are many difficulties to the existence of which we are not responsible, and that it is folly for us to allow our minds to be occupied with them. Just in the degree that we are anxious about such things, and give ourselves to the study of them, we impair our efficiency in the real work which God requires us to do.

Follow Christ, believe on him, reproduce his virtues, like him, go about doing good. Let this be your work, and on that our salvation and spiritual growth and happiness depend. As secret things belong to God, leave with him the unrevealed and inscrutable. Just so far as we burden our minds with these things, and consume time in the study of them, we rob God and defeat the purposes of our creation and redemption.

1. "I explain the origin of evil, and reconcile the existence of it with the holiness and goodness of God." This is one of the problems brought to religious teachers of this day. The inability of religious teachers to solve it, is with some men a sufficient excuse for rejecting Christianity. Christianity did not make this difficulty, and it is not the province of Christianity to tell us why God permitted evil to come into the world. Christianity simply recognizes the existence of evil, and tells us how we may escape from it. What God has locked up in the infinite depths of his own spirit we are not required to know, or to attempt to know. Besides this, the question concerning the origin of evil does not affect in the remotest degree man's interests, either in this life or in the life to come. A revelation of the mystery could be of no practical value to us in meeting our obligations to God and our fellow-man. How foolish and inexcusable is all this curiosity about the origin of evil. Think of a man in a burning building, who, when a way of escape is made for him, stands at a window and refuses to be rescued until some one has explained the origin of the fire. Not more foolish is that man than he, who covered with guilt and condemned to eternal death, refuses to accept pardon and salvation until some one has explained why God has permitted evil to come into the world.

2. "If there be a God; if he is a righteous Ruler and administers his government over the world in the interest of truth and right, explain why so many wicked men are prosperous, and so many good men are in the depths of adversity. Explain why a man who obliterates all distinctions between right and wrong, and glories in a life of lust, is blessed with a profusion of the good things of this world, while his neighbor, who is distinguished for Christlikeness, is poor, destitute, and afflicted." Men come to us with this problem, and tell us that when we solve it they will become Christians.

I cannot solve the mystery. The God whom I serve has not imposed upon me the obligation to even attempt a solution of it. His thoughts are not as our thoughts, nor his ways as our ways. Why he does not fully reward good and evil in this life; why some wicked men have temporal prosperity and some righteous men have temporal adversity, are mysteries which we shall not understand until that day when all secrets shall be uncovered. It may be some relief to our minds, as we contemplate this dark problem, to consider that temporal prosperity is not always a blessing. It is frequently a curse. Men who boast that they have become rich by utterly ignoring truth, virtue, and God, are not blessed, but cursed, in being permitted to accumulate material wealth. The man whose conscience is dead, who has nothing in his heart that seeks fellowship with purity and goodness, and who boasts of his sensuality, uncleanness, and freedom from moral restraint, is not a prosperous man. What he calls prosperity is only the means of his destruction. It is a dead weight that is sinking him into the mire and filth of moral degradation. Such a man is doomed. He is damned for this world and the next. Let us consider also, that poverty and sufferings are sometimes elements of prosperity. To live in a log hut, and linger upon a bed of sickness, are not always signs of adversity, because, under God's government, poverty and pain are ministering angels to those who love and fear him. If you are developing a noble, Christlike character, if you are getting more and more the mastery of self, if conscience is becoming more sensitive, and the mind and heart are growing in responsiveness to sentiments that are pure, lovely, and exalted, you are God's favorite child—the recipient of his highest blessing—though you may be covered with rags, and subsist on the crumbs which fall from the tables of the rich. "What is that to thee?" No matter how God administers his government over men, except you repent, you shall perish.

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform.

But one thing he makes plain—so plain that it is not possible for you to misunderstand it. You are a sinner, and if you die in your sins you cannot see God's face in peace. Another thing is equally plain. Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and if you trust and follow him he will save you. There are mysteries in providence and nature—mysteries which God alone can explain; but when we come to the question of personal salvation, there is no mystery. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

3. "The Bible is a mysterious book. It contains much that is utterly unintelligible to man." Thousands make this an excuse for rejecting the religion of the Bible. It is the lack of capacity to comprehend that makes mystery. You tell your little boy that the earth turns over every twenty-four hours. That statement starts in his mind a hundred perplexing questions. But the boy believes what you say about the earth. He believes it, not because he understands it, but because he believes in you. He confides in your intelligence, wisdom, and veracity. Many things in the Bible are mysterious to me, but they are mysterious only because of my lack of capacity to understand them. I believe these mysterious passages because I believe the Divine Being who inspired them is too pure and good to deceive me. The sense of moral depravity inheres in the very constitution of every human being, and the question, "How shall man be cleansed of this moral pollution and become just before God?" rises unbidden in every human breast. A merciful God has responded to this earnest longing of his fallen creatures by sending forth his Son in human flesh to make a propitiation for the sins of the world, and thereby provide cleansing, redemption, and everlasting life for all who will believe on his name. These are glad tidings to the believer. By accepting them his troubled conscience is soothed into a sweet repose, and there is imparted to him a new nature and a new life. From the earthy and the grovelling he rises into fellowship with the spiritual and the heavenly. From the realm of gloom, doubt, and fear, he emerges into a region resplendent with the brightness of imperishable hopes.

But while the proclamation of the adorable truth, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," imparts to us light, life, peace and joy, it brings us face to face with problems which baffle our powers of understanding. It starts within us questions like these: "How could the infinite God tabernacle in human flesh, and how could the death of an innocent being atone for the sins of the guilty?" There are many persons among us who have never moved away from these questions. Perplexed by them, they refuse to take the first step in the path of obedience to God. They are wasting their lives in the foolish attempt to know what must remain unknown and unknowable until the great day of final revelation.

Amid the gloom of his exile on Helena, the great Napoleon gave much of his time to the study of the Gospel. He was profoundly impressed with the mystery of Christ's nature, and doctrine, and work. But these very mysteries helped him to believe in his divinity and holiness. He said, "The spirit of Christ overawes me, and his will confounds me. The truths which he announces, and his manner of convincing men, are not explained by any human philosophy. His birth, his life, his Gospel, his empire, and his march across the ages, are mysteries which we can neither solve or deny.

My friends, while our lack of capacity to understand makes Jesus Christ the most mysterious being in the universe, we cannot fail to recognize the fact that he was pure and merciful and good. Having faith in his wisdom and rectitude, the mysteries of his nature and work and doctrine should not deter us from committing our souls to his keeping. We who have long lived in fellowship with him, are no more able to solve these mysteries than yourselves. Not until we have passed from the region of dusky shadows to the brightness of heaven's eternal noon, shall we know more than we now know about these inscrutable things. This we can see—we know him—we know his power; we know his grace: we know he saves.

"There are thousands of people in the churches who are not what they profess to be. In heart and life they are no better than thousands outside of the churches." Many make this an excuse for rejecting the religion of Christ. When these unfriendly critics speak thus of the church, they seem to be utterly oblivious of the existence of the many thousands and millions of church members who are true and faithful. They are blind to the vast array of patient toilers for truth, righteousness, humanity, and God, without whom the world would be as dreary as a desert. They seem to see only the Simon Maguses and Judas Iscariots. A German comes to this country to make a study of the American people. He visits only the gamblers, and harlots, and jail-birds. After this very limited observation of our people, he returns to his own country and writes a book, in which he says: "My study of the Americans has convinced me that they are a nation of gamblers, thieves, adulterers, and murderers." That is about the way in which some rejectors of Christ study the churches of Jesus Christ. Because there are unfaithful and unworthy professors of Christianity, they leap to the conclusion that all professed followers of Christ are hypocrites and knaves. "What is that to thee?" The insincerity and unfaithfulness of church members does not render your obligations less real and binding. Except you repent, you shall perish forever.

THE INDIANS OF BRAZIL

By HORACE M. LANE, M.D.*

THE whole subject of South American Indians, in all of its various aspects ought to be intensely interesting to Americans, but the scientific study of the indigenous people of America seems to have gone out of fashion, and the church seem to have lost sight of the native American Pagans at their very door, who are easily accessible, and some of whom are actually asking for light.

During the past year it was our privilege to entertain Joaquin Sepe, a baptized Pagan, head chief of the Cherentes, grave, dignified, and intelligent man. The Chief Sepe brought a group of his people overland from the head waters of the Tocantins to Rio, a journey of many months and presented them to the President, asking for a teacher and agricultural implements, that his people might become civilized. He was on his way back, having failed in the object of his visit, when he made us a visit of several weeks in S. Paulo.

These Cherentes, numbering four thousand adult men (in giving their numbers the Indians refer to adult males only), are living in fourteen villages on the upper Tocantins and its tributaries, are one of the eight great families into which Von Martius divided the Indians of South America. Along the lower course of the Mortes, and its junction with the Araguaya, is found the powerful tribe of the Chavantes, an offshoot of the Cherentes, and said to be physically the finest race of men in America. To the south of them are the Cavapos, and on the north the Canoeiros.

Several weeks of close intercourse with this intelligent pagan brother showed that, while he had some knowledge of Christian ceremonies and the names of some of the saints, he was totally ignorant of the central truth of Christianity, and still retained his pagan beliefs. He gave many interesting facts concerning the language, folklore, customs, traditions, and beliefs of the people, of which careful notes were taken by an intelligent Brazilian scholar.

Mr. George R. Witte is now on his way to the Cherentes. He was touched by the story of Sepe's fruitless search for a teacher, left his studies in the medical school, and started for the Tocantins without any stated support, relying entirely upon the spontaneous contributions of Christian friends. He is now in Portland studying the language. He will leave on Para in time to catch the first mail steamer up the river to the rapids, where it is expected the chief will have men waiting to accompany him on the long journey up the unnavigable part of the stream to Piabanha, the principal village of the Cherentes and residence of Sepe.

Minstrels and Their Music.

ne Wandering Singers of the Old World —A Venetian Street Player.

SOME great thinker has said: "Let who will make the laws of a people, if I may write their songs." The singing of the Marseillaise had to be forbidden in Paris, for when the populace heard it, they wanted to fight, whether they had anything to fight about or not. The wandering minstrel of ancient Britain shaped history. Men listened and were moved to deeds of valor and mercy, or of violence and revenge. The road-side bard and the street musician are institutions as old as roads and streets, for the world seems always to have had its singers of songs. And ballad-making—the outburst, as of a flower, of simple human nature into song—grew into finished ode and noble epic, and the field of its influence narrowed to the cultivated and learned who read dramas and studied verse. But still the common people clamored for music, and the German minne-singer and the Venetian Cantastorie, and last, but not least, the organ-grinder of all countries and climes, closed up the ranks. And these, too, are shaping humanity and making history whether we are conscious of it or not.

If the merry song is innocent, if it brings a smile to listening childhood, makes youth remember that it is youth and God's blessed springtime, and refreshes the tired-looking woman in the midst of her labor, the little rill of song has not failed in its mission of refreshing. Children love music as flowers love sunshine, and they cluster thick and eager around the band-master, or the flutist, the violinist or the organ-grinder. There is an inviting field of usefulness for the street musician when he recognizes it. As we went about our work or paused in the midst of it, into our lives, from his simple, glad pure melody, would come stealing, an influence as uplifting, gentle, and refreshing as dew-fall to thirsty grasses.

The aged Venetian singer shown in our illustration, is delighting his simple audience with some old song of the days of chivalry. His apparent poverty shows that street minstrelsy in Venice is not a lucrative profession, and he might well sing, as did the old Scandinavian harper to the elf-king:

> The lot of the minstrel,
> O master, is hard:
> The world is no longer
> The place for a bard;
> For sorrow and poverty
> Are my reward.

In many parts of the world, however, street singing has been turned to good account in helping the world. Missions are waking up more and more to the value of song services for drawing to Christ the little ones of the slums. Prominent preachers are publicly urging more and more the importance of intelligent congregational singing. In home life, there is nothing like the piano and Gospel song-books for holding brothers and sisters together in the happy chorals of evenings well spent. In Biblical times, the gifts of minstrelsy and prophecy were closely associated. In one instance, before Elisha could deliver a prophecy, the influence of a minstrel was needed. We know of David's harp and the value of its ministry to Saul.

A STROLLING MUSICIAN IN THE STREETS OF VENICE.

One Woman's Busy Lot.

There are countless numbers of women whose lives are a ceaseless round of labor for others. One of these writes us from Buckland, O., a letter from which we make this extract.

Hidden away here in the "oil fields," not having been outside our own domain for eighteen months, confined to the nurse's department six months with a precious mother, aged 78, and sick. I jot thoughts for recreation for her, illustrate shells in oil colors, accompanying same with little poems for babydom and holidays; Pa an invalid; such is life. I am cook, housekeeper, nurse, secretary, and what-not—not the kind that "hangs on the wall," but double-propelled, perpetual motion in circumlocution. For a change, the artist's brush and an original snatch of rhyme makes on a muscle shell some little bright heart gladder, or a sad heart lighter. Ma enjoys the forgetfulness of pain in the little bit of ingenuity.

A busy, brave little woman this! There are thousands like her spending their lives for others.

A Sioux Mother's Cares.

Writing of her experiences in Indian homes, Alice M. Fletcher gives an incident:

While among the Sioux, a mother with a good-sized family of boys and girls, asked the question whether white women did not find their daughters more trouble than their sons. "Look at those girls," said she; "I have their clothes to make, their hair to braid, and to see that they learn how to behave. Now, my boys are no trouble." As I glanced at the glossy braids of the girls falling over their single smock, and the boys naked but for the breechclout, I recognized the kinship of maternal perplexities the world over.

Kindergarten Studies.

Many young people write us inquiring as to the requirements for kindergarten training. These requirements are much more strict than formerly. An authority states: It became necessary to make them so, since so many young women entered the training classes who were unfit for the profession. The course, which was formerly completed in one year, now covers two, and it is by no means easy work. The applicant for admission must be a graduate from a high school, or its equivalent in a good seminary, and, besides this, it is to her advantage if she is also a graduate from a Normal School. If, after she has studied a while, the trainer finds that the pupil is lacking in the other requisities, such as tact, love for children, patience and the peculiar quality, which gains and holds the attention, she quietly advises her to seek some other field of labor, since she cannot be successful in this. It is also necessary that she be musical, able to sing well enough to teach the singing games which are such a feature in kindergarten work.

Wealth and Soul Poverty.

Most men surely do not think how little mere money can do for one who has been its worshiper and has devoted himself to its accumulation, writes Abby Morton Diaz, in Success, the new illustrated monthly magazine. Were he to retire from business, it is too often the case that the loss of the excitement of the money-game and the relinquishment of long-accustomed pursuits leave a dreary blank. The faculties chiefly brought into exercise have no further use; the higher ones are useless from want of use. His money can buy a whole library of standard books, but not a comprehension of them; so that their contents are to him as sealed treasures. His mind, so long restricted to the narrow limits of business demands, cannot at will expand itself through the broad domains of thought, much less respond to grand ideals. Without artistic culture, he has but money to aid him in the selection of costly paintings, while his enjoyment of them must be chiefly that of possession. His millions spent in the appointments of a splendid mansion cannot ensure good taste or harmony. And when, at last, our money devotee leaves this visible world and his cherished millions, what has he to take with him but soul and poverty? He is but an impoverished actor, who, when the play is over, lays off the gorgeous stage-robings and passes out in undisguised destitution.

A Beautiful Experiment.

Mr. W. S. Duncan, Superintendent of a country Sunday School at Stonington, Ill., writes us: "I have often felt the necessity of more money to purchase help, etc., for the school. I concluded to lend twelve little boys and girls a dime apiece, for six months, they to purchase, plant and reap whatever they had a mind to, and turn the increase into the treasury of the Sunday School. Some planted potatoes, onions, etc, some had a setting of goose or hen's eggs. At the end of six months, all made their returns promptly, and we found a net gain of $17.92. I would say to others, go and do likewise."

BE TENDER TO THOSE WHO ARE OLD.

LET us ever be tender to those who are past
The glory and joy of their prime;
Whose strength and whose vision are weakening fast
'Neath the shadowing touches of time.
O fondly they dream of the days that are gone,
The friends and the pleasures of yore,
Or the land where their footsteps are hastening on,
Where dear ones have gathered before.

Let us ever be tender to those who are old,
For once they were happy and young;
And when the bright future before them unrolled,
They merrily frolicked and sung.
With strength and with hopefulness life was enjoyed,
And gaily they went on their ways,
Undreaming of hopes to be baffled—destroyed;
Undreaming of sorrowful days.

The years are fast speeding, O soon will be gone,
The aged ones with us to-day;
Their feet are approaching eternity's dawn,
Make haste to be kind while we may.
Be kind—as we'd hope lor the young to be kind,
If we too were feeble and old;
Be kind till the heavenly city they find
Abounding with glories untold.

Oberlin, Ohio. MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

January Rose Gardens.

FOR those readers who are now feeling the keen winds of the northern winter, this letter from Mrs. A. A. Ward, of Beaumont, Texas, will have a pleasant interest:—

How delightful all nature seems here at this time, with our gardens full of Southern roses and the air filled with sweet fragrance, the sun giving forth its warm light, and the foliage showing no frosted tint. Bananas, with their pale green leaves, aid the tropical view, and the first strawberries are reported. Everybody here calls everybody else "cousin," and the married ladies, who are not "kinfolks," are called "Miss Sally," or "Miss Mary," instead of "Mrs. Black," or "Mrs. Grey." So you see they are a friendly people. No sleighing with jingling bell, no skating or snow, no sealskins, fur caps, or heavy overcoats, no cheerful fires needed in great fireplaces. Winter is different in the Southland. Southern people make much of Christmas in their homes. They have the beautiful holly trees, with their bright red berries in their parlors. Those trees are brought from the forest nearby, as well as the great bunches of mistletoe. Spanish moss, palmettoes, magnolia, and other evergreens, which all can have with which to decorate their homes. The week before Christmas is given up to the baking of most delicious cakes. These are sliced and sent to friends with good will. The negroes here have their gala day on the 19th of June, "'Mancipation," or "Nineteen Day," as they happily call it, which lasts a full week of feasting on chicken, watermelon, and a grand barbecue, provided by their employers. Emigration is flowing in from the North and foreign lands, and many of the beautiful customs of the old South, now live in memory only.

Dangers of Idleness.

From idleness springs most drinking habits. It is the direct cause of nine-tenths of the gossip and slander that disturb and divide neighborhoods. Jealousy envy, hatred, are the sure results of idleness and pampered luxury. How sadly the rich suffer, observes a writer in the Epworth Herald. Permitting their children to follow their natural inclination to idleness, they have allowed to develop unchecked a whole nest of vipers which not even curfew bells will overcome. To quote again from Burton: "As in a standing pool, worms and filthy creepers increase, so do evil and corrupt thoughts in an idle person; the soul is contaminated." John Wesley's words on this subject should become a motto for parents, and young people everywhere: "Never be unemployed; never be triflingly employed."

INDIA'S MESSAGE OF THANKS.

The Orphans of Vevasarpaudy Grateful for Aid in Time of Famine.

ON his return from India, Dr. R. G. Hobbs brought from Madras, whither he went on the City of Everett, an interesting document in the native language. It is written on parchment and is a marvel of delicate penmanship. Translated, we find it really a message to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which Dr. Klopsch is requested to deliver to them. We print the translation in the adjoining columns with a fac simile of some of the signatures. This acknowledgment is all the more notable, because the persons signing it were not beneficiaries of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund, but hearing of it, were deeply touched by the kindness of the donors of the magnificent gift of corn and money to their starving fellow-countrymen, and desired to express their thanks. Dr. Rudisill and Mr. Miles as the American agents of the publishing house and managers of the Orphan Home, personally signed the testimonial with the native workers, and at a formal meeting handed it to Dr. Hobbs to be delivered to Dr. Klopsch in New York. We are sure that our readers will be glad to see how sincerely their gifts were appreciated, and how clearly these native Christians understand the motives which prompted the beneficence.

A TYPICAL HINDOO.

The publishing house from which the testimonial comes originated in the work of Dr. A. W. Rudisill, who went from the Baltimore Conference in 1884 as a missionary to India. He took with him a little printing press, the gift of his father, which was large enough to print only a page six inches long and four wide. One day Dr. Rudisill set up in type John 3:16 in Tamil characters, and after a little prayer meeting, at which he and his wife, their son and a native Christian prayed for a blessing on the effort, the first impression was pulled. A large number of these small pages having been printed and circulated, their usefulness was soon demonstrated, and Dr. Rudisill began to agitate for a full-fledged printing establishment. Contributions came in from people who realized how much help such an institution would render to missionary work in India, and by the end of 1886 enough money was on hand to set up a press and the necessary type, etc., in the mission-house. Since that time the work done by the press has been of incalculable value. It has sent its silent messengers far and wide and has supplemented missionary effort in many ways. As our readers may remember, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some time ago invited contributions for the development of this useful agency. The mission-house now has a much larger press, and has added to its departments an electrotyping room, a bindery and a photo-engraving plant. There are now employees who can set type in nearly all the languages spoken in India, and the presses are kept constantly busy printing the glad tidings of salvation to be sent far and wide. It was from these employees and from the orphans in the mission-house that the tribute printed on this page came. Henceforth our readers will feel a personal bond of friendship with these native Christians, and we trust that the correspondence thus opened will lead to a mutual interest in them, and that in their prayers our readers will remember the brothers whose names have come to them across the seas.

In a later report from Bishop Thoburn last week he writes: "It is a wonderful relief to feel that the famine is practically over. Harvests in many districts are very plentiful and the people look hopeful once more. But it will be many long years before the traces of this awful visitation will wholly disappear from the country." Bishop Thoburn is deeply concerned about the condition of the orphans in the various mission houses whose support will devolve upon the missionaries when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund is exhausted. The Methodist missionaries alone have over two thousand of these little waifs whom they are longing to keep and educate for Christ. As it costs about fifteen dollars a year to suitably support, clothe, and educate each orphan, even on the most economical system, it will easily be seen how large a sum will be needed during the next four or five years. It is unfortunate that just now most of the missionary societies are reducing their appropriations, being reluctantly compelled by the reduction in their own receipts to take this step. We sincerely hope that in some way God will make provision for these poor children, so that they may not have to go back to heathenism, but will be trained up to go into the village homes of India carrying with them the transforming message of the Cross.

It is gratifying to learn that from among these rescued children, the older ones are already making profession of Christ. The Bombay Guardian just received, contains the following report of a remarkable time of blessing:

"Commencing on December 12 and lasting until December 21, a most interesting camp-meeting was held on Pandita Ramabai's farm at Khedgaon. It was attended by about four hundred young people, including all those from Ramabai's establishments at Poona and Khedgaon and by some of the elder boys and girls from Mrs. Bruere's famine orphanages at Poona and Telegaon. Rev. W. T. Bruere, Miss Abrams, Rev. and Mrs. J. O. Fox, of the M. E. Mission, Rev. W. and Mrs. Franklin, of the Alliance Mission, Miss Hattie Bruce, of Satara, Rev. D. G. and Mrs Malhar, of the F. C. Mission, and other Indian workers were present during a part of the time and helped to conduct the proceedings. The results were that many of these young people sought salvation and others the gift of the Holy Spirit.

"On Sunday last a church was organized. In the evening, ten minute addresses were given, after which 200 testified to salvation.

"On the last day, Tuesday, an excursion was made to the Beema river in twelve country carts, and baptism given to seventy-one young converts. Of these fifty were boys from Poona, thirty were girls from Telegaon, and twenty-six from Ramabai's flock. This makes 250 of the last baptized during the past two months. In the evening of the same day, one who was there writes, "We assembled at the Lord's Table, after which we marched in double lines all about this our Zion. We were bidden to 'walk about Zion and go round about her, tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces that ye may tell it to the generation following.' Our lines seemed almost interminable as we encompassed Zion with songs of rejoicing. We could not sing together but we sang, and could hardly stop singing when we gathered once more in the audience hall. Over and over again the children sang their choruses, leading off anew when we supposed they were ready to stop. Shouts of 'Yisu Masiha jai' filled the air. Truly as we had been reminded on Sunday night, 'The Lord gave the word; great was the company of those [women] that published it.'"

Dr. J. S. Timpany, Baptist Missionary at Kazipati in the Deccan writes: "The remittance sent to me at the crisis of the suffering enabled me to help our people in many ways. I started relief works, and for a long time had as many as 250 working. I also in special cases, gave relief to people too weak to work. They have been sad sights that we have seen in India during this time of sorrow, and suffering, and death.

Rev. W. B. Boggs, another Baptist missionary, whose station is at Secunderabad, writes that he was able with the money sent to him to have two wells dug, to give various sums to a number of sick and infirm people who were unable to work, and send help to other missionaries who were in pressing need of help. Mr. Boggs says: "The beneficence of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has without doubt saved very many lives and relieved a vast amount of distress. Spiritual blessings are following the famine in various places, and we are all praying for the awakening of India."

INDIA'S DEEP GRATITUDE.

THE ORPHAN HOME,
VEVASARPAUDY, MADRAS.

To Dr. Louis Klopsch, Proprietor of "The Christian Herald," and Rev. R. G. Hobbs, D.D., "The Christian Herald's" Famine Commissioner:

DEAR SIRS:

[Here follows the document in the native language, of which the following is a translation.]

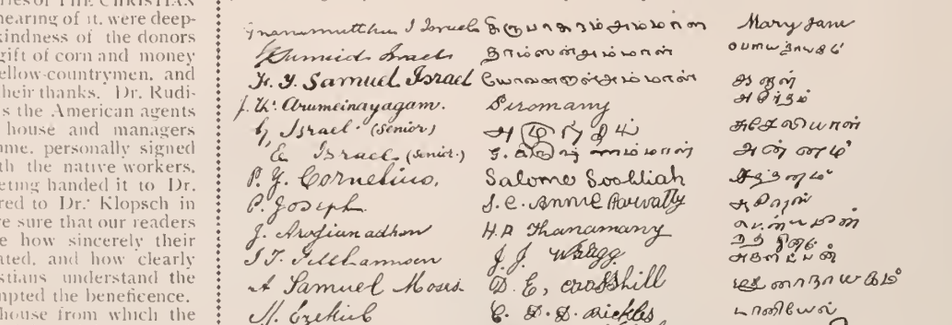
[TRANSLATION.]

We, the undersigned, workers, orphans, and scholars of the Madras Tamil Mission, have been impressed with the love and generosity of the people of Great Britain and Ireland in contributing such large sums of money for the relief of the famine-stricken millions of India.

But we feel profoundly touched with that love which has prompted you to raise in America such an enormous quantity of grain and a magnificent sum of money to feed the hungry in a foreign land like India. What a glorious calling to be Ambassadors of the Lord Jesus Christ and the great American, nation in bringing to our shores a steamer-load of grain!

Realizing, as we do, the privations and hardships of India's poor, and the comforts your cargo of grain will bring to thousands of helpless women and famishing children, we feel we cannot let you leave Madras without thanking you heartily for this labor of love, and assure you that God will perform to you personally: (Hosea 14:5-6.)

Will you kindly remind the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and your fellow-citizens in America that by feeding India's hungry millions they shall have the satisfaction of having fed Jesus himself. (Matt. 25:35.) If a cup of cold water given in Christ's name will not lose its reward, will not God perform to them (Malachai 3:10)? We are, dear sirs, yours in Jesus.



* * * * * *

To Louis Klopsch, Esq., Proprietor "The Christian Herald":

DEAR SIR:—The Methodist Episcopal Publishing House, Madras, India, send you greetings. Although Providence has, in undeserved mercy, preserved our beautiful city from dire calamities, our hearts bleed because large portions of India suffer from famine, pestilence and earthquake.

We, therefore, the undersigned establishment of the Methodist Episcopal Publishing House, Madras, India, hail with joy the arrival in our harbor of The Christian Herald Ship flying The Christian Herald Flag. As we look into her now empty store-rooms and reflect that they came filled with food for India's starving millions, we are overcome with amazement and gratitude at the wealth of love that prompted you to come so grandly to the help of this stricken land.

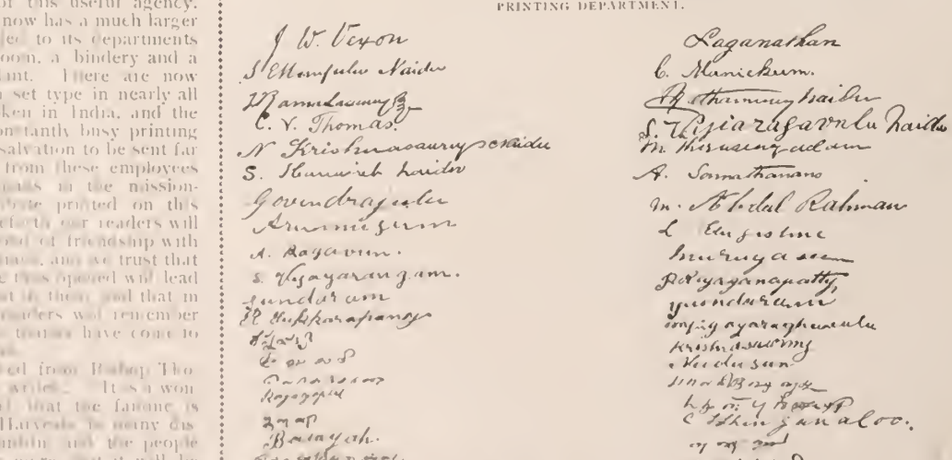
The Agent of this Press, with a full heart, is also mindful of the fact that the columns of The Christian Herald were thrown open a few years ago to aid the then mere beginning of what is now a many-sided and extensive Publishing House, which we dare hope, through God's blessing, may be made a power for good in India, as is The Christian Herald in America and other lands. The God of peace be with you.

We are, dear sir, yours cordially,

Madras, India.

A. W. RUDISILL, Agent.
W. MILES, Assistant to Agent.

PRINTING DEPARTMENT.



The second testimonial is also signed by a number of Tamil, Telegu, Canarese, Hindustani and American employes in the binding, envelope, booklet, electrotyping, engraving, and other departments of the great Madras Publishing House.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Pioneer Housewife—Bringing Up Baby by Rule—Scolding—A Vexatious "Party"—"Looking Through Heaven's Windows."

FROM a friend whose home is at the other side of the continent, a beautiful letter came to me one white, wintry day. She says, "Your story of Seraphine, in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of ecember 8th, excited my sympathy, pity, d admiration.

"I have seen a funeral which had not ch more of a following than that of raphine's little child. A little coffin has en made in our woodhouse on a Sabth day, and I have helped to trim it y simply with my own hands."

This dear lady went from a thickly setd portion of the east to make a home the newer land where she now lives. A scription of her house is so interesting t I must quote a bit of it. She says: "When I came, the little house in which live was nothing but pine boards, put perpendicularly. My husband, who eeded me, had pulled off the newspers with which the house had origlly been papered, and had thoroughly itewashed it, to insure its being clean d healthful.

"I arrived fortunately in the very height warm weather, so that I could take my e in getting settled. I planned, and ntrived, and tried experiments at my sure.

"First, I tacked strips of muslin over e seams where the boards met. Over s again I tacked one hundred and enty-five yards of four cent unbleached tton as tightly as possible. Over this ain I fastened wall paper and finished th a thin ceiling of pine. The transforation after a very little carpenter work s done was very marked, as you may e when I tell you that almost all my ighbors live in shanties of oak boards, t perpendicularly, with just a hole cut rough the roof for a stove-pipe. Many the houses have broad apertures beeen the boards, through which drives e wind or the rain. Often, there are no ndows, and the door must be opened to lmit light, or a lamp is used in the dayne. Around us, too, are many people ho are simply living in wagons on the ad, camping at night, going to and fro, ith no certain destination."

I am sure that a lady who has the engy my correspondent shows herself to ve, and who has also so much taste, will e most helpful to her friends and acaintances. Perhaps she is able to do me real Christian work among them, ying a kind word to the discouraged d cheering up the lonely. I think nody deserves more credit or more praise, an women who live the hard life of the oneer in the new settlements of our agnificent Western country. They are se the soldier who "endures hardness" r his flag. And, dear sisters, do not ind if much of your service is obscure d unrecognized. God sees it, and God ves you, and God will take care, in his wn good time, that every one of us who rves, whether "in the highlands or the wlands," will get a soldier's pay.

YES, my sweet young mother, bringing e baby up by rule is the modern way.—ursing him by the clock, putting him to eep without rocking, accustoming him to bedience from the first,—and the modern ay is good, with certain reservations. ever let baby scream himself into fits hile you pace the floor in another room, ringing your hands, and virtuously feelg that your agony is in a good cause. It not well to allow any child of tender ge to cry and sob itself to sleep. I had y spell of baby-tending so long ago that ou young mothers laugh at my notions, ut I used to take great comfort holding e baby and singing to him, and lying own beside him till he dropped off to umber. My little blue-eyed grand-daughter asked me the other day whether the ngels were "flapping their wings" over er head when she went to bed every ight. I said, "Dearie, the angels are very apt to be there, though I don't know about their wings."

* * *

I WISH I could impress you, friend Bessie, without hurting your feelings, and could keep you from ever scolding your children again. Scold is very much like scald: it blisters the soul, as the latter blisters the body. When I hear a small child fretting, screaming, and speaking querulously; when I observe a little lad or lass in a passion, I do not need to be told where such manners are learned. The baby is a creature of imitation. Your small darling repeats you in the home now, to society after awhile. Never scold the baby.

YOUR vexation, Mrs. H. R. C., was most natural in the circumstances you describe, and you have my sympathy. Just as the house was being locked up for the night, when the fires were banked, and most of the lights out, a party of friends arrived at Mrs. C.'s home. They had not sent her word that they were coming, for they thought it would be fun to take her by surprise. But for an accident to the train which caused a three hours' delay, they would have reached their destination about tea-time. This, Mrs. C. would have minded less. Still, she does not fancy surprises of the kind, and, to put it plainly, few housekeepers do thoroughly enjoy them. One likes to make her arrangements, to have the beds freshly made, the towels and soap-dish in order, the best china, perhaps, on the table, and some little delicacy added to the ordinary bill of fare. To have the children's faces and hands clean, and to put on your own best bib and tucker are comforting adjuncts to the coming of guests.

Mrs. C— is a woman of resources, and she contrived to entertain her visitors most hospitably, inopportune as was their appearance on the scene. Yet, a child might have had scarlet fever or the mumps, or the good man might have been down with the lumbago, the carpets have been up for cleaning, or the kitchen range on a strike. Surprises are as often ill-timed as well-timed, and as a rule they are a mistake.

And yet, dear heart, why bother so much over what was, after all, a trifle in the great sum of events? You worried yourself into a sick headache over it, you were cross with the family, you were out of sorts with yourself, and you havn't felt right since, because you are afraid that the B's and Miss R. John's relations, not your own, you are sorry to say, thought you were a poor manager, and did not fully enjoy their visit. Why bother? Take life less strenuously. Every needless worry will leave its trace upon your forehead. Do not carry any loads which you may as well leave among the rubbish heaps by the road. Try, dear correspondent, to be easy in your mind, and forget all about this bother.

The darling child had lost his mother. She had gone to heaven, and the little one was tenderly cared for by an auntie. One bright day, auntie, bundled him up, and sent him out to play. Pretty soon she went to the door to see if he was all right. The child was not playing. He was looking up, up, up into the blue sky, looking eagerly and wistfully.

"What are you doing, Robbie?" said aunty.

"Looting up to see if mamma's peeping down at me froo the tlouds," he answered. "Mamma always used to watch me out the window when I went out to play, and I fink she's watching me out of the windows in heaven now."

And I am sure she was.

THE HOWARD OF JAPAN.

How a Pastor Sheltered Released Convicts in Tokio and Helped Them to Reform.

By Rev. J. W Wadman.

IT may interest the readers of The Christian Herald to know something of a beautiful, Christ-like work which Mr. Hara, a Christian minister of this populous city of Tokio, has been doing for some time past. He was formerly a kind of chaplain for the prisons of the Hokkaido where about seven thousand convicts are kept. The Hokkaido is a large island belonging to Japan which, owing to its sterility and cold climate, was very sparsely populated. The Goverment, foreseeing the need of providing some outlet for the dense population of the mainland, decided, sixteen years ago, to encourage emigration to the Hokkaido, by cutting down the forests, making roads, and preparing lands for cultivation. It built five great prisons on the island, to which it sent long-term convicts, who were employed on these public works. Among these men Mr. Hara labored, preaching to them the Gospel of Christ. Last Spring, upon the death of the Empress Dowager, the Emperor issued an imperial decree, setting several hundreds of Hokkaido convicts at liberty.

Mr. Hara was at this time living in Tokio, and these men slowly finding their way back to the capital, came at once in large numbers to call upon him for his help and sympathy. His heart was deeply touched. He put aside his own work, and feeling that God was calling him to the succor of these helpless men, he began to look around for some place of shelter and some means of livelihood. His own home was already full with his eight children and three ex-convicts for whom he was caring; there was no room for more. Providentially, while a new boarding-house was in process of erection, the Kanda Methodist Episcopal Church was at this time housed in a large old daimyo residence, many rooms of which were not in use. The pastor offered this building to Mr. Hara. "Here," he says, "I boarded eighty to a hundred ex-convicts, who were gladly welcomed and warmly treated.

"But true philanthropy does not consist in this alone. I began to search work for these men. This was very difficult at first. People laughed at me. I was called a fool, a dangerous man, harboring convicts. No one would employ such despised fellows. For many days I despaired. At last a few got work. Then others found employment. They proved faithful. Day after day I would read the Bible to them, and pray with them. Some missionaries and pastors helped me.

"On the Sabbath we had a special service for them. At last a few were baptized. This was a happy day for me. Then others believed, and a great change took place. Mrs. Hara taught many of them to read, so that they could understand the New Testament. Those who could not read would try to remember the truth by some symbol, so they put the sign of the cross on their sleeves. Gradually, as their hearts and lives became changed, it was easy to find work for them and as soon as they found work they were able to earn their own living. Twenty of these men are still domiciled on me. On the other hand, a few have found the way home to their relatives and friends, among whom they live clean and respected lives. Many touching stories have come to my notice in connection with the return of some of these ex-convicts to their loved ones.

"One of these is the story of Jungoro Kimbara. This young man's father died when he was quite young and he was brought up by his mother. Overcome by bad associations he ran away from home when he was ten years old. His life was literally a succession of crimes, for he actually grew up in prison. In the Emperor's Coronation amnesty, and for some time lived peaceably under my care. One day he went on to God, he went to come near with respect to the old mother, but he did not know how to find her. The three days he fasted and prayed earnestly for guidance. Then he began his search, which was beset with many difficulties, for he could get no one to tell the exact location of his birthplace in a large city like Tokio. One day, however, engaged in this long search, he found his way to a thickly settled street in Nihonbashi Ku, and while walking along he accidentally saw an old woman whose head was covered with gray hairs and her body with rags. He felt sure that he recognized her.

"Moved by a sudden impulse, he ran up to her and spoke, but she was deaf, and her eyes were so weak that she did not recognize him. Then he spoke again loudly and said, 'Dear mother!' The old woman stopped and asked, 'Who are you?' 'I am Ju.' By his voice she recognized her boy. 'Are you Ju?' she cried, and in that moment her arms were thrown around his neck, and they clasped each other in great emotion. There they stood, weeping and rejoicing, not knowing what to do. For a time they talked about the past, and then the old woman, learning that it was the Christian religion which brought her lost son back to her, began to repent of her past sins, and with a tender heart sought and found the pardoning Christ. Coming to my home with her son, she was baptized and joined our Christian circle."

The following statistics will show what Mr. Hara has been doing during the six months, January to June, 1897. Of the 262 prisoners whom he has helped, 55 are still in his own home, 17 have returned to their relatives in the country, 25 to their relatives in the city, 14 are in regular work in the city, 22 have started homes of their own, 127 have gone into the country and found employment, and two have died. Over the 108 now living in Tokyo, Mr. Hara keeps direct supervision, making calls upon them as often as he can, and instructing them still further in the truths of Christianity. To those living in the country he frequently writes letters and sends them tracts and other religious pamphlets.

This great work has been accomplished largely as a work of faith. Mr. and Mrs. Hara have made great sacrifices, and their friends, including missionaries and Japanese Christians, have co-operated with them in forwarding this noble enterprise.

Up to the present time the Government has very kindly recognized Mr. Hara's work, and offered him help in every way in the matter of finding suitable employment for the convicts as well as searching for their relatives and friends. No financial aid has been given, but Mr. Hara is very thankful for the kindly sympathy of the leading statesmen of Japan.

Any kind friend, who upon reading this, feels moved with sympathy towards Mr. Hara and his reform work in Japan, and who feels like contributing towards its support, may be assured that any little donation or help of any kind whatsoever, will be greatly appreciated.

Only mothers know how intense is the suffering of infants from chafing.

The loving sympathy of some mothers has caused them to notice that a closely woven material washed with common soaps retains enough of the rosin and other ingredients to make it stiff and irritating.

Cures of severe cases of chafing have been accomplished by having the baby's cloths washed only with Ivory Soap. The soap is so pure and the lather so light that it rinses readily, leaving them soft and non-irritating.

THE CALL TO SERVICE.

ovidential Indications of the Sphere in Which the Young Convert Is Called to Work (Isa., 6: 1-8. Mark, 1: 10-20).

WHEN a person responds to Christ's offer of salvation and places himself in his hands for development and deliverance from the power of sin, he is also enlisted for service. Every man no bears the name of of Christian, is expected to serve Christ. He must not be ntent with his own salvation, nor his vn growth in grace, but must seek the iritual welfare of others. So much is pected of him, and he is warned that e branch that beareth not fruit will be ken away. The question then arises at e outset of the Christian career of what rm this service shall take. This is alays a difficult question, and the mode in hich it is dealt with involves the issues life. The prayer that should be on the ung convert's lips until the question is ecided should be, "Lord, what wilt thou ve me to do?" How often has the ung convert wished that he could have e Master's own voice summoning him, he called his disciples in his life on rth! That may not be, but he is not sually left in the dark without guidance. he is ready to serve Christ in any capacity, if he has placed himself without reserve in Christ's hands to be used as the ord may have need, he will not be idle ng. He will do well to resolutely close s eyes to the results of any particular nd of work, and to the honors that come workers in a particular sphere. It is ot of himself or of his own advantage at he should be thinking, but of Christ's use. Has he any special talent that ill make him an efficient worker? Is ere any mental or spiritual power in m that he can consecrate to Christ's rvice? Then there are other questions, hich may help him to get light: Is ere any field near him that he could elp to cultivate? Is there some work ear him that needs doing and that he n do? Are there among his acquainnces any unconverted persons who will sten to an earnest appeal from him? Is ere some poor Christian in circumances of sorrow, suffering or bereaveent, to whom he can speak a word of mpathy? Are there some neglected ildren whom he can gather together and ach in Christ's name? These are humle forms of service, but Christ recognizes em and rejoices to see them performed r love of him. Perhaps in doing them e call may come to greater service, to a ore honorable vocation, or it may not me at all. What matters it if we are nly serving to the best of our ability? etter that we remain humble and unnown than that we thrust ourselves forard, uncalled, and discover that we have ndertaken work that we are unable to erform.

Sorrowing Mothers.

At the close of a dinner recently given n Cartersville, Ga., Sam. Jones, the well-nown evangelist, made an address especially designed for the young men of that ection. He said, among other things:

There is nothing I wish more than to see ach one of you happy and successful in life. ou are all bright young men, and can make r yourselves a future if you will but try.

I will tell you my ideal of the greatest and est young man. He is one who never steps pon his mother's bleeding heart. He is one ho loves and obeys her, and who would yield is life before he would cause her pain. I ave asked you here to-day so that I might be ith you and tell you these things. Boys, I ant to tell you three things you should not o. You should not drink. Drink has dragged own the best of our land, and I grieve to say hat so many of our young men are in the rasp of this terrible appetite. Twenty-five ears ago I lived in a little cottage up on onder hill, and nearly every night I would go ome to my wife drunk. With tears in her yes, she would beg me not to do so again, and would promise, but that very night I would o home drunker than before. But it wasn't ny fault. I wasn't a hypocrite. I meant it hen I promised, but I wasn't strong enough. But, thank God, boys, I won at last. I quit rink, and for nearly twenty-six years I have ot tasted a drop. But I will not feel secure rom a drunkard's grave until my wife has issed my cheeks cold in death. I am afraid f it yet. You should all be afraid of it. on't drink, boys. Every drop you take eans misery for your poor mothers, and it s but one step nearer ruin.

A New Form of Personalities

The old style of portraying famous people through a "sketch" or "biography" is to be modernized in THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL during 1898. Five of the most prominent Americans have been chosen for the departure: President McKinley, Mrs. Cleveland, Mark Twain, Joseph Jefferson, and Thomas A. Edison. Each will have a special article, which will consist of about fifteen or twenty fresh, unpublished stories and anecdotes strung together, each anecdote showing some characteristic trait or presenting a different side of the subject.

MANY OTHER NEW FEATURES FOR 1898. $1.00 PER YEAR

For 25 cents we will send The Ladies' Home Journal on trial for three months

ALSO, a handsome illustrated booklet containing our Prospectus for 1898, with portraits of famous writers and small reproductions of some of the illustrations that are to appear in the Journal in future numbers.

Another Persian Martyr.

A Helpless Christian Cruelly Slain by Fanatical Moslems Near Urmi.

ONE more humble martyr has fallen in Persia, where so many have yielded up their lives for the Cross. The following extract from a letter which has been sent to us by Mr. Paul Shimmon, a young Persian student in New York, gives a graphic account of the deplorable circumstances attending the latest murder.

MALEK YONAN.

in his country, of a hapless Christian. The letter is from a most reliable source, its author being Rev. Arthur R. Edington, head of the English Mission in Urmi, Persia. It is dated Dec. 10, 1897.

"Three drunken Mussulmans went to Guktapeh, a village near Urmi, broke into a man's wine cellar and became more drunken. Rev Mr. George, the Syrian priest, thinking to rid the village of them, set them on the way home; they began to quarrel: the priest ran home: the villagers turned out, hearing a disturbance; shots were fired by the Mussulmans, who returned to Guktapeh. Riot appearing imminent, they were imprisoned by order of Mirza David, the Nimbashir (contractor) of the village. One Mussulman got away, and, being miserably drunk, died before reaching the city. When the other Mussulmans were brought from Guktapeh into the city, next morning, to answer for their conduct, the mob was greatly enraged, and the Governor, yielding to its temper, had many Guktapeh people arrested, charging them with the Mussulman's death. Malim David rushed into my room and told me that they were leading out David, the Shah's coachman of the Surajeh Sultaneh (the master of Guktapeh) for instant execution. I went to the American Mission to see if Dr. Cochran could go with me to the Governor. He was at the College but I heard that the French Mission had obtained the delay of the execution for two hours. Dr Cochran joined me in a message to the Serapest for a stay of proceedings until examination of evidence. Before our messenger reached Serapest the man was executed by having his throat cut. He died, refusing to give up his faith for that of Mohammed.

"Our efforts [illegible] to save Guktapeh. The Governor sent thirty [illegible] and they were doing great [illegible] to him, but he promised to send them. Next day, Sunday, I went to Guktapeh to preach and to baptize into the confession of faith. On my return the French Superior and the head of the American Mission prepared with me a report to our Consul General in Tabriz and [illegible] off that night. In answer a telegram came from Tabriz saying no blood-money was to be taken from Guktapeh. Every people per [illegible] Governor and magistrate. Three men had already taken our families and eight native Christians from Guktapeh and the mamurs [illegible] told me that [illegible] six hundred more [illegible] Mirza David, [illegible] under arrest, was for [illegible] the house of a Mushtahid (Moslem priest). The [illegible] reading his instant execution. Today another telegram states that no money is to be taken whatever, and that the people of Guktapeh are not to be annoyed by the mamurs. But I do not know what will be done. The Governor has taken his present, and it will be difficult to make him surrender it. The mamurs have outraged women and girls. On Tuesday last I went to Guktapeh with the French Superior and put up with Malek Yonan (Mirza David's father). We impressed upon him the necessity of sending us an immediate statement of the losses sustained by the village. The Surajeh Sultaneh, the village master of Guktapeh, is on a pilgrimage, and cannot see after his own village. All the Hawana sheep have been carried off by Derenas (Turkish) Kurds. Of these two thousand sheep, about four hundred lean and miserable ones were recovered by the people of Manawa—being too weak to be driven far by the Kurds. Sambar and many Hawana men came down, but it is now a matter of three weeks, and they can get no answer whatever from the Governor. The Governor is doing nothing, because Hawana is a village of the Surajeh Sultaneh."

Christianity in Japan.

Notwithstanding the opposition of the Samurai class, Protestantism makes favorable progress in Japan. The various Protestant denominations have now twelve theological seminaries, with one hundred and sixty-three students; twenty-nine boys' schools, with 1,980 students; ten women's training schools, with two hundred and thirty-eight students; forty-six girls' schools, with 2,491 students; fourteen kindergartens, with five hundred and twenty-six pupils; fifty-six day or night schools, with 2,788 students; ten orphan asylums, with 664 inmates.

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant Simple, but Safe effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable.

The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs and difficult breathing; headache, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has a time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach.

To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr Harlanson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet, composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and acids.

These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and, not being a patent medicine, can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: Catarrh is a local condition resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom, passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure, but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, quickest as well as the simplest and most successful remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn, and bloating after meals.

Send for free book, mailed free, on stomach troubles by addressing Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

UNFAILING PROMISES.

He and Support Provided in God's Word. Cor. 1: 20; II. Peter 1: 4; I. John 25.

How extensive a treasury the Bible is cannot be fully realized until we have begun to draw upon it. There are no circumstances in our lives, no troubles, no experience of any kind, that have been overlooked in the provision that has been made. In prosperity and in adversity, in joy and in sorrow, in youth and in age, men have gone to the old Book and have found satisfaction for their yearnings. There are times when a promise seemed to have no application to our need, but later, in new conditions, that promise has come like water to a thirsty soul. Bunyan speaks the experience of many a Christian when he describes his heroes shut up in Doubting Castle, belabored by Giant Despair, reproaching themselves for enduring so much suffering, when all the while they had a key called "promise" which would open any lock in their prison. But, say some, are these promises always fulfilled? It cannot be claimed that they are. There is sometimes only too good reasons for their failure. God does not force his gifts on his children. "Ye have not because ye ask not, or because ye ask amiss," is an explanation of many failures. Another common reason is that there is a lack of faith in the petitioner. Or it may be that there is some wise reason for delaying or withholding fulfilment. It is sometimes better for the child of God that he suffer for a time that he may learn greater caution in his walk, or that his patience may be developed, or that it may prove, as Job did, that he can trust God when the dark clouds of adversity gather, and that it is not because of the reward that he serves God. It is well for us to see about a Christian to see that he can endure trial, and that in the fire he is strengthened and supported. The ways of God's providence are not always made clear to men in this life, but we know that whatsoever God does is done in love and for our eternal welfare.

THE WAY OF LIFE.

How Men in all Ages Have Pleased God and Inherited Eternal Life (Rom. 10:8-13).

Under many forms and figures, the way of life is presented by the New Testament writers and by Christ himself, but in spite of their apparent divergence, there is an essential unity in them all. Paul, too, is anxious to show that the Old Testament writers also are in accord. While vigorously insisting on the Christian's freedom from law, he insists with equal earnestness that beneath the forms and ceremonies of the old dispensation there were, as a foundation, the principles which were fully enunciated in the new dispensation. The righteousness of the law might be a dry, formal, perfunctory matter, but it was not pleasing to God, even in the time before Christ, if it did not proceed from faith and a clean heart. To be right with God it was not necessary to do some extraordinary thing—to undergo penance, to make long pilgrimages, to offer great sacrifices—the way was much nearer home than that; it was in the heart and life. What God desires to see in his children is righteousness, likeness to himself. He would rather see them living clean lives, doing kindnesses to each other, showing love, forbearance, mercy, magnanimity, than see them offering bullocks on his altar. The prophets taught the same lesson, Christ reiterated it with authority of divinity, the Apostles repeated it, but the lesson is still unlearned. Men will attend the mass, will be baptized, will go the Lord's Supper, will shout "Praise the Lord" in revival meetings till they are hoarse, will give large gifts to missions, tithing their property as the Pharisees did, but they will not do the necessary, the one essential thing of living righteous lives. It is all to no purpose Paul tells them: righteousness is the thing God requires: it is the way of life. Then he tells them how they may attain it. There is to be union with Christ. The heart, representing the vital force of our being, must believe in Christ, not as one who lived and died, but as one who has been raised from the dead and is living and reigning now; and the mouth, representing the outward expression of the inner life, must confess Christ.

THE BOOK LOVERS' GUILD,

156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

A Co-operative Association of Book Lovers for Mutual Benefit.

Annual Dues 25 cents (Payable in Stamps).

Members receive:

A CERTIFICATE OF MEMBERSHIP.

This certificate identifies you with one of the great literary movements of this century.

A MONTHLY BULLETIN OF ALL NEW BOOKS AS ISSUED.

How many people in this country are "in touch" with all new books? Not more than a fraction of one per cent. Members are monthly advised of all new books issued in fiction, history, theology, general literature, science, etc.; in fact, receive a complete catalogue of every book published during the month. An invaluable list of reference for the busy general reader, Sunday-school worker, clergyman or professional man.

THE PURCHASE OF BOOKS AND MAGAZINES AT WHOLESALE PRICES.

Owing to the enormous royalties demanded by successful authors, prices of books have steadily increased. The purchase of a copyrighted book in these days means some little self-denial. But Guild members, no matter where they may live, purchase books and magazines at practically wholesale prices. In addition, the enormous membership leads publishers to make it special offers of great value. Not the least interesting feature is that it brings members living in communities remote from the large cities the wide range of selection, at cheapest price, enjoyed by those on the spot.

CATALOGUE OF PUBLISHERS ON REQUEST.

Members merely send in a postal card stating the name of the publisher, and catalogue follows by next mail.

SCARCE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS SOUGHT FOR WITHOUT CHARGE.

How often have we heard the statement: I want a copy of such-and-such a book, but don't know where to get it and what it will cost. Guild members are never bothered in this way.

QUERIES ANSWERED AND ADVICE GIVEN BY EXPERTS.

Many people often say: I would like to take a course of reading on a certain subject, but do not know what to read. The best authorities advise Guild members. Information, also, concerning authors and their works is freely given.

BOOKS IMPORTED ON ORDER.

Members have the resources of the whole world at command. The Guild has correspondents in all the great cities in Europe.

WHY WE WANT YOU TO JOIN.

First, for your own sake, as we will save you money, while forwarding the primary object of the Guild—the further developing of the reading habit on the part of the American people. Second, because every new member strengthens the Guild, enabling it to buy cheaper as it buys quantity, a fixed law of trade, and one by which you benefit. We purpose making our membership number a half million by the end of the current year.

HOW TO JOIN.

Enclose twenty-five cents in stamps, writing your name and address plainly. On receipt of this your certificate of membership will be sent, together with the current issue of the bulletin and members' special order blanks. Add the names of two persons of local repute as reference.

LINCOLN'S CHRISTIANITY.

A Timely Reminiscence Which Proves that the Great War President Was a Sincere Believer.

SOMETIME ago THE CHRISTIAN HERALD printed a brief article on Abraham Lincoln's religious belief. Last week, the following letter was received on the subject:

CAMP POINT, ILL., Jan. 17, '98.

Mr. Editor — On page thirty-three of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Jan. 12, 1898, I think, there is a sketch of Mr. Lincoln which is not quite correct, and as we of the Seventy-third do not like to have that impression go out among the readers of the HERALD, I will ask you to give a place in your paper to an extract of the last reunion, held at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 28, 1897. Respectfully, G. O. POND, Surgeon of 73d Illinois.

The extract is from the remarks of Col. Jacquess at the reunion in question. He said:

The mention of Mr. Lincoln's name recalls to my mind an occurrence that perhaps I ought to mention. I notice that a number of lectures are being delivered recently on Abraham Lincoln. My wife, who has been dead nearly two years, was the only witness of what I am going to state to you as having occurred.

Very soon after my second year's work as a minister in the Illinois Conference, I was sent to Springfield. There were ministers in the Illinois Conference who had been laboring for twenty-five years to get to Springfield, the capital of the State. When the Legislature met, there were a great many people here, and it was thought to be a matter of great glory among the ministers to be sent to Springfield. But I was not pleased with my assignment. I felt my inability to perform the work. I did not know what to do. I simply talked to the Lord about it, however, and told him that unless I had help, I was going to run away. I heard a voice speaking to me, saying: "Fear not," and I understood it perfectly. Now I am coming to the point that I want to make to you. I was standing at the parsonage door one Sunday morning, a beautiful morning in May, when a little boy came up to me and said: "Mr. Lincoln sent me around to see if you are going to preach to-day."

Now, I had met Mr. Lincoln, but I never thought any more of Abe Lincoln than I did of any one else. I said to the boy: "You go back and tell Mr. Lincoln that if he will come to church, he will see whether I am going to preach or not." The little fellow stood working his fingers, and finally said: "Mr. Lincoln told me he would give me a quarter if I would find out whether you are going to preach." I did not want to rob the little fellow of his income, so I told him to tell Mr. Lincoln that I was going to try to preach. I was always ready and willing to accept any assistance that came along, because I felt that anybody could do better than I could. The church happened to be filled that morning. It was a good-sized church, but on that day all the seats were filled. I had chosen for my text the words: "Ye must be born again," and during the course of my sermon I laid particular stress on the word "must." Mr. Lincoln came in the church after the service had commenced, and there being no vacant seats, chairs were put in the altar in front of the pulpit, and Mr. Lincoln and Governor French and wife sat in the altar during the entire service. Mr. Lincoln on my left and Governor French on my right, and I noticed that Mr. Lincoln appeared to be deeply interested in the sermon. A few days after that Sunday, Mr. Lincoln called on me and informed me that he had been greatly impressed with my remarks on Sunday, and that he had come to talk to me further on the matter. I invited him in, and my wife and I talked and prayed with him for hours. Now, I have seen many persons converted; I have seen hundreds brought to Christ, and if ever a person was converted, Abraham Lincoln was converted that night in my house. His wife was a Presbyterian, but from remarks he made to me he could not accept Calvinism. He never joined my church, but I will always believe that since that night Lincoln lived and died a Christian.

Observing the Sun's Eclipse.

Astronomers have lately been active in preparation for the total eclipse of the Sun which took place on January 22. The most successful observations were made at Talasea, by J. W. Maunder and C. T. H. Wales. The sky was perfectly clear and the heat during the middle of the totality equaled that of the full moon. The general shape of the corona was the same as in the eclipses of 1886 and 1896. It extended over two diameters from the sun, its greatest extent being along the sun's equator. Photographs were obtained on a scale of 3 inch to the sun's diameter and also on the scale of 1 inch, to get the coronal extensions. The spectrum of the chromosphere and its prominences was successfully observed with an opera glass fitted with a direct vision prism in one of the eye pieces. Three photographs of the corona were obtained on a scale 7 to inch to the sun's diameter and also on the scale of 1 to inch. Good spectrum photographs were obtained. The spectrum of the flash was obtained with a prismatic camera and a six-inch telescope.

Some Gigantic Dwellings.

It not an uncommon thing for noblemen with picture or sculpture galleries one hundred feet long to find a difficulty in keeping their servants.

Lord Londonderry, says an exchange, has a gigantic house in Wynyard Park, Durham, England, 300 feet long, which is bad enough; but the sculpture gallery, which is 101 feet long by 58 feet high, contains no less than 700 pieces of statuary and 300 paintings. This gallery has to be swept out and dusted every day. Lord Leonfield is the owner of Petworth house, a truly wonderful building, 322 feet long, and containing over 100 rooms, many of them of vast proportions. The Duke of Richmond's house at Goodwood, with its two wings, measures 378 feet, and gives employment to over sixty domestics. There are 125 rooms in Castle Howard, the Earl of Carisle's residence, near Maldon, Yorks. When it was refurnished some years ago, forty suites of new furniture were required. Eaton hall,

NOT FORSAKEN.

I THOUGHT I was forsaken,
But Jesus heard my call
And led me to the Father,
Who loves and cares for all.
Oh! if we all would trust him,
And lay our burdens there,
And ask his help and guidance,
He'd lighten every care.

Our hearts would be less weary,
More hopeful would we be,
And look upon life's bright side,
Instead of misery.
We'll never be forsaken
When trusting God for all,
For he is always listening
To hear his children's call.

Then surely we can trust him,
And turn our hearts his way,
For God will ne'er forsake us,
But with us dwell each day;
That we may call upon him
And his protection ask.
And all his loving service
May never be a task.

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. — Free to all Readers.

All readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

Progress of Medical Science in Lung Diseases.

A little book, published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 55th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Lung Diseases, Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption are fully explained, their differences shown, and their cure by medicated-air inhalations pointed out.

Dr. Hunter was the founder of the practice of treating lungs by direct medicated-air inhalations—the inventor of the first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of lung complaints, and the discoverer of the only germicide which cures consumption by destroying the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs of the patient. His treatment consists of three parts—1st., breathing into the lungs specific germicidal remedies three times a day, by means of his inhaling instruments; 2nd, painting the chest with antiseptic oils which volatilize by the warmth of the body and surround the patient by a zone of medicated air; and 3rd, filling the chamber in which he sleeps with medicated vapors, which soothe the inflamed bronchial tubes and air cells, and keep up a constant curative action on the lungs. All that medical science has yet found out for the relief and cure of lung complaints is embodied in Dr. Hunter's treatment. Patients of the highest intelligence and respectability in all parts of the Union have been cured by and publicly attest its wonderful success. Case I.—A. L. Peer, Esq., of Newark, N. J., was reduced to the last stage of misery and exhaustion by lung disease. His physician and family gave him up as hopeless. His death was looked for from day to day. He had repeated hemorrhages, great difficulty in breathing, and was so terribly emaciated and weak that he could not stand or turn over in bed without assistance. Dr. Hunter's treatment was undertaken after everything else had been tried and failed. It stopped the hemorrhages, cleansed the lungs of great quantities of foul matter, enabled him to breathe freely again, and so built up his flesh and vitality that he now weighs 175 lbs. (a gain of over 40 lbs.), and is strong and well. Those who are afflicted or anxious about their lungs can call upon or write to Mr. Peer, at 19 Washington Street, Newark, N. J., and wish a copy of the book can obtain it free by addressing Dr. Hunter, at 117 West 55th Street, New York City.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

Burpee's Best SEEDS FOR THE MILLION

In the United States, among a population of seventy millions, there are, of course, many who seek for "Bargains" in seeds as well as in other merchandise. In order to show the difference in QUALITY between BURPEE'S and the "Cheap Seeds" so largely advertised, we offer these POPULAR COLLECTIONS, at twenty-five cents each, which give as much for the money, while the quality is the BEST.

It is only by growing these varieties in large areas, and by sacrificing all profit for the sake of introducing BURPEE'S SEEDS to thousands of new customers, that we can afford to make these unequaled offers. The packets are each of full size, and the quality the same as if purchased at regular retail prices.

REGISTERED W.A.B. TRADE MARK

FOR ONE DOLLAR we will mail ALL THE SEEI advertised on this page, and if y mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, give FREE as Premiums one full-si packet each of both the wonderful new Dwarf Sweet Pea, Burpee's PINK Cupi and the magnificent new giant Pansy, President McKinley.

☞ In all, this unequaled offer gives 36 packets for $1.00, which, if pu chased separately, even at our low prices for 1898, would cost $3.65. We gua antee that every purchaser will be more than pleased with this unusual offer, otherwise, the seeds can be returned and we will promptly refund the $1.00.

Burpee's GEM Collection.

Novelties for 1898.

Never before have so many First-class Novelties been introduced in any year.

In VEGETABLES. Besides the long-keeping AUSTRALIAN BROWN ONION, we introduce THREE NEW TOMATOES, each of distinct character, the GOLDEN EAGLE MELON, a new PEPPER from Japan, an unique new American LETTUCE, and offer the wonderful extra early wrinkled GRADUS PEAS at a moderate price.

In FLOWERS. Besides BURPEE'S PINK CUPID, which is sold in our original sealed packets all over the world, we introduce EIGHT OTHER NEW SWEET PEAS, which can be had only direct from us. Among other Exclusive Novelties we would mention the WHITE DEFIANCE BALSAM, giant-flowered SUNLIGHT and MOONLIGHT NASTURTIUMS, and the beautiful new PRESIDENT MCKINLEY PANSY, as of surpassing merit.

In PLANTS. Besides the usual Novelties, we have two of our own exclusive Introduction. These are the beautiful DWARF GLORIOSA CANNA and the free-flowering BURBANK ROSE—the best of seventy-five thousand raised by the world-famous "WIZARD OF HORTICULTURE."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Earnest Reader, Sch. Co., Pa. If the Holy Spirit after being frequently repulsed ceases to arouse a person, must he conclude that he has committed the unpardonable sin and that his case is hopeless?

No, he should humble himself before God and offer the prayer that David offered: "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and take not thy Holy Spirit from me." No man's case is hopeless while he lives. God delights to pardon, and you may be quite sure that he will keep his promise to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him.

O. I., N., Wilcox Wharf, Va. What was the name of the rich man at whose gate Lazarus, the beggar lay?

One of the traditions, still current in Palestine, gives the name of the rich man as "Dobruk." Another gives it as "Nimeusis." There is no certainty, however, that either is correct, or that the parable was ever intended by Christ to be regarded as otherwise than an illustration, like the other parables employed in his familiar teachings during his sojourn on earth.

Louisa D. S., Maxwell, Ont., Can. Seeing the question of B. T. in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 12, about amusements, I thought of sending the rule given by Mrs. Wesley to her son John, to help him to judge what pleasures should not be indulged in by Christians:

"Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of conscience, obscures your sense of God or takes off the relish of spiritual things, whatever increases the power of your body over your mind, that thing to you is sin.

Penitent, Dalton City, Ill. If a person should steal a small sum of money from another to save himself from disgrace, truly purposing in his heart to return it as soon as possible, and the one from whom he stole it had never discovered his loss, will he be forgiven when he returns it and makes full explanation, even if he does not reveal his name or identity?

It is a somewhat difficult question to answer satisfactorily. If the offender be truly penitent, he should go privately to the person he has injured, confess his fault, make full reparation, and ask forgiveness. Anything short of this would tend to discredit his claim of sincerity. It is not necessary that the offender should abase himself before the world, but the injured person certainly is entitled to an explanation. There may be circumstances that render such a course impracticable, but nothing of the sort is hinted at in the letter.

Reader, Ewing City, Mich. Why are the Jews persecuted and ostracized so many lands?

One reason is that they possess greater business energy than their non-Jewish competitors and excite the envy of their fellow citizens where they reside. Another reason is that they are a peculiar people, and in a measure refuse to conform to certain customs and practices in vogue among members of the communities in their dealings, as merchants, etc., and so the whole race suffers for the misdeeds of a few. This is the law, more or less, applying to other races, but it is not to be overlooked that the Jew with whom they have had to deal has not infrequently been a member of the race which has persecuted him. [illegible] Christ prophesied the fate of the Jews, and the fulfilment of the prophecy is one of the strongest proofs of the divine origin of the Bible. [illegible] Nothing of the sort is hinted at in the letter.

man to gain the victory over sin, and he does this in answer to prayer?

E. H. Grasty, Clarkson, Culpeper Co., Va., writes:

We ask and will be pleased to receive for our school children any simple reading matter of a religious character, containing Sunday School lessons. Even cast-away Sunday School lessons will be thankfully received. To any Christians sending us these lessons or Bibles, we will report progress from time to time as they may prescribe.

S. E. H., Indiana, Pa. A lady who has been holding meetings here, says that during the three years and a-half that have elapsed since her conversion, she has never sinned, and that unless people live lives as pure and holy as Christ lived they can never go to heaven. Is that true?

You probably misunderstood her. Those who love sin and willingly remain in sin cannot enter heaven; but if a sinless life were made a condition of entrance all would be excluded. We are directed to strive after perfection, but when a person boasts that he has attained it and does not commit sin, it is safe to conclude that his conscience is not active.

ST. JAMES' STREET, MONTREAL, CAN.

This is one of the finest thoroughfares in the Dominion City, and has many magnificent and imposing business buildings of which the citizens are justly proud.

It is possible that he has been saved from the gross acts of iniquity which formerly may have characterized him, and that may be what he means; but we never knew anyone who had been so completely delivered that he was free from sins of thought and word, from sins of omission and commission.

Inquirer, Reading, Pa. 1. What is the number of medical missionaries in the field at the present time? 2. Which denomination is most largely represented?

1. According to statistics compiled several years ago there are now four hundred and eighty-seven in the various foreign fields, being an increase of twenty-five per cent. in five years. The Presbyterians, who have seventy-one medical missionaries.

[illegible]ska, Kans. How does the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pronounce his name?

Every week letters reach us asking this question, and we answer them. Dr. Klopsch's name is pronounced as if written, "Klopsh." [illegible] It is not likely that there will be any change in this method we [illegible] answer is accepted as final. [illegible] Christ. We have heard it stated [illegible] institution of the Lord's Supper [illegible] and denounced [illegible] that he [illegible] Christ at the sacrament [illegible]

It is probable that leavened bread was used, [illegible] Jews scrupulously put away [illegible] out of their houses [illegible] There is nothing to show whether the wine was or was not fermented, but the probability is that it was not. It does not signify in our observance what kind of bread is used, but in view of the danger to some persons who have been victims of drink, it is better to use unfermented wine.

New Subscriber, Sanford, Me. What does the word mortify mean as Paul uses it in Rom. 8:13?

To be dead to, not responsive to. Paul said that he kept his body in subjection. There are some people who have no joys but those that the body affords. Appetite and sex provide them with their chief gratifications. Paul urges his readers to live for something higher. Man was not intended to live like the animals. He partakes of their nature, but he has also a higher nature within him which grows and attains predominance if it is cultivated.

Mrs. Z., East Hanover, Pa. What are the opening words of the hymn in which are the words: "Jesus can make a dying bed"?

It is a hymn by Isaac Watts, beginning,

Why should we start and fear to die?
What timorous worms we mortals are!

J. F. C., Rochester, Tex. Should "Greater New York" be written instead of "New York City?" Please inform many others as well as myself.

No; "New York" is the proper address, and will probably continue to be so for many years. "Greater New York" is simply a term of comparison.

Reader, South Tacoma, Wash. 1. How is it that a Christian is not popular or appreciated as persons are who are not Christians? It is very discouraging to a young man. 2. Does God answer prayer for temporal blessings?

1. Christ warned us that in following him we must expect to lose popularity. In fact, he said it was a bad sign to have all men speak well of us. (See Luke 6:26; John 15:19.) At the same time you must not expect appreciation because of your being a Christian. If you are dull and censorious and disagreeable, you will be disliked whether you are a Christian are not. There are many Christians who are beloved even by worldly people, because they are kind, gentle, helpful, and lovable. Try to make other people happy and you will be appreciated. 2. Yes, very often, but not invariably. Sometimes he sees that the things that we ask for would not be good for us, and for our own sake withholds them.

Mrs. J. H. Farnville, N. Y., writes:

Permit me to put in a plea for the dear song birds, which are becoming so scarce in this part of New York State. We miss them very much, and my heart aches when I read accounts of the killing of birds. I hope you will keep up a strong agitation in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD against that crime.

Child of Light, Minneapolis. 1. Can you inform me regarding Bismarck's parentage? 2. What physicians are billed by the leading Jews in the world?

1. His father, was Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand von Bismarck, a German squire and ex-captain of the Prussian Body-guard. At the time of Bismarck's birth, the father was possessed of a modest farming estate at Schoenhausen. His mother, Louisa Wilhelmina Menken, was the daughter of a well-known Privy Councillor, who was a self-made man. His ancestry is wholly German. 2. To answer the second question would require more space than we have at command, as Hebrews may be found in leading official positions and in the front of great movements and enterprises in almost every country of the world.

A. W. and Subscriber, Sandford, Me. What your opinion in regard to holding entertainments in the church for the purpose of raising money for church furniture and contingent expenses?

We have already replied to a similar question on several former occasions. Such entertainments, though they may aid in a financial sense, very often prove a drawback to the spiritual growth of a church in the end. If some are conducted, they are positively objectionable and out of place inside the walls of a consecrated building. There are, however, some gatherings of a sort that may be held there with entire propriety, such as illustrated lectures, suitable concerts, etc.

Mrs. T. A. Mitchell, Telmacana, Tex., writes:

My father found an album after the battle of Spottsylvania C. H., containing photos of Capt. Chas. W. Kennedy, 150th N. Y. V.; W. Forbes Watson, Miss Amelia Fennell, and others. Should any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD be interested further, address me.

Mrs. N. A. O., Sprout Brook, N. Y. What were the dimensions of the walls around the city of Babylon?

Accounts vary as to the dimensions of the walls of Babylon. Herodotus states that the walls were double; the outer wall being fifty-six miles in circumference, 87 feet thick and 350 feet high. Ctesias says the circumference was forty-two miles and that there was a triple wall, while Pliny, Strabo, and others give still different measurements. As no vestige of the ancient walls is now to be found, the true size cannot be ascertained.

J. P. R., Pleasant Lake, Ind. 1. Was Abraham Lincoln a spiritualist? If so, who was his spiritual adviser or medium during the Rebellion? Did he have a medium in his house whom he trusted for guidance? 2. Does the Word of God teach spiritualism? 3. What do you think of mediums who travel around preaching spiritualism and claiming to be guided by John Wesley's spirit?

1. We are aware that a book has been written, endeavoring to show that Lincoln was a spiritualist, but it is inconclusive, and the burden of evidence points the other way. There is good ground for the claim that he was, for many years before his death, an orthodox believer in Christianity. 2. The Word of God does not teach spiritualism, in the sense in which it is taught by modern so-called professors. On the contrary, it contains many injunctions against the seeking after familiar spirits, etc., wizards, necromancers, seers, etc. We would advise you to put no confidence in any one who professes to be "controlled" by the spirit of some dead man; the likelihood is that the medium is, as many have been proved, an arrant humbug and charlatan, merely bent on making money.

LEANING ON JESUS AT NINETY.

(Auntie Gould's Beautiful Faith—The Story of a Band of Venerable Believers at the New York Colored Home.)

"THE Lord knoweth the heart," and the color of the skin makes no difference in his eyes. Among the inmates of the New York Colored Home and Hospital for the ed and Indigent, there have been many nces of beautiful Christian lives. God heaven are very real to these people. e dear old soul, when on her death-bed, sed with great earnestness, "Oh, I do get sick! I want to see my Heavenly er so bad—I can't tell you how I long go to him: but I must be patient and his time. He knows best."

t is inspiring to stand by the bedside these aged saints, as they pass down ugh the valley of the shadow." So d-like and trustful is their faith in st, it seems never to occur to them doubt for a moment his tender love and e, and sure and lasting protection.

"Auntie Gould," more than ninety years age, unable to read, loved to listen to reading of the Word. She would . "I don' want to be deceived. I want to miss heaven. I want to be right, gentle and good: to love my emies—love everybody." One day she . "Jesus is answering my pra'r. I 'n't get angry so quick nor so often as I ed to." A few days later as we read to the words: "Be gentle towards all , showing all meekness," she claimed. "Oh sister, I has'nt temper any mo'. It's all e." Another time when strength was failing, she d. "The doctor was e and, when he looked y po' swoilen feet, shook his head and nothing. But it 't worry me. It kes me rejoice. I it with delight. it means I'm st home. I'm not id, for Jesus is h me, and he says, never leave thee forsake thee." other time she said, I'se had a foretaste eaven. I'm swallowed n glory! O, everlasting with Jesus! He is with me will be with me to the very and forever. Praise God!"

standing by the dying bed of another ever (Alice ——) when she no longer ew those around her, and it seemed the rit had taken its flight, in subdued tones repeated, "The Lord is my Shepherd." there came the faint whisper, "He's e, too." As we continued, "I will fear evil, for thou art with me," from the ng lips we heard softly murmured, e is! He is!" Then followed stupor. afterward she said: "Good bye. I'm ng to see Jesus, and father and mother." ese were her last words.

Aunt Rachel, another old Christian, in r last hours, said, with tears of joy and atitude, "How good God has been to I thought I would be in Father's se before this: but not yet. O, the e of God! I have that and I want thing else. I'm going to be with Jesus ever. No to-morrow there, but forever h Jesus. Good-bye, we'll meet in ther's house, for I've got a home there." fore our next visit, Aunt Rachel was led to that home.

Very many enter this institution with- t a saving knowledge of Christ and are re pointed to "The Lamb of God that eth away the sin of the world," and y "look and live." The chaplain, Rev. chard Horton, is very attentive to their ritual welfare. Two services are held Sunday and others through the week. Maria ——, although advanced in years en she entered the Home, yet did not ow Jesus as a Saviour. She soon be- n to pray but seemed full of doubts, at nes bordering on despair. One day, we und her sick and in bed. As she took r hands she said with difficulty: "This morning, early, I was all alone talking with Jesus, and I felt that it was all right, and that my sins are forgiven. Now I'm ready to go." The following day we saw that death was near. As we stepped to her bedside, she murmured, "Trusting Jesus." We knelt in prayer and commended her soul to God. Then some of the old aunties present, in a low, sweet strain, joined in singing, "Jesus lover of my soul," and as we sang, the soul went to be "forever with the Lord."

The Institution is exclusively for the benefit of the colored people and is situated at sixty-fifth street and First avenue N. Y. It consists of hospital, home for the aged and indigent, and a lying-in department. The Society began its work in 1839, with twelve pensioners; now 800 more or less, are cared for annually in the institution. This property was recently sold, and in a few months, the sick, the poor and the aged colored people will find a new Colored Home and Hospital at East 141st street and Concord avenue, where an entire square of thirty-eight lots has been purchased and the work of erecting the buildings is progressing. The fund now at the disposal of the Building Committee, it is estimated, will complete all these buildings, with the exception of the two pavilions, one for Consumptives, and the other the Maternity Ward. An earnest appeal is now being made for contributions to the Building Fund. Those who have so cheerfully given of their time and money to its advancement will in no wise lose their reward.

A patient able to pay for medical attendance is of very rare occurrence, and the service is given almost entirely to the very poor and needy, to those who, in the stress and turmoil of bread-winning, are suddenly stricken down, and, homeless, seek refuge and relief within our walls, and to those whose days of willing service are dimly closing, darkened with blindness, with paralysis, and the utter helplessness of extreme old age.

Having been engaged in missionary labors in this institution at different periods for more than twenty-five years, the writer is able to tell something of the grand work it is doing in making comfortable the last years of the aged, giving skilled medical attendance to the sick, and the gospel of Christ to all.

God has blessed and prospered the institution from the beginning, and we look for even greater blessings in the future.

Chinese Festival Customs.

The Way the Chinese In America Celebrate New Year—Procession of the Dragon—A New Year Sunday School Service.

(See colored illustration on first page.)

CHINATOWN, in American cities has lately been celebrating New Year. Their New Year's Day does not coincide with ours. In fact, New Year's Day would almost seem to be a movable feast with them, since there does not appear to be exact uniformity in the dates of its celebration in various localities. In Atlanta, Ga., for instance, the Chinese contingent which is not very large as compared with that of Western and Northern cities, made great preparations and welcomed the New Year in with feasting and carousal on January 20, only to be advised next day by high authority in Washington, D. C., that they had made a mistake and that New Year should fall somewhat later, upon which they promptly prepared to repeat previous demonstrations on the corrected date. The new year is celebrated as the twenty-fourth of the present emperor's reign. When his rule ends, the count will begin again at the year one.

New Year celebration in Chinatown really covers a week. For some time in advance, a store of Chinese food and wine is accumulated in anticipation of great feasting. Chan Fun a rich laundryman, when asked to give the bill of fare of his New Year feast, said: "Habee Chinese oyster, and habee appelung, and habee uller kind meats. Habee six kind sweetmeats," and he pointed to a table covered with small parcels of Chinese provisions which had been imported for the occasion. "Giva pen," the crystalized rind of the Chinese watermelon, costing 75 cents a pound, "quayuh," a kind of cocoanut, "goo pen," "hen oom," "yah pen" were some of the mysteries found among these confections. Chinamen are expected to pay all their debts and the kindly interchange of New Year good wishes and greetings is in order.

The Chinese of America, poor as they appear, and squalid as their quarters are, do not forget their Oriental ways and customs on any great national holidays. Chinatown in New York, New Orleans, Chicago, Denver and other cities remembers how to be merry—and wicked, too, at times, in Chinese fashion—on festal occasions, but it is in California, perhaps, that one sees Chinese customs and character in full play in Chinese festivals. It is in San Francisco and in Los Angeles, we believe, that they have what they call the procession of the "Yellow Dragon," in which certain Chinamen who are appointed to the service carry a great and gorgeous dragon through the streets. These men are hidden in the body of the dragon, which has a long flexible tail.

As the dragon is the national emblem, perhaps patriotism as well as superstition has some share in the dragon parade.

From these pagan pageants, it is pleasant to turn to a scene like one described by the artist who has drawn the true and realistic picture on our cover:

"On a Sunday afternoon I was strolling toward the Chinese quarter of Los Angeles, a very picturesque part of the town. It was a Chinese holiday—'New Year,' if I am not mistaken—and a beautiful day at that. I could hear an organ and singing—the old and well-known hymn, 'Nearer My God to Thee,'—and following the direction of the sound, came across the scene I have tried to depict in my drawing. Apparently only the poorer class of Chinamen belonged to this Sunday School (which I took it to be), the richer ones in their gorgeous robes were strolling by, taking no interest whatever in what was going on, but those that were in it were earnest. They sang in their broken English as well as they could, the one at the organ, who sang as well as played, acting as a sort of leader.

These revivals, or meetings, have resulted in considerable good. The Chinese quarter of Los Angeles does not differ from that of any of the other cities in regard to immorality and depravity. Christian people who seek to evangelize the Chinese are doing a work of national importance and benefit, for these places, deadly with smoke of opium dens, and full to the brim of gambling hells and all manner of iniquities, are sores which threaten American morality, and whose cleansing is largely in the hands of Christian people."

CUBA'S STORY TOLD AT LAST!

SYLVESTER SCOVEL, NOW IN THE FIELD, SENDS THE AWFUL RECORD OF SUFFERING.

THE CALAMITY OF THE CENTURY.

Heart-moving Pictures of Famine and Death — The Authorities Admit, but Cannot Relieve the Situation—Terrible Scenes in the Streets of Havana and the Interior Towns and Villages—Dying in the Public Streets—Death's Grimmest Harvest.

ALTHOUGH the American people have heard much of the terrible suffering in Cuba, and of the calamitous famine that has swept hundreds of thousands of her sons and daughters into the grave, very little of the real facts—the appalling details—of this widespread horror have till now come to light. It is a story the half of which has not been revealed.

To-day, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD lifts the veil and for the first time tells in simple, unvarnished words, the true story of Cuba's suffering. It is a tale almost without a parallel in the world's history—the swift obliteration of a helpless peasantry by famine, while civilized nations stand looking on in indifference. All who read it will utter a prayer of thankfulness that the sons and daughters of our own land have proved their claim to be called a Christian people by coming to the rescue of poor stricken Cuba in her time of sorest extremity.

The letters published below are from the pen of Mr. Sylvester Scovel, a correspondent now in Cuba for the second time, whither he went almost direct from the THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices, in the Bible House in the early part of last month. They are written with a perfect knowledge of the facts and are therefore an accurate and trustworthy record. They constitute the first complete and undisguised story of the famine that has yet been published, and disclose many things that will excite surprise as well as sympathy.

One Million Dead or Dying of Starvation.

HAVANA, JAN. 31.—Over two-thirds of the population of the island of Cuba have died or are dying from hunger. Under present conditions and within four months' time [illegible] MILLION human beings will have ceased to exist, within a radius of two hundred miles from Key West.

Both Spanish and Cuban officials have admitted that half a million people [illegible] men, women and children have died in Cuba during the last twenty months.

Now there are still three-quarters of a million people left alive in Cuba to-day. One-third of these are doomed. They need no assistance. One-third are starving. They can be saved. One-third are even now at the very point of death from famine. These are beyond hope. Such figures dwarf into insignificance the wars, plagues and massacres of modern history.

The fact that within less than two years half a million people out of a million and a half have starved to death, and that another quarter million must follow them, is absolutely without a parallel, and it is hard for American readers, living quietly at home, to realize that within four hours' steaming from our shores, a people has been literally halved by death.

Let me begin the story by pointing you to the Spanish statements, printed under the watchful censorship of a rigid military regime. They are necessarily conservative, and free from all exaggeration. One of the strongest conservative Havana dailies, the El Diario de la Marina, said:

Over 500,000 Dead.

The scourge of hunger has finished with more than five hundred thousand persons of the fields—children and women in the greater part . . . But in addition to the hunger, sickness is finishing up the reconcentrados. Smallpox, malarial fever, infectious fevers, dysentery, and other enteric diseases, constitute the pathological conditions reigning in our land.

Senor Canalejas informed the writer that he estimated the number of non-combatants already dead from hunger at half a million. He had just finished a tour of Cuba's cities to report upon their condition to Premier Sagasta. A new minister of Spain, a patriotic journalist and a great lawyer, Canalejas, with his facilities for getting at the truth, deserves great praise for having had the courage to tell it.

The Bishop of Havana, Santander Y. Fritos, has also stated the loss of life shown by his parochial records to be over the figure quoted.

Of the three-quarters of a million living persons now in the towns of Cuba, two-thirds have practically no means of subsistence. The other third are fairly able to buy food for themselves. The almost absolute cessation of sugar-making and tobacco-raising has brought hitherto rich families to extreme poverty. To their credit be it said, these thousands of families, even in the throes of genteel want, have done, and are doing, all they can for their destitute countrymen. But that is comparatively little. Captain-General Blanco is also using his slender facilities to the utmost in relieving distress. But that is very little also. In a signed interview General Blanco recently said: "I expect to save three-quarters of the reconcentrados now alive. Allowing for the number existing at that time, the other quarter would amount to about a quarter of a million persons."

Famine Horrors in Havana.

Havana has fewer reconcentrados, in comparison to its population, than almost any other city or town in Cuba. Yet, within five minutes' walk from the beautiful square are sights to make one weep. In a big, bare house, called "Los Fossos," there are hourly scenes which beggar description. On the bare floor in a corner lay two women's forms, each with a baby upon its breast. One mother and one baby died while I was there. The dead baby still lay upon its living mother's breast. She did not know it had died. She was too weak. And the dead mother's bony arms clasped a living baby. Strong men who saw that scene broke down and cried. In the same place I have seen twelve uncoffined bodies lying unregarded on the floor in different parts of the building, surrounded by closely packed women and children, scarcely less motionless than they.

A GIRL SUFFERER OF HAVANA.
The whole family of ten were starving.

For over two hundred persons there were seventy-five small biscuits, and for each, once a day, an unsavory panful of codfish, beans, and oil, all cooked together. The sufferers could not eat it.

To the Bishop's palace, thousands of babes in their mother's arms come for succor from the society which the good old man has organized. There are over 5,000 children registered, but only three or four hundred can be helped a day. It would break one's heart to see the throngs of sad women who turn hopelessly away without the bottle of thin milk and the handful of corn-meal which the few secure for their little ones.

The Starving Babes.

And such babies! Tiny skeletons, with the skin stretched tightly over the poor little protruding bones, or hanging in folds over them where the child-flesh has shrunken away. They seem all dead but their eyes—their big, sad, beseeching eyes. There is not a man in the United States who could look once into a poor, little, starving reconcentrado baby's eyes without turning away. There are thousands of such babies to be saved. The Governor of the province of Pinar del Rio states that there are six thousand orphans there alone. No one asks help for them.

Three days ago a sad but not an unusual thing occurred in the United States Consulate. A woman entered, asking food. She had two little ones at her skirts and a babe in her arms. The baby died while she stood there.

But the suffering is worse in the smaller towns of Cuba, where the number of destitute country people "concentrated" there has quadrupled and quintupled the population. In these places, private charity was almost instantly exhausted.

Such a town is Madruga. A Spanish correspondent writes from there to an Havana paper:

During the past fortnight there have been in this place 112 deaths, principally for [illegible] of food. From early dawn one can see n[illegible] ing else in the streets but women, men, [illegible] children, pallid and attenuated, imploring [illegible] lic charity; others thrown upon door-st[illegible] where they are collected to be hauled to [illegible] cemetery. A newspaper of the important town [illegible] Trinidad, gives the following plain st[illegible] of misery. SYLVESTER SCOVEL.

A VILLAGE WHERE MANY DIED OF HUNGER.
This is Sieba del Mocha, where 4,000 reconcentrados were confined. The graveyard is now full and the village well-nigh empty.

[In his next letter, Mr. Scovel will d[illegible] scribe the terrible situation of the tow[illegible] and villages of the interior where death [illegible] reaping a grim harvest. It will appear [illegible] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD next week:]

...hugh exposure, many of whom might
...e been saved had American aid been ...nked sooner. Dr. Klopsch also, in be-
...f of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD read-
...forwarded through the Central Relief
...mittee $5,000 worth of children's
...l, condensed milk, etc.

...aving received a cable message from
...n. Lee, a few days ago, stating that
...ded nurses, who are acclimated and
...w the language, could be engaged in
...ana at $15 per month, Dr. Klopsch
...ded to our Consul-General, authorizing
... to engage twenty-five nurses, THE
...RISTIAN HERALD guaranteeing their
...ry for three months.

...s we go to press with this issue, the
...owing cablegram comes from Gen. Lee:

HAVANA, CUBA, Jan. 31, 1898.

...tatoes arrived in good condition. Can use
...many as you send. Supplies sent have
...hed those for whom they are intended. So
...e have gone to the relief of the destitute in
...l city and outlying towns. Other provinces
...w be supplied in proportion to food received.
[Signed] LEE.

...hose of our readers who are actively
...perating in this Christlike work are
...refore personally represented in the
...ine field by their timely gifts of food,
...thing and medicine. They are not only
...ding the hungry, clothing the naked,
...a ministering to the sick, but the poor
...ik little Cuban children will doubt-
...s be taught by their good nurses to
...ss those kind friends in "the great
...ntry not far away," who have been the ...ans of saving their lives and surround-
...them with at least a degree of com-
...t. Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN
...RALD should have a personal share in
...s precious work. If all were to unite
...rtily and simultaneously and give in
...s name, to the full extent of their ability,
...t present distress in Cuba might be re-
...ed within twenty days, and a quarter
...a million of human lives saved from ...pending starvation! We pray that the ...ver of all good gifts may put it into ...ir hearts to do this and thus to make such
...ecord for Christian benevolence as would
...a striking and memorable object-lesson
...the whole world.

Congress Helps the Sightless.

The Reading-room for the Blind in the New Congressional Library in Washington.

IN the new Library of Congress at Washington, now opened to the public, is found one unique feature which might with benefit be copied in the libraries of all other cities. A well-lighted and comfortably furnished room is set apart as a reading-room for the blind exclusively. It is situated in one corner of the lower floor, some distance from the general reading-room, and apart from the usual route over which flows the constant stream of visitors.

Here the blind are cordially welcomed by the pleasant young lady in charge, who explains the many opportunities which are extended to all who wish to avail themselves of them, and who encourages those who cannot read to begin the study of one of the simple systems here shown. There is none of the restraint natural to adults who attend institutions for the young, and these extremely sensitive people do not feel that they are objects of curiosity to others as in a public place.

An interesting assortment of books and reading matter is kept in readiness, printed in the raised forms used for the blind, which present a curious appearance to the natural eye. The books are all as large as an ordinary atlas, of thick, heavy paper, and the characters appear to be pressed outward from the back, projecting slightly above the plain surface of the page. No ink or color is used, and the cream-white pages with their raised hieroglyphics seem a succession of embossed ivory tablets. The volumes range from Virgil and the Scriptures through histories, biographies, the works of Shakespeare, Scott, and other standard authors, down to children's stories, school books, readers, and primers.

One has only to close his eyes and endeavor to trace these forms with the fingertips, to gain some appreciative idea of the extreme sensitiveness of touch which the blind acquire. And when the rapidity with which these characters must be recognized in reading is realized, their proficiency seems wonderful. There are a number of alphabets or reading systems for the blind, but the Boston, Roman, Moon, Braille, and New York Point are best known at present.

Louis Braille, a student of the Institutione Nationale of Paris, who had been blind from infancy, recognized the force of the objections to the existing systems of printing for the blind, and set himself to the task of producing an entirely different and simple system. The result was eminently successful. From different arrangements of not more than six raised points placed vertically thus : ⁚ , Braille evolved sixty-two combinations, which represented the alphabet, numerals, punctuation marks, musical notation, etc. In 1868, the New York Institute modified the Braille system somewhat, placing the points horizontally, that they might more easily felt with a considerable saving of space, and representing the letters in use by the least number of points. As it, as in Braille's and others, every other line is reversed, so that when the reader reaches the end of the first line the beginning of the next is just below, and so

It has been proven conclusively that many who cannot master the Boston or Moon systems can learn the Point method in a short time, and that ordinary hardness of the cuticle does not affect the efficiency as in some others. A few months of study application will make a ready reader of any one of average intelligence. Braille also, invented a writing-frame which, is in use all over the civilized world. It consists of a board with grooved surface upon which the frame which holds the sheets is fitted. The points are made with a blunt awl through perforated metal, and as the wrong side is necessarily used most, the writing begins from right to left, the reverse of the order of reading, that when the sheet is turned over the lines may be read as usual.

Another apparatus is arranged so that by pressing the point character the ordinary letter is produced upon the paper, thus enabling the blind to communicate with their friends who are blessed with sight. Typewriters are also manufactured now for the use of the blind, and in time will doubtless supersede all other writing machines for that purpose. They are even now used by a few of the blind who have learned to manipulate the keys.

Besides the many advantages which this Congressional Library reading-room renders so easily available to those for whose use it is designed, there is another noteworthy feature intended especially for the weak, the aged, and those who cannot spare the necessary time for individual reading. Every afternoon, the hours from 2.30 to 3.30 are devoted to reading aloud. Current topics, Scriptural selections, poetry, and choice extracts from the best literature, render this hour both pleasing and profitable to the appreciative listeners. Able readers have kindly volunteered their services for this purpose for months ahead; and the list includes some well-known names, John Russell Young, the veteran Librarian of Congress, and Paul Lawrence Dunbar, the colored poet, now employed in the Library, being among the first to offer. This idea, at least, could be easily carried out wherever there are a sufficient number of blind to make it worth while.

"How do the blind seem to regard the idea of a reading room for their benefit?" was asked of Miss Etta Giffin, the Librarian in charge.

"They are touchingly grateful for the interest shown in them, and are especially pleased at being, for the first time, recognized as a class whose pleasure and improvement should be considered as a personal right, and not as a charity. Some are brought here in the morning, and remain until closing time, so eager are they for the advantages offered. Besides the reading, we hope that, meeting similarly afflicted ones here, they may form pleasant acquaintances and friendships, which will serve to increase their pleasures and brighten their lonely lives."

VIRGINIA KING FRYE

Prohibition in Samoa.

Like Khama, the ruler of the Bhamgwato, in Africa, the King of Samoa is a foe to the drink traffic. He has issued an order that "No spirituous, vinous, or fermented liquors or intoxicating drinks whatever shall be sold, given, or offered to be bought or bargained for by any Samoan or other islander resident in Samoa

ALGIERS IN DISORDER.

RIOTOUS disturbances of a serious character are reported from the quaint town in Northern Africa which is the capital of the French Colonial Province of Algeria. M. Cambon, who is now the French minister to the United States, was formerly its governor, and was fully aware of the explosive condition of its popular feeling. His tact and firm management with difficulty restrained the race enmities which were constantly irritating a populace composed of Moslems, Algerian Jews and French colonists. After his departure, the disorderly elements appear to have developed with the intention of testing the capacity of his successor. The agitation in Paris and Southern France in relation to the Dreyfus case afforded a convenient excuse. Dreyfus, who is a Jew, was condemned at a secret trial for selling Government secrets to a foreign power, and is now suffering imprisonment of a peculiarly severe character. An effort to review his case, or at least to have the evidence on which he was convicted made public, has set all France in uproar, and has excited popular feeling against the Jews, who are supposed to have conducted the movement in favor of Dreyfus. In Algiers, the Jews were in special danger owing to the latent Moslem antipathy, which M. Cambon had sternly repressed. Whether Dreyfus was guilty or innocent of betraying his country, was not so much a matter of concern, as whether the dominant French colony would protect the Jews if they were attacked. If the French, irritated against the Jews by the agitation in favor of Dreyfus, would connive at an anti-Jewish movement, the Moslems were ready for it and they were supported by the thieves and cutthroats of the town, who longed to make a raid on the banks and jewelry stores owned by the Jews. The attack was made on the store of a prominent Jewish merchant. And in the struggle that ensued, a Christian was killed. This inflamed the mob and a cry was raised for vengeance. Stores were looted and it is reported that a number of Jews were slain. One report places the number as high as a hundred. After an ineffectual endeavor by the police to allay the tumult, a strong force of military charged on the rioters and eventually restored order, but it is feared that the danger is not yet passed. It is, marvelous that at this late day this anti-Jewish feeling should survive in so many lands and this long suffering people should be persecuted in almost every country where they settle. The words of their own prophet are being sadly fulfilled:

I will give them up to be tossed to and fro among all the kingdoms of the earth for evil: to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse in all places whither I shall drive them (Jer. 24:9).

ALGIERS, THE SCENE OF THE RECENT ANTI-JEWISH RIOTS.

The Order of the Crown.

A new Order of Kings' Daughters has been founded in America. It is composed exclusively of ladies who can trace their ancestry back to some King. There are more ladies in this country who can do this than is generally known. The fact that everyone who can trace his ancestry back for eight generations would find two hundred and fifty-six ancestors may show how the possibilities of some of them having of royal descent are increased. Among the ladies who have already been admitted to membership are some who trace their ancestry to King Henry I., of England; others to Ferdinand III., King of Castile; one to Hugh Capet, of France; while others do not reach royalty until the time of Alfred, of England. The Society is called the Order of the Crown. Its insignia are principally a crown, of course, and the colors the royal purple, worn as a sash or cordon on state occasions—a wide, heavy ribbon over the right shoulder to the left hip, back and front, with the insignia on the hip, attached to the ribbon. Its purposes, so far as they have been disclosed, are of a social nature. Membership in it will be counted a great honor, but it may be a consolation to those who are not eligible, to know that higher honor is within the reach of those who seek it, not by ties of blood, but of character.

Be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty (II. Cor., 6:18).

Reconciled at the Font.

The daily journals of New Jersey report an interesting incident which occurred at Hoboken, N. J., on January 27. It was the reconciliation of a young man with his family and the healing of an estrangement of several years. It appears that the young man, who is the son of very wealthy parents made the acquaintance some years ago of a young lady who was employed in a drygoods store in New York. After a few months he proposed to marry her, but his family objected. They tried to alienate the couple and sent the young man on an extended Western tour and afterwards to Europe, in the hope that absence and change of scene would cure him of his infatuation. On his return, however, he married the girl, though he knew that by doing so he would have to surrender the income he was receiving from his father and would have to work for a living. This occurred about a year ago, and the young man has managed to support his wife. On January 27, he and his wife went to church to have their baby christened. His family heard of the projected ceremony and several of them went to witness it. When his mother saw her grandson for the first time, she held out her hand to her son, and a general reconciliation took place. It was an appropriate place for such an event. Under the roof where He is preached who reconciled the world to God, all quarrels may well be made up

God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them, and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation (II Cor. 5:19).

Insect Grafting.

A discovery which may lead to important results has been made by Mr. Henry E. Crampton, Instructor in Biology in Columbia University. Mr. Crampton has been studying the works of a German scientist named Born, and has made a practical test of some of his theories, with extraordinary results. He has experimented on the embryo of the butterfly at the period of its existence when it lies inactive in its cocoon, after its life as a caterpillar. Everyone has seen the grub spinning its delicate nest on a leaf or twig, and entering it, as into a grave, remaining there eating nothing and apparently dead for a few weeks, and then emerging from it a beautiful creature with wings. Mr. Crampton collected a number of these cocoons and operated on their insensible occupants. He found that he could cut the comatose creatures in half, and join the half of one to the half of another without affecting the life of either. The caterpillars so joined accomplished the usual period of their retirement and emerged from it as two butterflies, with wonderful combinations of colors and organisms, apparently none the worse for the operation which had been performed. Prof. Smith of the New Jersey Experiment Station, who has made the facts of Mr. Crampton's work known, believes that the discovery will constitute an era in biological science. The principle has an endless variety in possible forms of application and may eventually reach to higher orders of life. The possibility of combining two natures in a single living organism being once demonstrated, scientists will perceive how far-reaching may be the effects of such experiments. Theologians will have no difficulty in tracing an analogy of the principle in humanity, for it is on this principle of the implantation of the divine nature in the soul, that all our hopes of becoming God-like are based:

He is our peace, who made both one, and brake down the middle wall of partition, having abolished in his flesh the enmity . . . that he might create in himself of the twain one new man, so making peace (Eph. 2:14).

Damages for a Limp.

A Brooklyn jury gave a verdict for a thousand dollars' damages last week to a lady who had been lamed by an accident on the Suburban Railroad. It appears that she was hurt while riding on one of the Company's cars one day last summer. The motor-box underneath the car had fallen out, and the lid over it being released, had flown violently back, striking the lady's foot. The surgeon who attended her said that one of the small bones of the instep had been broken, and it had been impossible to unite the fracture. The injury had not been very painful, but she would always walk with a slight limp. The Company did not dispute its liability, but claimed that the injury was so slight that nominal damages would be sufficient. The plaintiff's lawyer, however, contended that as his client would never be able to dance, nor even to walk gracefully, her attractions were permanently impaired, and she was therefore entitled to substantial damages. The jury agreed with him, and gave a verdict for a thousand dollars. It may be hoped that injury will not prove as great a detriment as the lawyer described. Howsoever it may detract from the gracefulness of her walk, it cannot prevent her walking according to the rule which the apostle gave, which enhances the attractions of all who follow it:

As many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them and mercy (Eph. 6:15).

Protection for a King.

A cable despatch from Corea reports that the king of that country being in dread of a revolutionary outbreak has appealed to the United States minister for protection from his own subjects. The minister has the cruiser Boston at his disposal, but he is said to have informed the king that it would be contrary to the policy of the United States to comply with his request, but that in the event of an outbreak a naval force from the Boston would be brought ashore to protect the embassy. It appears that in the general disorganization which has followed the Chinese and Japanese war the lower classes of Corea have become discontented with the government. They complain of heavy taxes and of the number of foreigners who have settled in the kingdom, and they have organized to resist the government. In one or two districts they have been strong enough to defeat the king's troops, and in Seoul itself, they are menacing the palace. Russia, England, and Japan are struggling for ascendancy in Corea, and it is likely that any one of the three would gladly have given the king all the protection he might need, but apparently he was afraid to invoke their help. He probably believed that the United States would be disinterested and would not place him under embarrassing obligations, which is more than could be expected of the other powers. Our minister, however, acted consistently in declining to interfere in the king's defence. He would doubtless give him shelter, as an act of humanity, if his life were in danger, but if his subjects desire to get rid of him, it would not be right for the United States to interpose to keep him on his throne. The wise king's warning against interfering in other people's quarrels applies to nations as well as to individuals:

THE KING OF COREA.

He that meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears. (Prov. 26:17).

Imprisoned in a Furnace

An unpleasant predicament was brought on himself by a workingman in New York a few days ago. His employer, a wealthy merchant, had occasion to have the furnace in his cellar overhauled. The workmen spent the day upon it and left the work half finished. One of the servants in the house is an ingenious person who has frequently devised means of overcoming a difficulty which has puzzled expert workers. He examined the furnace after the men had gone, and believed that he could effect an improvement in it. After doing several things to the outside he crawled in to do some work inside. He completed his operations, and then found to his consternation that he could not get out. The set of the bevelling had made the furnace as secure as a mouse-trap and he was held a prisoner. It had been easy to get in when he had plenty of room for his body, but in the narrow confines of the interior of the furnace he could not get into the proper attitude for emerging. After many frantic efforts and many trials of his fellow-servants to liberate him, the attempt was given up and he was obliged to remain all night in the furnace. In the morning when the workmen came, they removed two of the side plates and let him out. He was cramped, but was otherwise not much the worse for his adventure. There are some who have not got off so easily when they have ventured into places from which retreat was not so easy as they expected.

As birds are caught in the snare, so are the sons of men snared in an evil time (Eccles. 9:12).

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

WATCHING THE BOAT.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Exodus 2: 4. . . . .

And his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

PRINCESS THERMUTIS, daughter of Pharaoh, looking out through the lattice of her bathing house, on the banks of the Nile, saw a curious boat on the river. It had neither oar nor helm, and they would have been useless anyhow. There was only one passenger, and that a baby boy. But the Mayflower, that brought the Pilgrim Fathers to America, carried not so precious a load. The boat was made of the broad leaves of papyrus, tightened together by bitumen. Boats were sometimes made of that material, as we learn from Pliny and Herodotus and Theophrastus. "Kill all the Hebrew children born," had been Pharaoh's order. To save her boy, Jochebed, the mother of little Moses, had put him in that queer boat and launched him. His sister, Miriam, stood on the bank watching that precious craft. She was far enough off not to draw attention to the boat, but near enough to offer protection. There she stands on the bank—Miriam the poetess, Miriam the quick-witted, Miriam the faithful, though very human, for in after time she demonstrated it.

Miriam was a splendid sister, but had her faults, like all the rest of us. How carefully she watched the boat containing her brother! A strong wind might upset it. The bulfaloes often found there might in a sudden plunge of thirst sink it. Some ravenous water-fowl might swoop and pick his eyes out with iron beak. Some crocodile or hippopotamus crawling through the rushes might crunch the babe. Miriam watched and watched until Princess Thermutis, a maiden on each side of her holding palm leaves over her head to shelter her from the sun, came down and entered her bathing-house. When from the lattice she saw that boat she ordered it brought, and when the leaves were pulled back from the face of the child and the boy looked up he cried aloud, for he was hungry and frightened, and would not even let the Princess take him. The infant would rather stay hungry than acknowledge any one of the court as mother. Now Miriam, the sister, incognito, no one suspecting her relation to the child, leaps from the bank and rushes down and offers to get a nurse to pacify the child. Consent is given, and she brings Jochebed, the baby's mother, incognito, none of the court knowing that she was the mother; and when Jochebed arrived, the child stopped crying, for its fright was calmed and its hunger appeased. You may admire Jochebed, the mother, and all the ages may admire Moses, but I clap my hands in applause at the behavior of Miriam, the faithful, brilliant, and strategic sister.

"Go home," some one might have said to Miriam; "why risk yourself out there alone on the banks of the Nile, breathing the miasma, and endanger of being attacked by wild beast or ruffian; go home!" Now Miriam, the sister, more lovingly watched and bravely protected Moses, the brother. Is he worth her care and courage? Oh, yes; the sixty centuries of the ages of history have never had so much depended on the arrival of any ship as upon the landing of that papyrus boat loaded with Hebrew! Its one passenger was to be a monarch in history, soldier, statesman, politician, lawgiver, orator, conqueror, deliverer. He will such remarkable career at childhood that Josephus says, when the wet carried along the road people stopped to gaze at him, and workmen would leave their work to wonder at. When the King playfully put his crown upon the boy's head he threw it off indignantly and put his foot on it. The King, fearing that this might be a sign that the child might yet take down his crown, planned another test. According to the legend related, the King ordered two trays to be put before the child, one containing rubies and the other burning coals, and if he took the coals, he was to live, and if he took the rubies he was to die. For some reason the child took one of the coals, and put it in his mouth, so that his life was spared, although it burned the tongue till he was indistinct of utterance ever after. Having come to manhood, he spread open the palms of his hands in prayer, and the Red Sea parted to let two million five hundred thousand people escape. And he put the palms of his hands together in prayer, and the Red Sea closed on a strangulated host.

His life so unutterably grand, his burial must be on the same scale. God would let neither man nor saint nor archangel have anything to do with weaving for him a shroud or digging for him a grave. The omnipotent God left his throne in heaven one day, and if the question was asked, "Whither is the King of the Universe going?" the answer was, "I am going down to bury Moses." And the Lord took this mightiest of men to the top of a hill, and the day was clear, and Moses ran his eye over the magnificent range of country. Here, the valley of Esdraelon, where the final battle of all nations is to be fought; and yonder, the mountains Hermon, and Lebanon, and Gerizim, and the hills of Judea; and the village of Bethlehem there, and the city of Jericho yonder, and the vast stretch of landscape that almost took the old lawgiver's breath away as he looked at it. And then without a pang—as I learn from the statement that the eye of Moses was undimmed and his natural force unabated—God touched the great lawgiver's eyes, and they closed; and his lungs, and they ceased; and his heart, and it stopped; and commanded, saying, "To the skies, thou immortal spirit!" And then one Divine hand was put against the back of Moses, and the other hand against the pulseless breast, and God laid him softly down on Mount Nebo, and then the lawgiver, lifted in the Almighty's arms, was carried to the opening of a cave and placed in a crypt, and one stroke of the Divine hand smoothed the features into an everlasting calm, and a rock was rolled to the door, and the only obsequies, at which God did all the offices of priest, and undertaker, and gravedigger, and mourner, were ended.

Oh, was not Miriam, the sister of Moses, doing a good thing, an important thing, a glorious thing when she watched the boat woven of river plants and made water-tight with asphaltum, carrying its one passenger? Did she not put all the ages of time and of a coming eternity under obligation when she defended her helpless brother from the perils aquatic, reptilian, and ravenous? She it was that brought that wonderful babe and his mother together, so that he was reared to be the deliverer of his nation, when otherwise, if saved at all from the rushes of the Nile, he would have been only one more of the God-defying Pharaohs; for Princess Thermutis of the bathing-house would have inherited the crown of Egypt; and as she had no child of her own, this adopted child would have come to coronation. Had there been no Miriam there would have been no Moses. What a garland for faithful sisterhood! For how many a lawgiver, and how many a hero, and how many a deliverer and how many a saint are the world and the church indebted to a watchful, loving, faithful, godly sister? Come up out of the farm-houses, come up out of the inconspicuous homes, come up from the banks of the Hudson, and Penobscot, and the Savannah, and the Mobile, and the Mississippi, and all the other Niles of America and let us see you, the Miriams who watched and protected the leaders in law, and medicine, and merchandise, and art, and agriculture and mechanics, and religion! If I should ask all physicians, and attorneys, and merchants, and ministers of religion, and successful men of all professions and trades, who are indebted to their elder sister for good influences and perhaps for an education or a prosperous start to let it be known, hundreds would testify. God knows how many of our Greek lexicons and how much of our schooling was paid for by money that would otherwise have gone for the replenishing of a sister's wardrobe. While the brother sailed off for a resounding sphere, the sister watched him from the banks of self-denial.

Miriam was the eldest of the family; Moses and Aaron, her brothers, were younger. Oh the power of the elder sister to help decide the brother's character for usefulness and for heaven! She can keep off from her brother more evils than Miriam could have driven back water-fowl or crocodile from the ark of bulrushes. The older sister decides the direction in which the cradle boat shall sail. By gentleness, by good sense, by Christian principle she can turn it toward the palace, not of a wicked Pharaoh, but of a holy God; and a brighter princess than Thermutis should lift him out of peril, even Religion, whose ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace. The older sister, how much the world owes her! Born while yet the family was in limited circumstances, she had to hold and take care of her younger brothers. And if there is anything that excites my sympathy, it is a little girl lugging round a great fat child and getting her ears boxed because she cannot keep him quiet! By the time she gets to young womanhood she is pale and worn out, and her attractiveness has been sacrificed on the altar of sisterly fidelity, and she is consigned to celibacy, and society calls her by an unfair name; but in heaven they call her Miriam. In most families the two most undesirable places in the record of births are the first and the last: the first because she is worn out with the cares of a home that cannot afford to hire help, and the last because she is spoiled as a pet. Among the grandest equipages that sweep through the streets of heaven will be those occupied by sisters who sacrificed themselves for brothers. They will have the finest of the Apocalyptic white horses, and many who on earth looked down upon them will have to turn out to let them pass, the charioteer crying: "Clear the way! A queen is coming!"

Let sisters not begrudge the time and care bestowed on a brother. It is hard to believe that any boy that you know so well as your brother can ever turn out anything very useful. Well, he may not be a Moses. There is only one of that kind needed for six thousand years. But I tell you what your brother will be—either a blessing or a curse to society, and a candidate for happiness or wretchedness. He will, like Moses, have the choice between rubies and living coals, and your influence will have much to do with his decision. He may not, like Moses, be the deliverer of a nation, but he may, after your father and mother are gone, be the deliverer of a household. What thousands of homes to-day are piloted by brothers! There are properties now well invested and yielding income for the support of sisters and younger brothers because the older brother rose to the leadership from the day the father lay down to die. Whatever you do for your brothers will come back to you again. If you set him an ill-natured, censorious, unaccommodating example, it will recoil upon you from his own irritated and despoiled nature. If you, by patience with his infirmities and by nobility of character, dwell with him, in the few years of your companionship, you will have your counsels reflected back upon you some day by his splendor of behavior in some crisis where he would have failed but for you.

Don't snub him. Don't depreciate his ability. Don't talk discouragingly about his future. Don't let Miriam get down off the bank of the Nile and wade out and upset the ark of bulrushes. Don't tease him. Brothers and sisters do not consider it any harm to tease. That spirit abroad in the family is one of the meanest and most devilish. There is a teasing that is pleasurable and is only another form of innocent raillery; but that which provokes and irritates and makes the eye flash with anger is to be reprehended. It would be less blameworthy to take a bunch of thorns and draw them across your sister's cheek, or to take a knife and draw its sharp edge across your brother's hand till the blood spurts, for that would damage only the body; but teasing is the thorn and the knife scratching and lacerating the disposition and the soul. It is the curse of innumerable households that the brothers tease the sisters, and the sisters the brothers. Sometimes it is the color of the hair, or the shape of the features, or an affair of the heart. Sometimes it is by revealing a secret or by a suggestive look, or a guffaw, or an "Ahem!" Tease! Tease! Tease! For mercy's sake quit it. Christ says: "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." Now, when you by teasing, make your brother or sister hate, you turn him or her into a murderer or murderess.

Don't let jealousy ever touch a sister's soul, as it so often does, because your brother gets more honor or more means. Even Miriam, the heroine of the text, was struck by that evil passion of jealousy. She had possessed unlimited influence over Moses, and now he marries, and not only so, but marries a black woman from Ethiopia; and Miriam is so disgusted and outraged at Moses, first because he had married at all, and next because he had practised miscegenation, that she is driven into a frenzy, and then begins to turn white, and gets white as a corpse. Yea, whiter than a corpse. Her complexion is like chalk, the fact is, she has the Egyptian leprosy. And now even her brother whom she had defended on the Nile comes to her rescue in a prayer that brings her restoration. Let there be room in all your house for jealousy either to sit or stand. It is a leprous abomination. Your brother's success, O sister, is your success. His victories will be your victories. For while Moses the brother led the vocal music after the crossing of the Red Sea, Miriam the sister, with timbrels of shining brass uplifted and clattering in the sun, led the instrumental music, clapping the cymbals till the terrified neigh of pursuing cavalry horses was smothered in the wave, and the last Egyptian helmet went under.

How strong it makes a family when all the sisters and brothers stand together! and what an awful wreck when they disintegrate, quarreling about a father's will, and making the surrogate's office horrible with their wrangle! Better, when they were little children in the nursery, and with your playhouse mallets you had accidentally killed each other fighting across your cradle, than that, having come to the age of maturity and having in your veins and arteries the blood of the same father and mother, you fight each other across the parental grave in the cemetery.

If you only knew it, your interests are identical. Of all the families of the earth that ever stood together, perhaps the most conspicuous is the family of the Rothschilds. As Mayer Anselm Rothschild was about to die, in 1812, he gathered his children about him—Anselm, Solomon, Nathan, Charles, and James—and made them promise that they would always stand united on 'Change. Obeying that injunction, they have been the mightiest commercial power on earth, and at the raising or lowering of their sceptre nations have risen or fallen. That illustrates how much, on a large scale and for selfish purposes, a united family may achieve. I suppose that instead of a magnitude of dollars as the object, it be doing good and making salutary impression, and raising this sunken world, how much more ennobling! Sister, you do your part, and brother will do his part. If Miriam will lovingly watch the boat on the Nile, Moses will help her when leprous disaster strike.

When father and mother are gone—and they soon will be, if they have not already made exit—the sisterly and fraternal bond will be the only ligament that will hold the family together. How many reasons for your deep and unfaltering affection for each other! Rocked in the same cradle; bent over by the same mother's tenderness; toiled for by the same father's weary arm and aching brow; with common inheritance of all the family secrets, and with names given you by parents who started you with the highest hopes for your happiness and prosperity, I charge you, be loving and kind and forgiving. If the sister see that the brother never wants a sympathizer, the brother will see that the sister never wants an escort. Oh, if the sisters of a household knew through what terrific and damning temptation their brother goes in city life, they would hardly sleep nights, in anxiety for his salvation! And if you would make a holy conspiracy of kind words and gentle attentions and earnest prayers, that would save his soul from death and hide a multitu tide of sins. But let the sister dash off in o direction in discipleship of the world, a the brother flee off in another direc-ti in dissipation, and it will not be lo before they will meet again at the ih gate of Despair, their blistered feet in the hot ashes of a consumed lifetime.

As! that brothers and sisters, though ling together for years very often do n know each other.

General Bauer, of the Russian cavalry, hl in early life wandered off in the army,
a the family supposed he was dead.
Ver he gained a fortune he encamped o day in Husam, his native place, and n le a banquet; and among the great nitary men who were to dine, he invited a lain miller and his wife who lived near l and who, affrighted, came, fearing some h m would be done them. The miller a l his wife were placed one on each side o the general at the table. The general a ed the miller all about his family, and t miller said that he had two brothers a a sister. "No other brothers?"
" y younger brother went off with the a y many years ago, and no doubt was l g ago killed." Then the general said:
" oldiers, I am this man's younger l ther, whom he thought was dead."
d how loud was the cheer, and how rm was the embrace!

Brother and sister, you need as much of introduction to each other as they did.
u do not know each other. You think, ir brother is grouty and cross and eer, and he thinks you are selfish and ud and unlovely. Both wrong! That other will be a prince in some woman's s, and that sister a queen in the estition of some man. That brother is a gnificent fellow, and that sister is a rning in June. Come, let me introduce u: "Moses, this is Miriam." "Miriam, s is Moses." Add seventy-five per cent.
your present appreciation of each other.
l when you kiss good morning do not k up your cold cheek, wet from the ent washing, as though you hated to ch each other's lips in affectionate ess. Let it have all the fondness and diality of a loving sister's kiss.

Make yourself as agreeable and helpful each other as possible, remembering t soon you part. The few years of yhood and girlhood will soon slip by, d you will go out to homes of your own, d into the battle with the world, and id ever-changing vicissitudes, and on ths crossed with graves, and up steeps rd to climb, and through shadowy vines. But, O my God and Saviour!
y the terminus of the journey be the me as the start—namely, at father's and other's knee, if they have inherited the ngdom. Then, as in boyhood and girl-od days, we rushed in after the day's sence with much to tell of exciting ad-nture, and father and mother enjoyed e recital as much as we who made it, we shall on the hillside of heaven rearse to them all the scenes of our rthly expedition, and they shall welcome home. The old revival hymn described with glorious repetition:

Brothers and sisters there will meet,
Brothers and sisters there will meet,
Brothers and sisters there will meet,
Will meet to part no more.

I read of a child in the country who as detained at a neighbor's house on a ormy night by some fascinating stories at were being told him, and then looked t and saw it was so dark he did not re go home. The incident impressed e the more because in my childhood I ad much the same experience. The by asked his comrades to go with him, ut they dared not. It got later and later
-seven o'clock, eight o'clock, nine o'clock.
Oh," he said, "I wish I were home!" As e opened the door the last time a blind-g flash of lightning and a deafening roar vercame him. But after awhile he saw the distance a lantern, and lo! his rother was coming to fetch him home, nd the lad stepped out and with swift et hastened on to his brother, who took im home, where they were so glad to reet him, and for a long time supper had een waiting. So may it be when the ight of death comes and our earthly riends cannot go with us, and we dare not o alone: may our Brother, our Elder Brother, our Friend closer than a brother, ome out to meet us with the light of the romises, which shall be a lantern to our eet; and then we will go in to join our oved ones waiting for us, supper all ready, he marriage supper of the Lamb!

FREE TRAVELING LIBRARIES.

Their Educational Value to Rural Communities and Mill Districts — Missionaries Doing Good — Frontier Work — A Blessing to Children.

ANY system which puts good books and current literature in free and easy reach of country people, is a benefit second only to that of public schools. Good books and periodicals are true missionaries. We who dwell in cities, with the world's daily news at our doors for a penny, and within a few steps of great free libraries, where the world's wit and wisdom may be had for the asking, can hardly appreciate the situation in country neighborhoods, where the local weekly, a few thumbed books here and there, and the rare blessing of a fresh magazine constitute the average equipment of literary privilege.

Recognition of this by public-spirited men and women has led to the existence of the Free Traveling Libraries, which are gradually being established throughout the Union. The great systems of traveling libraries which the State of New York maintains under Mr. Melvil Dewey's guidance, show the wonderful possibilities of this new method of extending the education of the people. Systems differing in minor particulars exist in different States, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, having the country-dweller's interest close at heart, is glad to present, in some detail, account of the movement in one State as indicative of its operation and possibilities in all.

In the latest report of the Wisconsin Free Library Commission, the Secretary, Frank A. Hutchins, says: The Wisconsin systems appear to be unique, in that while working almost entirely for people of isolated communities, they have both local and state supervision. No recent movement for the public weal in Wisconsin has won such quick and ready sympathy as the effort to put the best of books and current literature where country people may read them freely. Most former efforts to supply farmers and people of small hamlets with free reading have failed. Public libraries need fresh books to hold their clientage, and these books must be wisely selected. Small country libraries usually get fresh books rarely, and generally uninteresting volumes. Less than five per cent. of the public libraries started in small communities have proved permanently successful. A few years ago Captain Andrew Tainter and wife, of Menomonee, Wisconsin, made an effort to provide books for the farmers of Dunn county. They founded a beautiful library in Menomonee in memory of a deceased daughter, and made it free to all residents of the county. Their library was well managed, but Hon. J. H. Stout, one of the trustees, found that a country population of 16,000 people drew less than 3,000 volumes a year. He concluded that this was due to the difficulty of getting and returning them, and not to a lack of appreciation of their value. He decided to adapt the system of traveling libraries to suit the needs of Dunn county, and secured the co-operation of the Wisconsin Free Library Commission in perfecting his plans, selecting and buying the books and interesting the people. He then purchased a library of 500 wholesome, popular books, and divided it into sixteen small libraries, each containing thirty volumes. Each library was put up in a strong book-case which had a shelf, double doors with a lock and key, a record book for loans, printed copies of the few simple rules, borrowers' blanks, and so complete a line of equipments that it could be set up anywhere on a table or shelf and managed as an independent library. While the machinery was complete enough for its purpose, it was so simple that any intelligent person could operate it after five minutes' explanation. Mr. Stout's conditions were.

You must form local library associations of responsible people, elect a secretary to represent you in dealing with me, and a librarian to deal with you. You must agree to have the books well cared for, and to keep them in a convenient place where every resident of the neighborhood using them carefully can get them without cost. When most of the readers have read as many of the books as they wish, the library may be exchanged for another set of books.

A TYPICAL RURAL FREE LIBRARY.

His plans, made in January, 1896, matured in May, by which time sixteen local associations had complied with the requirements, and their members were anxiously awaiting the books. The delivery of the first libraries and the pleasure they gave, kindled desire in other communities; demand exceeded supply, and Mr. Stout generously raised the supply to meet the demand. Each of the first libraries sent out contained only ten books for children. Reports soon showed that the little folks hungered for more, and more books were added for them. This child-hunger for books and periodicals is constantly brought before us in pathetic facts embodied in Mr. Hutchin's report, as:

I visited the school-house one morning and found some children who were most plainly clad, but clean and wholesome-looking. In examining the school library I found about a dozen books, most of them beyond their comprehension, and a worn copy of the World's Fair number of a juvenile paper. No copy of a children's periodical was taken in the neighborhood, and this "sample copy" had gone again and again to every home and been pondered and loved and thumbed until the stained edges of its leaves were thin and cracked with the wearing of little hands, though the pictures still intact, testified to loving care. Through the kindness of friends, the Commission has been able to send to the stations thousands of copies of excellent periodicals. Boys and girls in Southern Missouri have sent cherished files of their papers for the young to their little brothers and sisters in the forests of Northern Wisconsin. A file of this character will go first to the school-house, where many of its articles will be read to the school by the teachers. It will then go from family to family. In many cases, the stories of the children's papers make the bridge from the meagre reading of the school to the books of the libraries. Many children, from homes where there is nothing to read save the most elementary school-books, do not get practice enough in reading to read easily. In some communities of foreigners, the children's periodicals attract older people by the pictures, and the whole family spell out a story to learn about the picture.

In fact, the little circulating library which has for its habitation a table in a farmhouse; or a shelf in the country store, side by side with the post office; quickly becomes a potent educational factor and a centre of intellectual activity in the community, and exercises such a marked influence for good that storekeepers troubled with loafers have shown themselves ready to take some trouble, in order to have at hand such reformatory occupation for idle hands.

Employers are becoming interested in providing free libraries for circulation among employees. W. H. Bradley, President of the Tomahawk Lumber Co., has established a free library at Tomahawk, from which he sends smaller libraries to his storekeepers in outlying hamlets for the use of mill men and farmers.

Following the inauguration of the Stout Free Traveling Libraries, came Mr. J. D. Miller, who adopted Mr. Stout's plan in the main; the individual libraries were larger, and embraced German books in the case of communities where older people could not read English. In several mill districts, he established reading-rooms, and it is to be hoped that his experiment in this line will be imitated in other places. Miss Early's work in organizing traveling libraries in Chippewa County, is particularly interesting from the fact that it was done without funds and with only the help of a few friends. Our illustrations show one of her libraries, where the folks appreciated their privileges so much that they bought a small building, papered, painted, and shelved it, and with a rug, table, chairs, and curtains fitted themselves up a cosy reading-room. Mr. Budge, the librarian, living near by, receives "a compensation," says the report, "ridiculously small in money, but inestimably large if the gratitude of one's neighbors and the consciousness of benefits conferred are reckoned at their real value."

The Klondike Band.

When last heard from, the little party of converts, under the leadership of Captain de Soto, who are marching across the continent to the Alaskan gold fields, with the purpose of founding a Gospel mission in the mining camps, had reached Liverpool, Ohio. Gospel meetings have been held at many places along the route, and the Word has been preached to large and enthusiastic gatherings. Christian churches of various denominations have been freely opened to them, and they have received the heartiest co-operation from pastors at almost every stopping-place. Many conversions have resulted from these services and multitudes have been impressed by the "testimonies." Meetings have been held at Sewickley, Pa., and New Brighton, Pa., and Rochester, East Liverpool, Toronto, Steubenville, Cadiz, O., and other places, and the evangelistic labors of the Band have been blessed to many.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

The Sunday School

The Twelve Sent Forth.

Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 20. Matt. 10 : 2-15. Golden Text, Matt. 10 : 8.

SOME such step as Christ is represented in this lesson as taking, was probably suggested by the attitude of the religious teachers of the time. Their hostility was unconcealed, and there was only too good reason for anticipating a tragical result from their envy and vindictiveness. It was a common custom for teachers in Greece and Rome, as well as Palestine, to attach to themselves some chosen pupils, who should be continually with their master, so as to learn his principles and continue his work after his death. Harmonizing the accounts of the other Evangelists, and remembering Matthew's habit of following the topical, rather than the chronological, order in his narrative, we infer that the twelve, whose names are here given, had been with Christ, by his own request, for about a year when they were sent on the mission described in the lesson. Originally there had been six: Peter and his brother Andrew; John and his brother James; Philip and Nathanael, who is also known as Bartholomew, that is the son of Tholomai. To these Christ added another James, whom Luke calls Cleopas and who is sometimes called James the less; and his brother Jude, who is sometimes called Lebbæus and sometimes Thaddeus; Matthew, who is also called Levi; Thomas, who was surnamed Didymus or the twin; Simon the Canaanite, whom Luke calls the Zealot, from his uncompromising antipathy to the Roman supremacy; and Judas Iscariot, or the man from Kerioth, who appears to have been the only one of the company who hailed from Judea, the southern country. Apparently all the others were Galileans. John and James are said to have been cousins of Christ, as their mother, Salome, is believed to have been Mary's sister. The same relationship is claimed for Jude and the other James, on the ground that their father was Joseph's brother, but there is no direct New Testament authority for either claim.

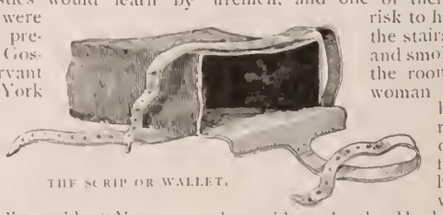
AN ORIENTAL GUEST GIVING THE SALUTATION OF PEACE.

It is difficult to understand the principle that guided Christ in the selection of these early friends among his followers. They were not rich nor influential, or, if we may judge by the questions they put to their master, were the slowest of learners. John and Peter were the only two who had become known. Also were prominent for the events after Christ's Ascension. It is clear that except these two, the apostles were men of obscure lives and future, and Judas was the most prominent. It could not have been from such companions that Paul received his call to the ministry. The explanation is the same as in the case of Paul's conversion. Christ's mission was not to the rich and influential, but to the poor and ignorant. From the start it was clear that Jesus did not share the popular prejudice. He had himself preached to a woman of Samaria, and he had some other reason than his enemies for forbidding his disciples going to them on this occasion. Probably he thought the disciples were not yet prepared for so difficult a task as preaching to such a people. Missionaries tell us that at this day a man needs considerable skill and learning to preach to Hindoos, Buddhists, and Mohammedans. But the duty of sending missionaries to the heathen is imperative. A penurious Christian once refused to contribute to missions on the ground that his first duty was to his neighbors. "How large is your farm?" asked the missionary. The man told him. "How deep is it?" "Well, I never thought of that, but I suppose I own all under it to the centre of the earth." "Well, then, I want your subscription for China," replied the missionary, "to give the Gospel to the man whose land joins yours at the bottom."

The lost sheep. One of the rabbinical legends relates that when Moses was keeping the flock of his father-in-law, a lamb strayed away. Looking for it, Moses saw it on the mountains and went after it. The lamb walked along dangerous passes, on the edge of precipices and over rugged heights, but ever the shepherd followed, keeping it in sight. At last, on reaching a mountain spring, the lamb stopped to drink. Moses suffered it to satisfy its thirst and then seeing it hesitate as to its way, lifted it in his arms and carried it back to the fold. When God called him to deliver his people and Moses asked why the duty was committed to him, God said that the man who had been so tender and persistent in saving the lost lamb, had the qualities required for the work of saving his people. This is, of course, only a legend, but we know that the Great Shepherd chooses his servants for the same reason.

Neither two coats. They were to go as they were. Two coats were regarded as a luxury and he who took an extra coat with him on his journey was looked upon as a man of substance who was solicitous about his health and comfort. They were to be so absorbed in their message that they had no thought to spare for their own appearance or pleasure. It is related of Howard the prison philanthropist that although a man of culture and although he had visited every great city of Europe, he was never seen in a picture-gallery nor at any of the great shows which educated travelers generally visit. On his arrival in any city no matter how interesting were its art-treasures, he never went near them, but inquired for the prison and went there to investigate.

Provide neither gold nor silver. This journey was to be a many-sided test. The Apostles were to be tested as to their faith. A man who starts on a journey with no money in his pockets would naturally expect to be soon involved in difficulty. The Apostles proved their faith in Christ by going without money, as he directed. Then it was a test of Christ's power. They were to learn that when they went forth in obedience to him they would be provided for. It was also a test of the people. The Apostles would learn by their treatment who were and who were not prepared to receive the Gospel. An eminent servant of Christ in New York had a call to undertake a journey. He immediately set about preparing for it. His wife seeing him packing his valise, said: "You cannot go. The fare is thirty dollars, and there are not five in the house." He replied: "If God is sending me he will provide the means." About an hour before the time set for his departure, his valise was packed, and he was ready to start, but still there were no funds. As he waited, the letter carrier knocked and handed in a letter from a stranger. The writer said that she had been reading about his work in an old number of The Christian Herald, and feeling that such a man must often have need of money, she sent him thirty dollars. The bills were enclosed. "I told you," said the recipient to his wife, "that if God were sending me, he would provide the funds."



THE SCRIP OR WALLET.

If the house be worthy. It was a privilege to entertain Christ's messengers. It was not they, but the family with whom they stayed, who enjoyed the honor. The blessing is promised to those who give even a cup of cold water to a follower of Christ. No one conferred a favor by entertaining a disciple; a favor was conferred upon the host. The question was whether he was worthy of the privilege. In South America there is a tree called "Tamai Capsi," which has a strange power of attracting and distilling moisture. Wherever it grows, the parched ground around it becomes fertile. However arid the country may be, the rain tree extracts moisture from the reluctant air and a delightful dew falls on the land shaded by its branches. It is so that the presence of a true Christian in a home may become a channel of blessing to all who are under its roof.

THE ORIENTAL COAT.

Let your peace return to you. This was to be the only result of a lack of hospitality. There was a time when the Apostles wanted to call down fire from heaven on people who shut their doors against Christ. That was not Christ's spirit. If people rejected them it was their loss, and the blessings they would have imparted remained with them. When the customary salutation of "Peace be to this house" failed, it was not to turn it into a curse. The Gospel is offered, but if people shut their hearts against it we are not to be resentful. Our peace is undisturbed. They, not we, are the sufferers. In Hood's beautiful poem of The Lady's Dream, the lady sorrows that during her life she spent her income on her own pleasures and did nothing for the poor who were dying of want around her. When she saw them in the next world, they did not reprove her, but she mourned because if she had relieved them a great happiness would have been her's. Their faces told her that it was too late then to render them a service which she might have rendered in the world.

More tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah. Even moral corruption does not involve so terrible a doom as does rejection of Christ. The offer of salvation is so great a blessing, and it cost so much, that to reject it, argues a condition beyond the reach of hope. A man who would neglect or refuse it must be utterly lost. Nothing more can be done for him. A house was on fire, and it was thought that every one in it had been rescued. But the crowd watching it, saw a woman's haggard face at an upper window. They called to the firemen, and one of them, at imminent risk to his life, climbed the stairs through flame and smoke, and reached the room in which the woman was. She was busily collecting rags and scraps of paper. The fireman urged her to come with him, but she paid no heed. He laid hold of her and tried to carry her down, but she fought him so fiercely that he was obliged to put her down. She would not leave her rubbish, and the fireman, realizing that she was crazy, was compelled to leave her to her fate. There are many people who would resent being called crazy who perish eternally through similar folly. They are too busy with their stocks and bonds to pay any heed to the offer of salvation

A REFUGE FOR SLAVES.

M. Chatelain Reports the Arrival of His Party at Caconda and the Selection of a Site for Colony Number One of the Philafrican League.

FROM letters already published our readers have learned the safe arrival at Benguella, on the West Coast of Africa, of the devoted men and women who have gone from this country to establish a refuge for emancipated slaves. In a letter from Hon Heli Chatelain just received, he describes Caconda, the district which he has decided to establish the first colony, and the arrangements which have been made to shelter the party until permanent buildings can be erected. Mr. Chatelain speaks highly of the hardships encountered, which, however, have evidently been blessed. But he is full of faith and hope, and is entering on his work with firm confidence in the success which God will give to this disinterested effort to succor the most miserable people on earth. It is a happy privilege to cooperate with men who go forth in such a spirit. The work they have gone to do appeals to the sympathy of every heart in which Christ has implanted compassion for the helpless. While Mr. Chatelain and his friends are braving the perils of the climate and are toiling in the field, we at home may strengthen their hands by praying for them and supplying the money they need to carry on the work. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be glad to receive any contributions its readers send for this glorious cause, and will duly acknowledge them in its columns. Following is Mr. Chatelain's letter:

POLITICAL PRISONERS AT LOANDA.

CACONDA, WEST AFRICA, Nov. 20, '97.

I am thankful to be able to report that our party has safely reached Caconda. Here we are to establish the first station of the Philafrican League. A few days have already been spent in looking for a temporary and permanent site, and in securing information as to climate, resources, etc., of the different spots. This is a fine upland country, with no end of eligible sites; so the difficulty consists chiefly in choosing the place best suited for our purpose. During the rainy season—from now till the middle of April, or beginning of May—we cannot well make adobe bricks, and must content ourselves with wooden structures, plastered with mud. These are as comfortable as the adobe buildings, but less durable. In a few days we shall probably move into a rented house, near the final site. We have the choice of several.

For the present the party is encamped in the Hanha division of the Caconda district, in a house of Captain Theodore Cruz, the "Chefe" of said division, who is very friendly. The Governor of Benguella gave him instructions to help us in every way. The Chefe of the whole district of Caconda, whom I saw yesterday, is also profuse in his offers of assistance. But he is about to leave his post, while Captain Cruz is permanently established in this region.

Since we left Benguella the health of the party has been very fair. The Governor and all people in Benguella warned me that it was foolhardy for me to undertake the wagon journey in the condition in which I then was, and advised me to make the worst of the journey by hammock and join the party at Catengue, or higher up. But I declined to accompany the party, and gained in strength, instead of getting worse. At Catengue, however, I got wet in a night-storm, and rheumatism with fever was the result. As soon as I undertook to walk one trek, so that Brother Lea might have my seat in the wagon and rest from riding the mule, but a severe and a prolonged attack of fever proved that I had overtaxed my strength. Since reaching the end of the wagon journey my health has again improved, so that I have been able to go about looking for a site.

As soon as our stuff was dispatched from the Custom House and my attack of fever had relented so far that I could, from my bed, superintend the packing or repacking of our effects and goods, God opened the way for us to go to the interior without the dividing of the party.

The Praetoris to whom I had sent a letter asking him to take us up to Caconda in his wagon, declared that he had entirely given up the transport business and preferred to continue his connection with Penrise, the English hunter and collector, so the next best thing to do in this emergency was for me to hunt up enough carriers to take me to Hanha, the first inhabited spot, or to Caconda, where I might secure carriers to bring up the rest of the party. One or two of the brethren could have accompanied me, but I failed to find the necessary men. I trusted my God, and we all prayed for some suitable means of transport to turn up. As I anticipated, it came as soon as we were ready for it. Eleven wagons of the Boers arrived from Caconda, and one of these wagons had not been engaged beforehand by the traders. I was fortunate enough to secure it, and we were barely able to finish packing, so as to get off with the other wagons. The leader of this party of Boer drivers was Hans van de Merwe, the landrost, or headman, of the Boers in the Caconda district. During the three weeks of our inland journey I had a fine chance to become acquainted with him, and the present moral, social, and political condition of this interesting colony of white Protestants in the midst of black heathen and white Catholics in Central Africa.

The Portuguese chief of the Hanha district, Capt. Cruz, had come down to Benguella with the Boers, and he as well as the "landrost" seemed anxious to have us in their neighborhood, and advised us to settle in Hanha. Now that I have seen the country with my own eyes, I find that while we could no doubt be of service to the Boers, and find plenty of fine sites in Hanha, there are two mighty objections to our settling there permanently: 1. The nearest native towns are from three to five hours—nine to fifteen miles—away from Cruz or the "landrost," and the natives have a terrible fear of the Boers, who are rather brutal in their way of handling the native population. 2. The Boers do not raise enough food for themselves, and as the natives are far away, we should have great difficulty in securing the needed food supplies.

Nearer Caconda, however, where the climate is as good as in Hanha, the native towns are plentiful, and I have finally decided to choose a site near the headwaters of the Cubale River, half way between the two Boer colonies of the Cubale and Que rivers, one day's ride or so from Caconda, in a region where the natives are willing to work and still relatively free from the corrupting influences of the rum distilleries. The district of Caconda is cursed with an ever-growing number of small distilleries where sweet potatoes are converted into rum. Boers, Portuguese and natives are all engaged in the slave trade. One man who is not a hypocrite told me frankly that he had bought and sold hundreds of slaves. The chefe of Caconda told me in the presence of several persons that the practice is so general that he is utterly powerless to suppress it. Here not only do the parents sell their children, but the children often sell their old parents, which is worse than I ever saw before. Kidnapping is an everyday occurrence, which causes no surprise to anybody. The condition of things is worse than I could imagine, and is incurable for the present. All we can do is to relieve the suffering, patiently and modestly witness to the truth, and trust in God for the righting—in his time—of this great wrong.

About Nov. 22 I returned safely to Capt. Cruz's place and found our party still in good health. This is a very sickly season. Many are down with the fever, especially children, and one has already died, so we ought to be thankful for being spared. To-morrow morning I expect the span of twenty oxen which is to take our wagon up, one day's journey, to what is called Ludich's place. It is the abandoned shanty and farm of Piet Ludich, a Boer who has moved further south, and we can use it without expense. Two days will suffice to repair the shanty, and a few more days to add to water-proof grass huts. Mr. Behan, of Cape Colony, who will be our nearest neighbor—about one and one half hours away—says he will supply us with seeds and young plants and plow the ground for us. We can also get from him plenty of vegetables—cabbage of various sorts, sweet and white potatoes, beans, peas, etc. He is accustomed to go hunting in the region where we propose to establish the station proper, and will go with the exploring party.

Another Boer has offered to accompany us, and (for pay) help us to build, cultivate the land, hunt, etc. Native labor is cheap, but not plentiful in this season of planting and sowing. Fig trees and peach trees, goyava and other fruit trees come well. Strawberries and blackberries, etc., are always obtainable. Wheat grows well, but the locusts have destroyed crops for the last two years. A cow costs about twenty dollars, a trained oxen twenty-five dollars. We have decided to accept the offer of a Portuguese friend who will give us two hundred and fifty dollars for our mule, which is nearly fifty dollars more than the animal cost us. Two riding bulls will cost only sixty, and do us better service.

As a rule we have pleasant weather in the morning and early afternoon, then the clouds gather in the evening, and at night we have some cold showers and a few thunder-claps. In December or January there is a dry spell, during which we may be able to put up more comfortable abodes on the final site and settle down to work. I have already received the promise of some children. HELI CHATELAIN.

NATIVE CHIEF AND SUITE AT LOMOE, AFRICA.

A RUM-LADEN CARAVAN.

A Maori Chief's Dying Appeal.

For many years, says an exchange, that portion of New Zealand occupied by the Maoris (natives) was under prohibition law, while the adjacent territory occupied by white people was under license. By and bye the whites began flooding the native territory with liquor. Seeing its blasting effects, the Chief Wahanui and others were sent to the Government as bearers of a petition, signed by the leading chiefs of the district and other natives to the number of 1,400, praying the Government to make it illegal for any liquor to be sent into the Rohi Potae (Rim of the Hat), as they called their immense tract of country. The petition was granted, and for years no liquor was sold in the district. The white man then began introducing his liquor, and in 1894 the great Chief Rewi, on his deathbed, telegraphed to Lord Glasgow, who had just arrived in the colony:

To the Governor of New Zealand:

Oh, Governor, welcome to New Zealand! Long may you live! This is my first request, that you prevent strong drink being allowed to come within the Rohi Potae. This my first request will be my last.

The request of Rewi was granted for a time, but now the drink traffic is resumed, and the natives are again protesting against it.

An Anti-Footbinding Crusade.

The daughters of Rev. James MacGowan, an American missionary in China, are now conducting a crusade against the brutal practice of footbinding. These girls have started their reforms where they teach. Every Chinese girl who comes into the school is asked to sign a pledge never to let her feet be bound.

"No pledge, no education" is the motto. If a girl refuses to sign this pledge she may not enter the school, and this is a disgrace as well as a disappointment, for Chinese children are beginning to show a decided eagerness for American learning, as they call it. When once the Chinese girl signs this pledge, and refrains from footbinding, she becomes a strong convert, for she soon sees for herself how much better off she is than her crippled sister. The MacGowan girls have formed what is known as the Anti-Foot Binding Society, and all their converts who show a desire to work against footbinding are enrolled as members and rank in the society according to their enthusiasm.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Teaching Children Useful Arts.

Work Pretty as Play, Play Practical as Work, in Home, School and Hospital.

THE tendency to teach children useful employment is growing. It is one to be heartily commended. It is altogether a mistake to let the restless energy of childhood fret itself out in futile undertakings or wear itself out in mischief, when by a little wise direction it can be converted into a force of utility and beauty, which will be at the same time a joy and a delight to itself. Work can be made as attractive as play, and play as profitable as work, and that without any forcing of the child-nature. Kindergarten, since Froebel, the childrens' friend, set forth his plan and made the path of learning fair with gifts and song, have recognized this fact and have so blended play and learning that the dividing line can not be drawn. Institutions of learning everywhere are teaching manual arts to children in a way that makes labor sweet and interesting. Mission schools and social settlements are doing vast good by turning idle and mischievous little folks into thrifty housewives and good mechanics. Doll-play is being utilized to teach children, not only dress-making but history, geography and foreign languages, for dolls go back and forth, visiting foreign countries, wearing national costumes and expressing themselves (through their "mamas' lips") to the best of their ability in French or German, as the case may be.

In hospitals for sick children, useful arts are employed to relieve the tedium of convalescence, and to aid in cure, the while the little body—through its very misfortune—is coming into an education and preparation for usefulness when health returns. One can hardly see how this principle could be applied to the relief of cripples, yet in the Daisy Fields Home and Hospital for Crippled Children, a striking illustration is afforded of its benefits. The object of this institution is to take little cripples from the great city and make them over into healthy happy children. They are carried out doors, day after day, and are encouraged to such play and exercise as their condition permits. They are taught gardening and take great interest in their flowers and vegetables. In doors the older children help wash dishes and keep the place in order. Some dainty knitting, reading and sewing makes up a day so busy and happy that childhood is helped to forget and even to forgive. Cooking is great fun, little girls taking vast delight in brewing broth and making pies.

BUSY LITTLE COOKS AT THE DAISY FIELDS HOME, ENGLEWOOD, N. J.

French Marriages.

Miss Alice L. Bellamy, a lady who has resided in France many years, states in The Century on "French Wives and Mothers," and says some very interesting observations on the present status of marriage in that country. She says among other things:

"The mariage de convenance, which cannot in many instances be considered as a failure, is the rule in France. Marriages are arranged by the parents of the young people, and the latter have little to say in the matter. The young man is generally introduced to the young lady by his mother, who has made the acquaintance of the girl's mother, and has found out all about her dowry. If the young man likes the girl, he tells his mother, who then makes the proposal to the girl's mother. If the latter accepts, the young man is allowed to call on the young lady, and to see her in the presence of her mother. If he likes her, he tells his mother, who then arranges with the girl's mother the amount of the dowry, and the time when the marriage shall take place. The young man is then allowed to call on the young lady alone, and to take her out for a walk. Sometimes the young people are allowed to correspond with each other, but this is not usual. The young man is not allowed to make a present to the young lady, except a bouquet of flowers, and the young lady is not allowed to make a present to the young man, except a pair of slippers, which she has worked herself. The young man is not allowed to kiss the young lady, except on the hand, and the young lady is not allowed to kiss the young man, except on the cheek. The young man is not allowed to marry the young lady, except with the consent of her parents, and the young lady is not allowed to marry the young man, except with the consent of his parents. The young man is not allowed to marry the young lady, except with the consent of her parents, and the young lady is not allowed to marry the young man, except with the consent of his parents."

On Keeping Good-Natured.

How hard it is to keep one's good temper when, after applying his best energy in former days, when a girl was taken out of a convent to be shown the man to whom she was about to be married, is now a thing of the past. It must be acknowledged, however, that marriages are still made up, often too hastily and superficially, by nicely balanced family arrangements, and by the intervention of friends. Nevertheless, attraction and repulsion are now taken into consideration, and a girl is no longer forced to marry a man whom she positively dislikes. I could quote instances in the very highest (historical) aristocracy, where, at the last moment, after the trousseau had been sent in (marked, according to custom, with the united initial letters of the two names elaborately embroidered), and all the social preparations made, the marriage was broken off because the bride declined the man."

On Keeping Good-Natured.

How hard it is to keep one's good temper when, after applying his best energy to some special departments of church work, one finds himself thwarted or hindered by the indifference of his fellow-members, observes a writer in The Congregationalist. When conscientious and disinterested effort, inspired by genuine religious zeal, is thus embarrassed, it is a triumph of grace if one keeps sweet and endeavors to toil on instead of abandoning the work altogether.

The Young Mind's Awakening.

The great event in every young man's life, says a thoughtful writer, is his awakening. There comes a time when he is aroused from the dreamy carelessness of boyhood by the opening possibilities of life. Then he drops into indifference and begins life in an easy, shiftless way, or flatters away his chances. If he comes to a deep earnest purpose to be his best, and to do his best, he arrives early at the highest rank among equals in business, profession or trade. Enthusiasm leads one to attempt the seemingly impossible. Faith will achieve the marvelous. Effort will seize transcendent leadership in the chosen sphere. These forces in youth look forward while age looks backward. They make youth radically venturesome, while age becomes conservatively cautious. Youth may make mistakes, but is doing something. Age, less active, may be less mistaken. It is well for enthusiasm and energy to be guarded by experience, but not to be paralyzed by fear.

Indifferent Scholars.

It is a mistake to conclude that the dull scholar will necessarily grow up to be a dull and unambitious man. A recent writer gives some remarkable instances pointing to a contrary conclusion:

Isaac Barron was a very indifferent scholar, and a source of great anxiety and grief to his parents until a wise teacher started him on a new and noble career. The same was true of Adam Clarke, Dean Swift, and Dr. Chalmers—very dull boys, requiring the patience of Job to train them; they were encouraged finally into the most creditable endeavors. Newton was idle and dull, as a boy. Many years ago, a teacher taught a school in Charlton, Mass. The worst boy in town was one of his pupils. He had been such a nuisance in school in the past that the school committee advised the teacher to expel him before the close of the first week. The teacher, however, thought he might try him awhile, and so declined to accept their advice. Taking the youth aside one day he told him frankly that he had been advised to expel him, as nothing could be done with him in school—that he understood he was the worst boy in town, and always made trouble for his teachers. But he assured him that he did not sympathize with these views—he was sure that he possessed talents, and could distinguish himself in any study, and completely blot out the bad record he had made. The result was, that the young man surprised his companions and the community by his future good behavior and excellent scolarship. It was the beginning of a new and noble career. He became Governor of the State of New York, a member of Congress, and was in the Cabinet of two Presidents—the Hon. Wm. H. Marcy.

Duties of the Family.

The duties of a family, says Archdeacon Farrar, are on a larger scale, the duties of a nation. The children of a nation are its dearest, its best, its most inestimable treasures. Not its coal, not its commerce, not its gold, not its armies, not its history, not even its freedom, but just its children are its future. Its children are the trustees of its prosperity. Its children will be men of England in those dark and perplexing days which seem to lie before another generation, when we are mouldering in our forgotten graves.

LEARNING TO PRAY.

LORD JESUS, teach us how to pray
For things we need from day to day
With all our hearts this truth believe,
"The things we ask we shall receive."

Lord, help us ask alone our needs,
And to our thoughts and ways take hee
Thy blessings use with Godly fear,
In all our lives thy name revere.

Of asking may we never tire—
Keep asking on with large desire;
Yet give us grace to trust and wait
Thy blessings coming, small or great.

And if a crumb should be our lot,
Yet may it bring the blessing sought.
With holy zeal our hearts inspire
With thee to rise each day still higher.

Lincoln and the Birds.

AT THE present time, when the a tation against the slaughter of bir is growing in many States of t
Union, the following anecdo which is related of Abraham Lincoln, w be read with interest. The narrator one who knew Lincoln well, and who,
the time of the incident, was his fello traveller. "We passed through a thick of wild-plum and crab-apple trees, a stopped to water our horses. One of t party came up alone a we inquired: 'Where Lincoln?' 'Oh,' he plied, 'when I saw hi
last he had caught t young birds which t wind had blown out their nest, and he w hunting for the nest, th
he might put them ba in it.'" In an address d livered before the Ame can Humane Associati
recently, Miss Caroli Spencer reviewed most terestingly the growth the popular crusade in l half of the feathered son sters. She said:

Audubon Societies ha been formed in several Stat this year, and there is a te dency toward radical legis tion on the subject. But should remember that the good things have come the eleventh hour; th
many species of our sweet songsters are already extin and we must move quickly we would escape the known horrors of a birdl world. The new Societi are laboring to establi
"Bird Day" in the pub schools of their respecti States. This is an excelle idea so far as it goes; b one day in the year w scarcely counteract the b lessons of the other thr

while our pupils see th own mothers encouragi the slaughter. First, shouldstop the wickedtraff and then we should make systematic effort to bri
the study of living natu into the curriculum, not on once a year, but every week

We have laws against bird-killing in so of the States, but they are of little use, as t injury is seldom done in the presence of w nesses who are likely to make trouble abo it. The South especially needs education a legislation on this line. The beautiful singe of Florida and Louisiana are being destroy by thousands; the negro children being ve active in this ruffianly and ruinous work. I sides the terrible loss to the community, thi of the effect of such deeds upon the doers class that most needs every softening and r fining influence. It would do great good, the and elsewhere, if this idle roaming about wi
"shooting-irons" of any sort were prohibite at least to boys.

The bird's enemies are always active, b their friends are for the most part tardi aroused, and easily put down. The Mass chusetts legislature recently passed an ac long desired by many humane persons, again the wearing of plumage. This law should l easy to enforce, for no evasion is possible, a a few examples would go a long way. B the officers did not wish to enforce it, a they soon found a judge to provide the techn cal excuse that is always ready in such case

There are among the readers of Th CHRISTIAN HERALD many who take deep interest in the welfare of the bird and who would be glad to see widespre state legislation on the subject.

haracter Revealed in Handwriting—Palmistry—Setting the Table—The Matter of Sun-Parlors—Training a Daughter, etc.

WELL," said the minister's wife, who looked rather tired as she dropped into the rocking chair nd stretched out her feet to the glowing re, "I, for one, believe that character is vealed in handwriting. When I receive letter written in a feeble, scrawly hand, letter hard to make out, because the n's nd the u's are exactly alike, and the i's e not dotted, nor the t's crossed, I put y correspondent down as a half-educated rson of slip-shod habits, and when a tter is black and blotted, I say, there is hasty and impetuous disposition which nnot take time to write with care, and short. I do read people by the sort of nd they write."

"Then," asked the doctor, who had een called in to see one of the children, ow do you account, Mrs. Homily, for e fact that my wife and Mr. Honeyan's wife, and a half-dozen other ladies o went to school together in the forties, rite precisely alike; their penmanship does t vary a particle: there are the identil down-strokes heavy, and up-strokes ght in their writing, and what is true of em is true of many other women. My iend, who is an editor, tells me that he n absolutely judge of the age of an unown contributor, of the period when he she went to school, by the style of the ndwriting. One style is taught in one a, and a different style in another, and e young people then in training receive nd keep it. Where does your theory me in there, Mrs. Homily?"

"Oh, dear me, Dr. Pillbox," exclaimed e lady, "I am not so silly as to carry on argument with you. You are partly ght. Nevertheless, granting all you claim r training, individuality does creep into iting after people leave schools, and ere is such a thing, too, as a family nd. The hands of a race are similar, here is often some distinguishing peculity of conformation, a long or a short umb, some feature of wrist or fingers hich tells on muscular action, and affects e writing. You are right so far as you , doctor, but I go farther, that 's all."

* * *

Miss Emily Fairblow had flitted in, and e introduced a new subject.

She pulled off a dainty glove, and disayed a white, soft and beautiful hand, ith finely grained skin and tapering ngers.

"Mrs. Homily," she asked, "do you beeve in palmistry?"

"Not the very least in the world, my ear," replied the lady very positively. Your pretty hand only shows that you ve not had any rough work to do; you aven't scrubbed or scoured, or milked ows, or made butter. You have led a shelred and luxurious life, without a rough ind to intrude itself, and if there has een hardship in the home, you have not hared it. Your soft hand tells me that."

"I have seen a man take such a hand as at," said Uncle James, "and make out wonderful romance from it, about the fe-line and the line of intellect, and the ttle dimples and indentations, which emed to him most eloquent."

"No doubt," commented the schoolistress, "Miss Fairblow's hand will be ken by, or given to, some adoring suitor t, and he and she together will discover hat it holds for them the keys of romance nd of many an unsolved mystery. But e are begging the question. I imagine hat the hand being a very sensitive inrument, and carrying out the commands the brain, does become illuminated to students of human character. As they udy its multitudinous lines and markings, ey put this and that together, as one uts together the bits of a dissected map, nd they often approach the truth about eople with a happiness of guess-work, hich is positively startling. Palmistry a fascinating pursuit. But it is uncanny have one of its professors take your and and tell you things about yourself, hich you fondly supposed to be hidden om all eyes, and known alone to the searcher of hearts. We do not mind the complimentary things we hear, it is the unflattering truths which make us shiver. And most of us are quite aware that we deserve to hear unflattering truths sometimes."

A rap at the door introduced a neighbor's little son, who handed me my letters. The first one I opened was from Mabel Duncan, a young girl who wanted to know how to set the table.

"I am the youngest girl at home," writes Mabel, "and I have to set the table. This is my work. And I want to do it just right."

"For pity's sake!" said Uncle James, "the child's daft. Anybody can set a table. It's only putting the dishes on. What folly!"

"You are a man, James!" I said, dismissing him to his ignorance. "Mabel shall have the information she asks for."

"In the first place, Mabel, you need two table-cloths. A thick undercloth of felt or of canton flannel, firmly fastened on the table and pinned at the corners, should go under your white cloth. Then, if you have a pretty centre-piece of linen, daintily embroidered, put that in the middle of your table."

"Stuff!" ejaculated Uncle James, "and nonsense!"

"Jim, dear," I said, "read your book, and don't interrupt. When it comes to carving the roast, you may speak, not before!"

"The next thing, Mabel, is to set plates all round the table. On these you will set other plates in their regular order, plates, that is, which are to be removed with courses. Lay knives on the left and forks on the right of every plate; also spoons beside the forks. If you use small butter plates, or larger plates for bread and butter, they should stand at the right of the place-plate. Put your bread-platter on one corner, your butter-dish on an opposite corner. Set a goblet or a tumbler at every place. Let the tray with cups and saucers, sugar-bowl, cream-jug, etc., stand before your mother. The principal meat-dish, turkey, roast beef, or whatever it is, may be set before your father. Unless you do not mind crowding up your table, you will set your vegetable dishes on a side table, help them from these and return them to that place."

"This advice," said the minister's wife, "may help Mabel, but I want her to be told, too, that every family has its own way of serving food, consequently its own way of setting tables. Her mother's way is most likely the best one for her to follow."

"I wish," said I, tranquilly—for I am never disturbed by the plain speaking of my friends—"that you could all have seen a dainty tea-set which was on a table at a home where I was lately a guest. The teacups and saucers, teapot, sugar-bowl, and cream-pitcher were of ravishing blue china, the loveliest thing I ever saw in its way. In gilt letters around all the pieces ran the poem, a line or so on each:

Should auld acquantance be forgot,
An' never brought to mind, etc., and it seemed to me very charming to drink my tea out of a cup with this legend:

We'll tak a cup of kindness yet
For the days of auld lang syne.

"It is to be hoped," said Mrs. Homily, "that the owner of that same blue china will wash it herself. If she trusts it to the hands of a hired girl, it will soon be broken or chipped."

Remarked the little school-ma'am:

"In the education of the period, our young girls should have a training in good housekeeping, and in the proper care of their possessions. Our grandmothers always washed their own teacups, and so do many careful housekeepers still. I confess that it always gives me a pang when I see young women who know a little of nearly everything under the canopy, except the science of housekeeping. Yet, if they are to marry, they must know how to go to market, how to cook, how to wash and iron, how to sweep, how to dust. Nobody can ever have these things done as they ought to be, unless she has gone through a course of doing them herself."

"Mothers should insist on making their daughters practical. Some mothers are foolishly afraid that work will ruin their daughter's hands. As if the very prettiest hands in the world were not those which have learned the fine art and beautiful accomplishment of ministering to the dear ones at home."

It mothers will allow their girls to take a little responsibility, and permit them to keep house turn about, each daughter assuming the reins for a week or a fortnight, they will find themselves lightened of some of their burdens, and the young women will not only thank them in future, but acquit themselves very creditably, for the most part, in the present time.

SUN-PARLORS, my dear Clara, are enclosures on that side of the house where the blessed sun looks in first and lingers longest in the day. They are usually enclosed with glass, are furnished with chairs, tables and rugs, and the fortunate people who can enjoy them may sit there with work or books and take splendid baths of sunlight. Anybody who has a sunny bed-room or sitting-room in her house, may do the same. Plenty of light is as good for human beings as it is for plants.

* * *

I wish to thank several friends who have lately written very beautiful letters to me, letters too personal to be printed, but very precious. Mrs. O. L. D. an Iowa correspondent, may be assured that my holidays and all my days since then were made brighter by her words of cheer. Mary E. Mc F., a friend whose home is in Indiana, wrote me lately a letter full of inspiration and suggestive thought. I know that she is a friend worth having. A lovely young girl, may God bless her, sent me a list of promises taken from the Word. They came one morning when nothing was quite right, and I felt depressed and anxious, though God's child ought never to feel so, and what do you think was the first one on which my eyes fell? This: "I will go before you and make the crooked places straight and the rough places plain." Was not that an uplifting message?

An Ancient Painting Discovered.

Much interest has been awakened among Biblical scholars in Europe in consequence of the reported discovery by Signor Marucci, a noted Italian archæeol ogist, of a great wall painting in the palace of Tiberius, the existence of which had been till now unknown. It is said that there is a long inscription on the canvas, containing the name, "Christus." Signor Marucci declares that the painting represents the preparation for the Crucifixion. Around the cross are soldiers bearing letters, and under each soldier is written his name. Among the names is that of Pontius Pilate. The figures measure fifteen centimetres in height.

"I was run down,
Could not eat,
Could not sleep,
My back ached
And I was dizzy.
I was nervous
And easily exhausted.
I began taking
Hood's Sarsaparilla.
Now I can eat well
And sleep soundly.
I am strong and work
Is not a burden."

Progress of Medical Science in Lung Diseases.

A little book, published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 55th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Lung Diseases. Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption are fully explained, their differences shown, and their cure by medicated-air inhalations pointed out.

Dr. Hunter was the founder of the practice of treating lungs by direct medicated-air inhalations—the inventor of the first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of lung complaints, and the discoverer of the only germicide which cures consumption by destroying the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs of the patient. His treatment consists of three parts—1st., breathing into the lungs specific germicidal remedies three times a day, by means of his inhaling instruments; 2nd, anointing the chest with antiseptic oils which volatilize by the warmth of the body and surround the patient by a zone of medicated air; and 3rd, filling the chamber in which he sleeps with medicated vapors, which soothe the inflamed bronchial tubes and air cells, and keep up a constant curative action on the lungs. All that medical science has yet found out for the relief and cure of lung complaints is embodied in Dr. Hunter's treatment. Patients of the highest intelligence and respectability in all parts of the Union have been cured by it and publicly attest its wonderful success. Case 1.—A. L. Peer, Esq., of Newark, N. J. was reduced to the last stage of misery and exhaustion by lung disease. His physician and family gave him up as hopeless. His death was looked for from day to day. He had repeated hemorrhages, great difficulty in breathing, and was so terribly emaciated and weak that he could not stand or turn over in bed without assistance. Dr. Hunter's treatment was undertaken after everything else had been tried and failed. It stopped the hemorrhages, cleansed the lungs of great quantities of foul matter, enabled him to breathe freely again, and so built up his flesh and vitality that he now weighs 175 lbs. (a gain of over 40 lbs.), and is strong and well. Those who are afflicted or anxious about their lungs can call upon or write to Mr. Peer, at 179 Washington Street, Newark, N. J., and such as wish a copy of the book can obtain it free by addressing Dr. Hunter, at 117 West 45th Street, New York City.

Lincoln's Religion.

Evidence from his Lips and Pen of his Faith in God and the Christian Religion.

BY REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

LINCOLN, early in life, was sceptical, was even atheistical, but the full ripe Lincoln, the great ruler of a great nation was a Christian believer. He had an unfaltering faith in the Bible. At the annual meeting of the Springfield, Ill., Bible Society, he made

It seems to me that nothing short of infinite wisdom could have devised and given to man this excellent and perfect moral code. It is suited to men in all the conditions of life and includes all the duties they owe to their Creator, to themselves and their fellowmen.

He so often quoted from the Bible. His great speech in Chicago, July 9, 1858, just after his nomination for the United States Senatorship at Springfield, was built on this text which he used, "A house divided against itself cannot stand." In his second inaugural, which is one of the most permanent literary records of the nation, he devotes nearly one-third of the space to a terrible arraignment of the national sin, beginning with "Woe unto the world because of offences, for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence came," etc., and closing with "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

Private Darby of the Confederate Army, Company K, Tenth Alabama Volunteers, who was seriously wounded at the battle of Sharpsburg, tells a beautiful story in point here: "As I lay suffering and weak from loss of blood, a gentleman in citizen's clothes bent over and in a gentle voice said, 'My lad you are very young. How old are you?' 'I am sixteen and am dying. Will you be kind enough to send this Bible to my mother?' He said: 'We will not let you die and you shall take the Bible home yourself.' As the man walked away I called him back and said, 'What is your name?' He said, 'It is Abraham Lincoln.' I was nursed tenderly and after months of suffering I recovered and was notified I was to be exchanged. As I was about to leave, the officer handed me a small package. On the train I opened it. It was my mother's Bible with a card with this written on it: 'Take this book of God to your mother. A. Lincoln.' The card was at the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes and three verses were heavily marked in pencil with the letter L. These are the verses: the first, 'Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them.' The thirteenth verse, 'Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man;' and the fourteenth verse, 'For God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil. By the time I reached home my mother's Bible and Lincoln's Bible had saved my soul and I felt I was converted."

In the month of February, 1860, on a Sunday morning there appeared a stranger at the meeting at the Five Points House of Industry. He was asked to speak to the children which he did about the Bible and Christ and duty in so attractive a manner, that the children cried "go on," which he attempted to do. The teacher asked his name and he said "Abraham Lincoln." He had come to New York to deliver the Cooper Union address that gave him national fame as an orator. And he spent his Sunday morning in leading up a poor class to Christ.

Lincoln believed in a personal God. Two days after the Cooper Union address, at a prayer-meeting

[illegible]

Passing through Philadelphia on his way to his inaugural February 22nd, 1861, he closed his address as follows:

I have said nothing but what I am willing to live by, and if it be the pleasure of Almighty God, to die by.

He had implicit faith in special Divine Providence. At the notification of his nomination to the Presidency the first time in his letter of acceptance dated Springfield, May 23d, 1860, among other things he said:

Imploring the assistance of Divine Providence I am most happy to cooperate for the practical success of the principles declared by the convention.

On leaving Springfield for his inaugural, February 11th, 1861, he said:

On the Almighty Being I place my reliance for support. And I hope you my friends will all pray that I may receive that divine assistance without which I cannot succeed, but with which success is certain.

Reliance in the providence of God was the main thought which found utterance in the speeches he made in the cities he visited on his route to the inaugural. At Columbus, Ohio, he said:

I cannot but turn and look for the support, without which it will be impossible for me to perform that great task. I turn there and look to the great American people and to that God who has never forsaken them.

At Steubenville he said:

Encompassed by vast difficulties as I am, nothing shall be wanting on my part, if sustained by the American people and God.

At Buffalo, N. Y., he closed his address as follows:

I am sure I bring a heart true to the work. For the ability to perform it I must trust in that Supreme Being, who has never forsaken this favored land; without that assistance I shall surely fail; with it I cannot fail.

At the Assembly Hall, at Albany, N. Y., he said:

I still have confidence that the Almighty, the Maker of the universe, will through the instrumentality of this great and intelligent people, bring us through this as he has through all the other difficulties of our country. Relying on this, I thank you for this generous reception.

When the electoral votes had been counted and the committee had notified him of his election the first time, he made the following reply:

With deep gratitude to my countrymen for this mark of their confidence; with a distrust of my own ability to perform the duty required, yet with a firm reliance on the strength of our free Government, and the eventual loyalty of the people to the just principles upon which it is founded, and above all, with the unshaken faith in the Supreme Ruler of nations, I accept the trust.

The dedication oration at Gettysburg closes with the words:

That this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

President Lincoln was a many of prayer. In a letter to Judge Gillespie, he said:

I have read on my knees the story of Gethsemane. I am in the garden of Gethsemane now, and my cup of bitterness is full and overflowing.

His Emancipation Proclamation closes with a prayer:

I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind, and the generous favor of God.

The Sunday morning after the battle of Gettysburg Lincoln visited General Sickles, who had lost his leg in the battle. He told General Sickles he had prayed for victory at Gettysburg, and that God had given the answer before the battle. An officer of a Christian church, of which I was a pastor, said to me: "I was at Washington attending a meeting of the Sanitary Commission, of which I was a member, and I said: "Mr. Lincoln, the country is indebted to you for the Sanitary Commission." Lincoln said, "No! It is indebted to God for it." He continued, "I spent the greater part of a night in prayer for some plan for relieving the suffering of our soldiers, and God put the Sanitary Commission in my head. I thank Him, not me."

Lincoln believed in Christ and in Christianity. In his letter to Judge Gillespie he refers to Jesus Christ as "The Son of God." In another letter he speaks of him as "The Saviour." Toward the close of his first inaugural address, he says: "Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on him who has never yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust in the best way all our present difficulty." In his great speech in Chicago, after his nomination to the United States Senatorship, he said: "I know that liberty is right, for Christ teaches it, and Christ is God." An order to the army and navy, issued Nov. 16, 1862, closes with these words: "The President hopes and trusts that every officer and man will endeavor to live and act as becomes a Christian soldier, defending the dearest rights and liberties of his country." The same order demanding an observance of the Christian Sabbath, says:

The importance for man and beast of the prescribed weekly rest, the sacred rights of Christian soldiers and sailors, a becoming deference to the best sentiment of a Christian people, and a due regard for the Divine will, demand that Sunday labor in the army and navy be reduced to the measure of strict necessity.

Lincoln's belief in immortality was strong. It is beautifully expressed in a letter to his step-brother, John Johnston, at the time of the fatal illness of his father. Among other things he writes: "Say to father, that if it be his lot to go now he will soon have a joyful meeting with loved ones gone before, and where the rest af us, through the mercy of God, hope ere long to join them."

I have not indulged in any speculation, but have held Lincoln himself constantly in evidence as to his faith. With the positive verbatim and often the official records of his faith in the Bible, in God, in prayer, in Christ and Christianity, and in immortality, we do not see how any unprejudiced person can doubt that President Lincoln was a true Christian believer.

NOT BY FAITH ONLY.

(James 2:24.)

IT IS blessed to sing of the glory beyond;
To dream of the bright, golden street;
But if we would join the great jubilant throng
Of the saved, who in heaven shall meet,
The songs that we sing should incite us to deeds,
Our dreams make us braver each day;
So, while we rejoice, may we scatter the seeds
Of mercy and truth by the way.

Sometimes with our tears we must water the soil,
And sometimes rejoice, as God will;
While sometimes he bids us to patiently toil,
And sometimes he bids us "be still:"
But beyond—oh, beyond all the toil and the pain!
We shall sing with unbounded delight;
And seraphs and angels shall join in the strain
To Jesus be glory and might.

Church Debts

Very likely the Dorcas Society, The King's Daughters, or the Young People's Society want funds to carry on their work this winter. Perhaps you have in contemplation a new organ, or carpet for the Sunday-school, or possibly the question of paying off the Church debt is troubling you. We have a plan for providing money for any of these objects.

The Home of Isaac Newton.

ISAAC NEWTON'S father was a farmer, and died some months before Isaac's birth. After the death of the husband, Mrs. Newton married again, and Isaac was sent to live with his grandmother. When old enough, he attended school, but all of his spare time was devoted to the making of water-wheels, windmills, kites and numerous little mechanical contrivances. When Isaac was fifteen years of age, his stepfather died, and the boy was called to help take care of the farm. In this work he showed very little interest,—he would rather go off to the hay-loft and read a book, or ponder over some question in mathematics. His uncle, the Rev. W. Ayscough, found him in the loft one day, studying Euclid and the laws of Kepler, and decided to send him to Trinity College. Here Newton took up the study of mathematics. In 1664 he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts.

While he was at college a plague broke out in Cambridge, which necessitated his leaving the place for a short time. During the vacation, while sitting in his orchard, the famous "fall of the apple" incident occurred which has become a part of history, and which was the indirect means of leading to his theory of the law of gravitation. Returning to college, Newton, after obtaining a fellowship and professorship, became a member of the Royal Society and was knighted in 1705.

In the old house at 35 St. Martin's street, (shown in our illustration), Newton spent the fifteen years in study. On the roof he had an observatory, where he delighted to carry on his studies. This house was afterward occupied by Fanny Burney, who wrote part of her "Evalina" in the same observatory.

Ten Thousand Per Cent.

MR. STUART dropped into the office of his friend, Mr. Morris, in a mood decidedly depressed, occasioned by a failure. It was a little after business hours, but Mr. Morris was still in his office, and alone. He laid down his pen and greeted his friend with a pleasant nod and a cheerful "How are you, Stuart?"

"Sour as an east wind," was the response, as he looked at the beaming countenance of his friend, whose counsel he had sought many a time, and scarcely ever had been disappointed. There appeared to be a little more than the usual brightness in Mr. Morris's face as he wheeled his chair round and bade his friend be seated in another. Mr. Stuart noticed it, and said:

"What are you up to, Morris? Had some good news, eh?"

"Oh no, Stuart," he replied; "nothing unusual or new in particular. I was only thinking of a little investment I was just about making."

"I thought so," said Stuart; "and a good one, I'll be bound."

"I think so," was the reply. "What would you say to 10,000 per cent?"

"Ten thousand per cent! You are raving."

"Not a bit of it," said Morris. "And the very best of security—a regular royal pledge."

"Now I know you are crazy. Who ever heard of such a thing?"

"Crazy? Not a bit of it," said Mr. Morris. "This,"—wheeling round his chair and laying his hand upon a paper on his desk—"is a check which I have just signed and intend for a poor missionary I know. I have just heard that he is sick and in much need. The Scripture says 'he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord;' but I was never awakened to the fact of what interest he pays until yesterday, when our clergyman startled me by saying that he had promised 10,000 per cent. I pricked up my ears at the statement, and waited curiously to hear the proof; and there it was, sure enough in St. Matthew 19: 29: 'And every one who hath left houses, or brethren or sisters, or father or mother, or children or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold and inherit eternal life.' I was struck at the sound of 10,000 per cent., but I figured it out and found it correct. The preacher was very much in earnest as he declared the Lord's dividend. He was as enthusiastic as a stock-broker, only in an infinitely more noble cause. I was very much impressed at the time with the thought, and, in fact, have been ever since. It was in my mind when you came in. Not that I can lay claim for a moment to the spirit of self-sacrifice which the text quoted indicates; but my gift to the poor is a loan to the Lord, and I am not afraid but that I shall reap a good dividend."—Exchange.

THAT DAY.

THE day will come, and draweth near,
When, clothed in power, shall Christ appear.
And Earth's proud rulers tribute bring
To him who reigns in Zion, King.
Lift up your bars, ye heavenly gates!
Her Lord, the Earth in silence waits.

Do You Suffer From Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery, found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for the disease. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all remedies fail. Rev. G. Ellsworth Stump, Pastor of the Congregational Church, Newell, Iowa, writes that the Kola Plant cured him of severe Asthma of twenty years' standing; Alfred C. Lewis, Editor of the Farmer's Magazine, of Washington, D. C., testifies that it cured him when he could not lie down at night without fear of choking, and many others give similar testimony. It is really a most wonderful discovery. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, The Kola Importing Co., No. 1164 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. They only ask in return that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. This is very fair, and you should surely try it, as it costs you nothing.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Africa's Stolen People.*

SINCE the abolition of the external traffic in slaves on the west coast of Africa, which drained the deep recesses of the continent for the supply of the colonial markets, there still lingers an internal trade among the native tribes of West Africa. The main avenues of the traffic, however, have branched out in three directions from East Central Africa and the Soudan, as centres, and along these dreary paths the tramp of the ghastly caravans still proceeds. One of these finds its outlet from the western Soudan in a northerly direction through the burning regions of the Sahara, to the Mohammedan states of Northern Africa, especially Tripoli and Morocco. Another is eastward to the coast, whence the slaves are conveyed to the markets in Arabia, Persia and Turkey, in the north and, until recently, to Madagascar in the South. The third route is by the Nile Valley, through which a large traffic was formerly carried on, but which in late years has been so carefully guarded that it is not available except in instances where secrecy or cunning can succeed in eluding detection.

According to a very careful estimate based upon the personal investigations of such explorers as Livingstone, Gordon, Cameron, Lavigerie and others, the annual sacrifice of lives in Africa by the slave-trade, as conducted a generation ago, was not less than five hundred thousand. If we add to this the victims transported into slavery and those exiled from their burning villages and their ruined homes, we may regard the total number of those who were at that time victims to the slave-traders' violence as not less than two millions annually. Much has been done during a quarter of a century to mitigate those horrors and lessen their volume, but that the slave-trade still exists to an extent not realized by Christendom is a fact which cannot be doubted. It is to a lamentable extent a feature of internal commerce between the African tribes, themselves, and all the efforts to seal its outlets along the extensive unguarded coast-line of East Africa have been as yet only partially successful.

In the Congo Free State, energetic attempts have been made, with considerable success, to break up the Arab strongholds of the traffic in the northeasterly regions of the State. The action of the Brussels Conference of 1889 which had for one of its objects the suppression of the slave trade, has given a stimulus among all civilized nations to aggressive and benevolent efforts for its suppression. It is in harmony with the agreement entered upon at that Conference that the recent campaign upon the northern and eastern borders of the Congo State was conducted. Germany, England and France have responded to the sentiment embodied in the Brussels Act and have throttled the grant evil here and there throughout their vast possessions and spheres of influence in many parts of Africa; yet the testimony of travelers who have penetrated the interior, at numerous and various parts of the continent, and especially the recent report of Mr. Donald Mackenzie, who in 1895 visited the east coast of Africa from Zanzibar to Zambesi, leave no room for doubt that the slave trade is still a gigantic curse to Africa.

Such is the testimony of Heli Chatelain, who resided for many years in West Africa and who has been instrumental in organizing the Phonetic Literary Bureau in the United States, for the purpose of enlightening the people of Africa according to the suggestions of the Brussels Act for the protection and education of the natives of Africa.

Since nearly all the existing trade are scattered along the West Coast. In Yorubaland young children are driven like sheep to be sold in the chambles. In a recent volume on Hausaland, by Charles H. Robinson, M.A., startling statements are made concerning the extent and cruelty of the slave-traffic in the Hausa States and throughout the Western Soudan. His description of the slave-market at Kano, of the slave-raiding throughout that section of Africa, and of the singular custom of using slaves as currency, indicates that this region, although nominally under English supervision, through the Royal Niger Company is cursed by the most abandoned and heartless species of slave-raiding and slave-trading. In the market at Kano there is an average of about five hundred human beings daily on sale.

The existence of slave-markets in Morocco, supplied by transportation across the Sahara from the Western Soudan and the regions of the Upper Niger is confirmed by abundant testimony. A member of the North African Mission says: "Few people know the true state of affairs in Morocco. Having resided and traveled extensively in that country for seven years, I feel constrained to bear witness against the whole gang of Arab slave-raiders and buyers of poor little boys and girls. The first slave-girls I actually saw being sold were of various ages. They had just arrived from the Soudan, a distance by camel of forty days journey. Two swarthy looking men were in charge of them. The timid little creatures were pushed out by their captors from a horribly dark and noisome dungeon into which they had been thrust the night before. Then separately, or two by two, they were paraded up and down before the public gaze, being stopped now and again by some one of the spectators and examined exactly as the horse-dealer would examine the points of a horse before buying the animal at any of our public horse-markets. The sight was sickening. Some of the girls were terrified, others were silent and sad. These sights make one pray as never before, to the God of Justice to stop these cruel practices.

Matthew, Mark, and the General Epistles, the latest volume of the Modern Reader's Bible. Edited with an Introduction and Notes by Prof. G. Moulton, M. A. As with the volume of the Old Testament this, which is one of four that will comprise the New Testament, presents the text as we have it in the Revised Version, but arranged in paragraphs, instead of verses, and with the variations in the subject matter indicated by a difference of type, as a modern editor would deal with such matter. Pp. 33; price 50 cents. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York.

Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to women. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York who so far are its only agents, are so anxious to prove its value that for a limited introduction they will send a free treat ment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder Disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Liver Complaints or other affliction due to impaired action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

To Direct Home Missions.

D Charles L. Thompson, of New York, Inted to Become Secretary of the Presterian Board.

ONE of the most difficult and onerous duties that could be offered to a minister is that for which the Rev. Charles L. Thompson, D.D., pastor of Madison Avenue Presbytertan Church. New York, has been selected. It is the wk of Secretary of the Presbyterian ard of Home Missions. The duties of office are at present performed jointly Rev. W. C. Roberts, D.D., and Rev. ican J. McMilian, D. D., and both e gentlemen find in the work abundant spe for their energies. The General embly, however, passed a resolution at last meeting directing the Board to e loy only one secretary, so that there uld be no divided responsibility for conduct of the work. The wisdom of step is doubted by those who know st of the varied and extensive work of Board, but the mandate of the Asbly was final, and had to be accepted. it was not likely that either of the pres- secretaries would undertake to do ne, the work which had taxed the ener- s of both, and as Dr. McMillan forly resigned, it was necessary to seek a n for the office. It is now announced t the Board has offered the position to eminent preacher, whose portrait apurs on this page.

Dr. Charles L. Thompson is one of the st-known clergymen in New York. He s born near Cooperstown, Penn. He is raduate of Princeton Theological Semry and of McCormick Seminary, Chigo, and has filled pulpits in Janesville, s.; Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg and nsas City. He was Moderator of the ntennial General Assembly, which met Philadelphia in May, 1888, and in the l of that year came to New York, where has ever since been pastor of the Madn Avenue Presbyterian Church. While aching in Chicago he became conted with a prominent Presbyterian ekly journal, and in addition to his pasate in New York he is president of the en Institutional Church League.

That the office to which Dr. Thompson called is no sinecure may be realized by following summary of its duties, as en by a writer in the "Independent": st are the correspondence and general e of candidates, an ever increasing and st difficult as well as most important rk: correspondence with the synodical d presbyterial committees, something r 300 in number; the Sunday Schools d Young People's societies, and the var- s individual pastors and churches oughout the country. There is also preparation of leaflets, notes for the igious press, and the superintendence the various special agencies as the field retary and just now the representative the Forward Movement, designed to ure the special interest of individuals d churches in the support of individual ssionaries, while one item, not the least, that of keeping accurate record of the oceedings of the Board, and the general re of the documents. All this, apart m the treasury department with its care the accounts, receipts and expenditures of every conceivable kind. Some people have claimed that a large force of stenographers might do away with the necessity of so many secretaries. To this the reply is made that people who have correspondence with the Board always want to go to persons in charge and would seldom be satisfied with any one else. Over and above all this office work is that of addressing audiences, attending ecclesiastical meetings, etc.

Whether Dr. Thompson will accept the onerous office to which he has been elected is not yet known, but it is certain that if its multifarious duties can be performed by any one man, Dr. Thompson is the kind of man who can perform them. Full of energy, cheerfulness and enthusiasm, he unites with vigor of action tact and kindliness which specially qualify him for the close and intimate relations with his ministerial brethren connected with the office.

THE LAW OF LOVE.

Only in these latter days has the Church come to even a partial understanding of the truth which Christ and his Apostles so emphatically reiterated that love is the essence of Christianity. We have insisted on creed and it is still true that right thinking is necessary to right living; we have insisted on observance of forms and ceremonies, and there is no doubt about their being means of grace which cannot be neglected without serious detriment; but both of these and many other matters which at one time or another, have been regarded as essential, may characterize a man who is not a Christian at heart. The passage associated with the topic (Romans 15: 1–3) is a test which many a man who is strictly orthodox and regular in the observance of outward duty cannot bear. The religion of Christ touches and transforms character. The man who does not feel more kindly to his neighbor after he takes upon him the name of Christ than he did before, has not apprehended the real nature of Christianity. He has not, as an eminent preacher says, got the real thing. It should make him not only a better husband and father, but it should change his attitude toward every one with whom he is brought in contact. In the inimitable parable of The Good Samaritan, Christ gave a vivid representation of the principle. The man robbed, maltreated and helpless had claims upon the two who passed him by, but none upon the man who helped him. As a Jew he had explicitly and offensively separated himself from the Samaritan, but the Samaritan went to his rescue. The kindness of heart which prompted the act is the essence of Christianity. It is the neighborly feeling, the compassion, the helpfulness—in a word, the love which dwelling in the heart pervades the character and prompts helpfulness in a hundred ways, that indicate the true Christian. It is God dwelling in man, for "God is love."

Sewing Machines of the Present are very different from those of the past. Very few users of sewing machines know the technical differences; patents have expired on generic features, but "the world moves," and radical improvements have been made in sewing machines, so that the one of to-day shows a tremendous improvement on its predecessor. Women who have used both kinds quickly realize the difference between a cheaply made imitation of some ancient type and the modern light-running machine which is easily adjusted, does all kinds of work, and is always ready to go. The Silent Singer of to-day is the latest result of constant improvement in mechanical excellence. For practical use it compares with the old-time sewing machines sold at department stores much as a modern railway train surpasses a stage-coach of the last century.

Singer machines are so simple that a child can understand them; they are so strong that a bungler can hardly get them out of order. Every part is made with such scrupulous care, from the best materials, fitted in its place with the utmost exactness, and tested and re-tested so many times before leaving the factory, that it never gets the "fits" which try a woman's patience, destroy the fruits of her labor, and consume her time in vexing attempts to coax the machine to a proper performance of duty. Singer machines are sold directly from maker to user; they are guaranteed by the maker, always ready to furnish parts and supplies in any part of the world, and not by a middleman totally unable to render this service. Buy a sewing machine of the Present, and not one of the Past.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

Widows in Pandita Ramabai's Refuge Pleading for Christian Baptism.

THE pathetic request for prayer contained in Pandita Ramabai's letter, published in a recent issue of this journal, has apparently been followed by a remarkable outpouring of the Holy Spirit. It will be remembered that the Pandita mentioned the fact that a camp-meeting was about to assemble near her settlement at Khedgaon and that she was praying earnestly that some of the widows whom the gifts of our readers enabled her to rescue from starvation and take unto her home for Christian instruction, might be brought to Christ. It was in this way that Ramabai herself became a Christian. She too has felt the pangs of hunger and has seen her nearest and dearest perish for lack of food. From those who gave her food for the body she heard of Him, who is the Bread of Life. She was, therefore, specially anxious that a like blessing might come to the poor creatures whose lives she has been instrumental in saving. Already a considerable number had given themselves to the Lord and a report of their baptism has appeared in this journal. We now learn that a still larger number were gathered in at the camp-meeting for which she was preparing when she last wrote. In a letter to the India Witness, Miss Minnie F. Adams describes the day of jubilee which she witnessed. She says:

"The revival among the widows in Pandita Ramabai's Homes has been large and genuine, especially among the high caste widows. The services in the Poona Home continued ten days, and at the close one hundred and sixteen women and child widows were baptized. About two weeks ago Rev. W. W. Bruere came to Khedgaon to hold a mission. The women had been prepared for these services, by constant daily religious teaching ever since they entered the Home. The older widows, some of whom were hardened in sin, are living at the farm in Khedgaon. But the spirit of God is able to transform even hardened sinners. He was present in great power from the beginning of the service. At the close of three days' services, when Mr. Bruere was called away, sixty seven had been converted. The meetings were continued, Mr. Bruere returned, and as the crowning event, last Tuesday, the baptismal service took place.

"It was a rare sight when seventeen bullock carts, crowded with seven and eight women in each, started out for the Bheema River, five and a half miles distant from the farm. Songs of joy arose one after another, as they slowly went along, which it seemed to me must have mingled themselves with the joy around the throne when sinners are converted.

"A tent was pitched on the bank of the river, which served as a dressing room. A short service was held by Rev. W. W. Bruere, after which the baptisms took place. Pandita Ramabai's Brahman secretary, who had already been baptized together with a large number of widows in Poona, Krishnabai, and the writer, stood in the water and helped the candidates to enter and return to the shore. One of the school mistresses on the shore called out the names of those to be baptized. It was very interesting to hear read out aloud to the ministers 'In the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' The happy faces and frequent expressions of praise showed that the Spirit teaches the children alike would help, for these women had never come in contact with white Christians, except in Sunday-school services. One hundred and eight women and girls and one boy of twelve years of age were baptized.

"While the Pandita was taking the names of those who were going for baptism, a thought of the cross flashed across my mind, but I put it away. I felt that I had come to see the dear little child who [illegible] and give evidence that she truly loves Jesus, was carried out into the water. Mr. Bruere took him into his arms and put her under the water. Jesus took such of his arms and blessed them. Had I time to write more, I should like to tell of how the Spirit led many to confess their sins of [illegible] lying, quarrelling and fighting, and many with tears confessed their idolatry. One woman arose to speak. She covered her eyes, and began to pray in the Marathi language, but soon broke forth in her own language. Her whole frame was convulsed with weeping as she pleaded the merits of Christ's sufferings on her behalf. Shen she broke forth into loud praises to Jesus, for salvation, the forgiveness of sin. It was a solemn yet a joyous time."

The same journal also thus refers to a pamphlet it has received from Rev. E. M. Gordon, who was one of the missionaries who were active in distributing to his starving neighbors the money and food contributed by our readers:

"Rev. E. M. Gordon, of Mungeli, has issued a little tract, 'INASMUCH,' in which he briefly reviews the famine experiences of the year on his district. He has been in the thick of the most terrible distress, and by his pen and voice and camera was able to awaken a large measure of public sympathy in behalf of the poor sufferers. Writing of the effect of the Famine on mission work, Mr. Gordon says: 'It is too soon yet to say what effect the famine relief measures will have on the work of the mission. That will be known at a more distant date. The people have seen as never before that we have their interests at heart. Our circle of acquaintances has more than doubled, for we have come into direct contract with large numbers of people. Numerous have been the applications for admission to the Church, but they have been steadily and considerately refused. If when the people are once more thrown on their own resources, any of them should desire to become Christians they will probably be accepted, but in times like the present their admission would scarcely be advisable.'"

Our readers will rejoice with us that their gifts which were rendered in the name of Christ, and through love of him are thus bearing forth fruit and that there is prospect of still greater results. The missionaries are wise in taking care that only those who have really accepted Christ as their Saviour are received, and will not recognize gratitude for relief from famine as a sufficient ground for the administration of Christian baptism; but evidently there are a very large number to whom the delay is only temporary.

FREE TO MILLIONS.

A Valuable Little Book Sent Free for the Asking.

Medical books are not always interesting reading, especially to people enjoying good health, but as a matter of fact scarcely one person in ten is perfectly healthy, and even with such, sooner or later sickness must come.

It is also a well established truth that nine-tenths of all diseases originate with a breaking down of the digestion, a weak stomach weakens and impoverishes the system, making it easy for disease to gain a foothold.

Nobody need fear consumption, kidney disease, liver trouble or a weak heart and nervous system as long as the digestion is good and the stomach able to assimilate plenty of wholesome food.

Stomach weakness shows itself in a score of ways and this little book describes the symptoms and causes and points the way to a cure so simple that anyone can understand and apply.

Thousands have some form of stomach trouble and do not know it. They ascribe the headaches, the languor, nervousness, insomnia palpitation, constipation and similar symptoms to some other cause than the true one. Get your digestion on the right track and the heart trouble, lung trouble, liver disease or nervous debility will rapidly disappear.

This little book treats entirely on the cause and removal of indigestion and its accompanying annoyances.

It describes the symptoms of Acid Dyspepsia, Nervous Dyspepsia, Slow Dyspepsia, Atonic or Gas Dyspepsia, Catarrh of Stomach and all affections of the digestive organs in plain language easily understood and the cure removed.

It gives valuable suggestions as to diet, and contains a table giving length of time required to digest various articles of food, showing every person with weak digestion should know.

No price is asked, but simply send your name and address plainly written on postal card to the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., requesting a little book on Stomach Diseases and it will be sent promptly by return mail Vapo-Cresolene For Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Coughs and Bronchitis.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH says—
I take great pleasure in recommending your Vapo-Cresolene. I have spoken of it to a great many of my friends and to hundreds of our fellow-workers in the Salvation Army. I recommend that no family where there are young children should be without this Vaporizer. I have found it very beneficial for my little ones with Whooping Cough and Influenza. I am convinced that it can but prove an exceedingly useful assistant whatever treatment may be used in the check and cure of the trying diseases for which it has been specially recommended.

MISSIONARY CHRISTIANS.

Essentially, a missionary is one sent as a messenger or herald. In this sense, the topic applies to every one who has experimental knowledge of the power of the Gospel. The Committee, therefore, is justified in the phraseology adopted: "Every Christian a Missionary." It is not possible for every Christian to become a missionary to the heathen, but there is no Christian who has not opportunities for missionary work. A very few inquiries among his immediate acquaintances will convince any man that there are a large number of men around him who are as destitute of knowledge of the real principles of Christianity as the heathen are, and there are many who have not even a superficial knowledge of scripture truth. It is scarcely credibly, yet absolutely true, that, during this year of grace, a lawyer with a large practice, thoroughly familiar with every detail of his profession and able to converse intelligently on politics, science, and literature, confessed that he did not know what it was that Moses did and recognized the name only as some Biblical character who was renowned and venerated by the clergy. This is sober fact, and yet this man lives in one of our great cities in which there are over two hundred churches. But while there are probably comparatively few whose ignorance is as colossal, there are many who do know the facts, yet who do not apply them to their own lives. They do not know how much religion would help them, and regard it, when they think of it at all, as a disagreeable duty to be avoided as much as possible. To such men what a blessing it would be if some Christian acquaintance would explain to them the joy and peace that Christ gives. This task can be performed by the layman better than the minister, and it would be a personal testimony which would have greater weight by being disinterested. It is a duty, too, which Christ requires of his followers and is part of that confession of him before men which is a condition of discipleship. It is not sufficient to be regular at church and to contribute to the support of missionary societies. Personal service is required of every man who bears the name of Christ, and that he be in his own circle a light which is not hidden. The circle, large or small, should see the light.

COFFEE DRUNKARDS.

Coffee drunkenness is one of the latest dangers which doctors abroad are raising their voices against. Dr. Mendel, of Berlin, has published a clinical study, which is the most thorough yet made, as he had a community of coffee drinkers under his constant observation, the working women in and about Essen He found many of these women consumed over a pound of coffee a week. The leading symptoms of the ills that afflicted them were profound depression of spirits and frequent headaches, with insomnia. A strong dose of coffee would relieve them for a time, then the ailment would return. The muscles became weak and trembling, and the hands trembled when at rest. The victims suffered so seriously they dared not abandon the drinking of coffee for fear of death.

These symptoms appear in thousands of people in a less degree, simply because the use a less amount of the drug, but steady use day by day gradually piles up a very serious account which must be settled with the nervous system. Various disorders appear as a result of daily interference with the digestion and proper action of the nerves, paralysis, apoplexy, heart failure and other complications equally serious. To live plainly on pure food, is the secret of health and success in life. Postum Cereal Food Coffee comes like a blessing to man or woman who is suffering from the coffee habit and yet dislikes to breakfast without coffee. Postum has the color and taste of coffee.

When boiled full 15 minutes after boiling commences, it tastes like the better grades of Java, and being made from the cereals by scientific processes it fournishes the elements needed to rebuild the gray matter in the nerve centres, where imported coffee tends toward their destruction.

Substitutors drug their concoctions to give them a coffee flavor Genuine packages of Postum have red seals and the words, "It makes red blood," thereon.

VOLUME 21.—NUMBER 7.

Rev. T DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 16, 1898. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

"Morning Grace"

A SIMPLE, frugal meal, laid upon a snowy cloth; an aged pair, with their dutiful daughter, seated by the table, and devoutly bowing their heads while the father of the household offers up a brief but heartfelt prayer of thankfulness to the Giver of all good things, before partaking of the food. Poor the home may be, the floors covered with the home-made rag-carpet instead of Wilton or Axminster, and the garments made of the commonest fabrics; but there is everywhere evidence of cleanliness and tidiness, and that careful housewifery which makes the old look like new and the meanest cottage seem equal to a palace. These old hands have known what it is to labor hard and long—as the swollen joints and tense muscles show; but the toil that is lightened by love is performed cheerfully and ungrudgingly. In the young daughter, just budding into womanhood, the mother sees her own self again, and she sympathizes with and assists every effort that is made for honorable advancement. The father's eyes fill with the mist of loving tears as he recognizes in his child's winsome face the same lineaments that were so familiar before the years had written their wrinkles on the face or whitened the once abundant tresses of his dear life-companion.

There are many thousands of such homes in our land—homes where Christ is and where the whole current of existence is heaven-directed. Simple social pleasures, interchange of visits and friendly courtesies, the love of music, good books, and helpful companionships, the sympathy that reaches out in practical benevolence, and that seeks a share in every good work—these are among the agencies that lighten hearts and brighten homes. It does not need to be told that such lives take delight in that association with God's people which is especially dear to the aged, who find sweet solace in the assembly of the saints, and who never willingly neglect the ordinances of religion. Their family pew in the old church is seldom vacant. They may truly say with the poet:

> Not the fair palaces,
> To which the great resort,
> Are once to be compared with this,
> Where Jesus holds his court.

As they go down the hill of life together and the end of the journey seems nearer and nearer, they value more highly the good old Book and the precious promises.

"IN EVERY THING GIVE THANKS."

Such is the beautiful and instructive group our artist has placed before us in the picture on this page. The scene is that of a home where sweet contentment reigns, and where each member feels that dependence upon a loving Father, and that sweet daily communion with a Saviour, who is both Comforter and Friend, which the true Christian alone can realize.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Many letters reach us inquiring as to the Cuban relief work. For the information of such questioners, we would say:

1. The fund is administered in Cuba by Americans only.

2. No duty is placed by Spain upon the relief supplies sent to Havana by the Fund.

3. Every contribution sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for that purpose, is handed over to the Central Relief Committee appointed by the President, of which Committee Dr. Klopsch is a member.

4. No money is sent to Cuba, all cash contributions being used by the Committee in the purchase of food supplies, clothing and medicine, which are forwarded in large quantities twice a week to Gen. Lee.

5. All transportation for such supplies, on the railroad and steamship lines, is free.

6. The relief work is already well under way, and Gen. Lee and staff are energetically conducting the distribution in the sections where the suffering is greatest.

7. There should be no delay in forwarding your contributions, as the need is exceedingly urgent, as already explained by the Secretary of State in his proclamations on the subject. Delays simply result in increasing the death-roll, when precious lives might be saved by prompt action.

8. Send for copies of our Cuban Famine Pamphlet (illustrated), which contains all necessary information on the subject, and answers all questions.

I subsequently married a very good man, after fully explaining my position to him. Since then I have been much troubled. Must I separate from my husband in order to be saved?

Certainly not. You are not required to do anything of the kind. You were justified in securing the divorce, and it would be outrageous injustice that you should be debarred by the wrong-doing of your first husband from marrying again. Your separation from your present husband would be a wrong done to him, and would not advance your prospect of salvation.

ope Mission and Its Soul-Winning Work in Pittsburg, Allegheny and Homestead—Many Remarkable Conversions.

MONG the many efforts that have been made by consecrated Christians r the uplifting of fallen men and women there are few in the cities of Pennsylvania that have borne a more promising harvest than the Hope Missions in Allegheny, Pittsburg, and Homestead. The Mission was established at 111 Market street, Pittsburg, by Rev. E. M. Sandys several years ago, with the view of aiding the women of the "unfortunate" class, who are numerous that city, the first step being taken in nuary, 1895. It received the cordial sup- rt of many benevolent citizens and the rm approval of churches of all denomi- tions. Soon the need of enlarged quar- rs was felt and the work expanded pidly, the meetings being marked by any conversions. As many of the neficiaries were practically destitute, the rk was almost wholly one of charity. ring the first year of the Mission's work Pittsburg, an average of fifty women ere sheltered ily, meals were ven free, and out thirty poor. meless men were dged nightly dur- g the cold season. hus the first de- and upon the re- ources of the ission were hu- anitarian. At the me time, earnest orts were made bring these wan- erers into spiritual lations with the ork, and these met ith marked suc- ss, the regular ospel service be- g largely attended d many coming nder conviction f sin.

Associated with ev. Mr. Sandys re an earnest band f workers, who, in reat part, give heir services ee to the mis- on. Their labors among the homeless nd the dissolute were greatly blessed, nd many were brought safely into the ld of the Gospel. The records of Hope lission show a glorious work accom- lished for Christ. Criminals were re- laimed, drunkards restored to sobriety, nd friends and fallen women redeemed nd placed in respectable employment. ltogether the mission has exerted a urifying influence in the atmosphere of ie lowest sections of the city, such as ad never before been experienced.

The mission building is a five-story ouse in the heart of the city. There are chapel, dormitories, reading-room, kit- en, dining-room and offices. Meetings re held every evening at 7.30 and on unday afternoons, and, when the weather ermits, outdoor services are frequent. ranches of the Mission have been estab- shed on Third Avenue, Allegheny and t Homestead, and these, too, are manned y zealous, loving workers, men and omen, who have undertaken the onerous uties of missionary labor purely for the ove of Christ and to save precious souls.

Hope Mission's aim and purpose, as ex- lained by Mr. Sandys, is as follows:

"To bring harmony out of discord; to ntangle the threads of tangled lives; o make the darkness of ignorance light ith truth; to teach him 'line upon line, nd precept upon precept, here a little, here a little.' To train untrained minds and untrained hands; to teach careless young girls to forget evil things, and to remember great truths newly taught; in fact to change the whole environment of life, bringing them in contact and association with all that is pure, and by the transforming power of the Gospel make them meet, to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints of life.

"At present we are reaching all classes; some of them are wives, mothers, widows, and orphans. Ours may seem to be a discouraging work, as we are endeavoring to raise the fallen; but the world, as well as we ourselves, is fast learning that, to a great extent, good surroundings and the good housing of the poor will go far toward doing away with prisons and houses of correction. One class comes to us from families of the poor but respectable laboring people. Many have homes in our city; but we also have them come to us from cities and towns at a distance. The parents, in some cases, are ignorant and the daughters have been overdressed or dressed in cheap finery, to their ruin. Some have had just sufficient education given them at public schools, and association with girls who do not expect to earn their own livelihood makes them dissatisfied with their own life. With some, a cheap clerkship is the height of their ambition, and for this they are not trained. In this position they often fail or fall. They are on the streets at night, until their careless mothers are filled with terror. Some of these mothers are surprised when we tell them that the trouble comes from a lack of right training. The sad feature of the age is, that children are not properly mothered, but allowed to have their own way, to their sorrow. In almost every case of rescue we find that these children or girls have been sinned against far more than they have sinned."

THE MISSION DINING-HALL.

HOPE MISSION LIBRARY—A MISSION CONVERT AND WORKER.

One remarkable feature of the work of Hope Mission and its branches is that, from the very outset, it has been the policy of its founder and conductors to make no appeals with a view to securing contributions for its support. It is altogether a work of faith, and supported almost wholly by voluntary contribution.

The Mission has often felt the pinching of poverty; but the faith of its conductors has never wavered, and Christian friends have been led to extend help when most sorely needed. None of the workers are salaried.

For the purpose of helping the homeless girls who come to the Mission, and who have been rescued from lives of sin, a building was lately secured where it is proposed to open an industrial branch, where the girls are at least partially self-supporting until permanent openings are found for them. This is known as the Mount Washington Home.

Not a few of those who have been brought to Christ through the Mission have themselves become actual workers in the Lord's vineyard. One such case is that of a beautiful young girl, who was living in sin and was received at the Mission in an almost dying condition and nursed back to life and health. She was soundly converted and has since been made the instrument of saving many others.

One inmate was the innocent victim of a bigamous marriage. Some are country-bred girls, who have found little else than vice and misery in their city experience, and who were on the downward road when the workers of Hope Mission found them. A singular case was that of a young woman whose name had already become notorious on account of her repeated attempts at self-destruction. Sick of her sinful life, she attempted to drown herself in the Monongahela river, but was rescued. She then spent two years in a convent, where she again tried to end her wretched existence, but was prevented. Two years later, she flung herself headlong in front of a train and was almost marvelously preserved from death, receiving only slight injuries. Less than a year ago, she tried to poison herself, but was taken to a hospital, where she recovered after treatment. A fifth attempt was made when she leaped from a fire-escape, but she was caught, and again the apparently worthless life was saved. Shortly afterward, she attended the meetings at Hope Mission, and there found glad release from her sins and rest in the Saviour. She is now leading a humble and sincere Christian life, and with many others who have escaped like perils, loves to testify at the Gospel meetings to the power of divine grace to save "to the uttermost." The Hope Mission meetings at Pittsburg, Homestead, and Allegheny are full of just such testimonies—from saved men and women—and they have often been blessed as a means of leading others to repentance and the Cross.

There are many features connected with the work of this excellent Mission which deserve mention did space permit. Its beneficiaries include men and women from many States and the influence it exerts is a far-reaching one. It deserves the heartiest support of Christian people everywhere.

TEMPERATE IN ALL THINGS

The soul to have dominion over the body and to regulate the life.—1 Cor. 9: 25-27.

It is strange that a servant of Christ so eminent as the Apostle Paul should have admitted the possibility of his becoming a castaway. Yet even he felt it necessary to be on the watch against danger. So close is the union of body and soul that the one cannot be dishonored without the other suffering. More than this, the body may drag down the soul into mire and pollution. We see continually instances of this fact. Some of the brightest intellects and the most lovable souls are degraded by the indulgence of the physical appetites. There are drunkards who are useless in the world, who might be eminent and beneficent if they could restrain their desires for intoxicants. The body asserts its power, and the spirit yields against its judgment. This is anarchy—the kind of anarchy that there is in a household when a spoiled child has its own way. Better for the child and better for the adults of the household that the child should be in subjection. So the Apostle says: "I keep under my body and keep it in subjection." This is the true rule of the normal human life. The soul should be able to say "No" to the clamoring demands of physical desire and should be able at all times to enforce its behests.

CHEER IN DARK HOURS.

Trials Alleviated by the Consolation Christ Gives to Those who Trust Him (John 16:33; Acts 23:11).

An eminent writer reminds us that adversity is the promise of the New Testament, as prosperity was the promise of the Old Testament. Christ did not conceal from His followers the consequences of following Him: "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but ——" Even tribulation was to have its alleviations. So it is that God educates His people. The things we deem necessary and essential to our happiness we learn to dispense with and the experiences we dread turn out for our benefit. "I do not know how you can bear it," said one godly man speaking some time ago to another who had failed in business and had seen all his household treasures sold at auction. "If such a thing happened to me," he continued, "I should go crazy or die." A few years later he was called to go through that identical experience. He neither died nor went crazy, though he suffered much. To one who sympathized with him after the worst of the storm had passed, he said: "It has been a wonderful experience. I have learned more of the love of God in those dark hours than I ever knew before. I had no idea of the support God can give in trouble until I tested it for myself and proved it when everything else was withdrawn. I tell you God is sufficient for every emergency, and I have found it so in my own life. Now I fear nothing, not even death itself." There are many who have had a similar experience. There are some of the promises which are like the phosphorescent writing, which can be read only when we are in the dark. Then they speak to us with new power and with a meaning we never dreamed of before. We are like children at school who must struggle with difficult tasks. We must learn by hard labor the principles of a wider life. When trials come, as come they will, we remember that our Lord promised us no immunity from them.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Cheer for the Unknown.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Romans 16: 14-15: . . Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus and Julia.

MATTHEW HENRY, Albert Barnes, Adam Clark, Thomas Scott, and all the commentators pass by these verses without any especial remark. The other twenty people mentioned in the chapter were distinguished for something and were therefore discussed by the illustrious expositors; but nothing is said about Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus, and Julia. Where were they born? No one knows. When did they die? There is no record of their decease. For what were they distinguished? Absolutely nothing, or the trait of character would have been brought out by the Apostle. If they had been very intrepid; or opulent, or hirsute, or musical of cadence, or crass of style, or in any wise anomalous, that feature would have been caught by the apostolic camera. But they were good people, because Paul sends to them his high Christian regards. They were ordinary people moving in ordinary sphere, attending to ordinary duty, and meeting ordinary responsibilities.

What the world wants is a religion for ordinary people. If there be in the United States 70,000,000 people, there are certainly not more than 1,000,000 extraordinary; and then there are 69,000,000 ordinary, and we do well to turn our backs for a little while upon the distinguished and conspicuous people of the Bible and consider in our text the seven ordinary. We spend too much of our time in twisting garlands for remarkables, and building thrones for magnates, and sculpturing warriors, and apotheosizing philanthropists. The rank and file of the Lord's soldiery need especial help.

The vast majority of people will never lead an army, will never write a State constitution, will never electrify a Senate, will never make an important invention, will never introduce a new philosophy, will never decide the fate of a nation. You do not expect to; you do not want to. You will not be a Moses to lead a nation out of bondage. You will not be a Joshua to prolong the daylight until you can shut five kings in a cavern. You will not be a St. John to unroll an Apocalypse. You will not be a Paul to preside over an apostolic college. You will not be a Mary to mother a Christ. You will more probably be Asyncritus, or Phlegon, or Hermas, or Patrobas, or Hermes, or Philologus, or Julia.

Many of you are women at the head of households. Every morning you plan for the day. The culinary department of the household is in your dominion. You decide all questions of diet. All the sanitary regulations of your house are under your supervision. To regulate the food, and the apparel and the habits, and decide the thousand questions of home life is a tax upon brain and nerve and general health absolutely appalling, if there be no divine alleviation.

It does not help you much to be told that Elizabeth Fry did wonderful things among the criminals at Newgate. It does not help you much to be told that Mrs. Judson was very brave among the Burmese cannibals. It does not help you very much to be told that Florence Nightingale was very kind to the wounded in the Crimea. It would be better for me to tell you that the little friend of Mary and Martha of your town, and I trust he sees all the annoyances and disappointments and vexations and exasperations of an ordinary housekeeper from meal to meal, and from the first day of the year until the last day of the year, and at your call he is ready with help and reinforcement.

They who provide the food of the world decide the health of the world. You have only to go on some errand among the tenements and the hovels of the United States and Great Britain to appreciate the fact that a vast multitude of the human race are slaughtered by incompetent cookery. Though a young woman may have taken lessons in music, and may have taken lessons in painting, and lessons in astronomy, she is not well educated unless she has taken lessons in dough! They who decide the apparel of the world, and the food of the world, decide the endurance of the world.

An unthinking man may consider it a matter of little importance—the cares of the household and the economies of domestic life—but I tell you the earth is strewn with the martyrs of kitchen and nursery. The health-shattered womanhood of America cries out for a God who can help ordinary women in the ordinary duties of housekeeping. The wearing, grinding, unappreciated work goes on, but the same Christ who stood on the bank of Galilee in the early morning and kindled the fire and had the fish already cleaned and broiling when the sportsmen stepped ashore, chilled and hungry, will help every woman to prepare breakfast, whether by her own hand, or the hand of her hired help. The God who made indestructible eulogy of Hannah, who made a coat for Samuel, her son, and carried it to the temple every year, will help every woman in preparing the family wardrobe. The God who opens the Bible with the story of Abraham's entertainment by the three angels on the plains of Mamre, will help every woman to provide hospitality, however rare and embarrassing. It is high time that some of the attention we have been giving to the remarkable women of the Bible—remarkable for their virtue, or their want of it, or remarkable for their deeds—Deborah and Jezebel, and Herodias and Athalia, and Dorcas and the Marys, excellent and abandoned—it is high time some of the attention we have been giving to these conspicuous women of the Bible be given to Julia, an ordinary woman, amid ordinary circumstances, attending to ordinary duties, and meeting ordinary responsibilities.

Then there are all the ordinary business men. They need divine and Christian help. When we begin to talk about business life we shoot right off and talk about men who did business on a large scale, and who sold millions of dollars of goods a year; and the vast majority of business men do not sell a million dollars of goods, nor half a million, nor quarter of a million, nor the eighth part of a million. Put all the business men of our cities, towns, villages, and neighborhoods side by side, and you will find that they sell less than a hundred thousand dollars worth of goods. All these men in ordinary business life want divine help. You see how the wrinkles are printing on the countenance the story of worriment and care. You cannot tell how old a business man is by looking at him. Gray hairs at thirty. A man at forty-five with the stoop of a nonogenarian. No time to attend to improved dentistry, the grinders cease because they are few. Actually dying of old age at forty or fifty, when they ought to be at the meridian. Many of these business men have bodies like a neglected clock to which you come, and when you wind it up, it begins to buzz and roar, and then the hands start around very rapidly, and then the clock strikes five or ten, or forty, and strikes without any sense, and then suddenly stops. So is the body of that worn-out business man. It is a neglected clock, and though by some summer recreation it may be wound up, still the machinery is all out of gear. The hands turn around with a velocity that excites the astonishment of the world. Men cannot understand the wonderful activity, and there is a roar, and a buzz, and a rattle about these disordered lives, and they strike ten when they ought to strike five, and they strike twelve when they ought to strike six, and they strike forty when they ought to strike nothing, and suddenly they stop. Post mortem examination reveals the fact that all the springs, and pivots, and weights, and balance-wheels of health are completely deranged. The human clock is simply run down. And at the time when the steady hand ought to be pointing to the industrious hours on a clear and sunlit dial, the whole machinery of body, mind, and earthly capacity stops forever. Oak Hill and Greenwood have thousands of business men who died of old age at thirty, thirty-five, forty, forty-five.

Now, what is wanted is grace—divine grace for ordinary business men, men who are harnessed from morn till night and all the days of their life—harnessed in business. Not grace to lose a hundred thousand, but grace to lose ten dollars. Not grace to supervise two hundred and fifty employes in a factory, but grace to supervise the bookkeeper, and two salesmen, and the small boy that sweeps out the store. Grace to invest not the eighty thousand dollars of net profit, but the twenty-five hundred of clear gain. Grace not to endure the loss of a whole shipload of spices from the Indies, but grace to endure the loss of a paper of collars from the leakage of a displaced shingle on a poor roof. Grace not to endure the tardiness of the American Congress in passing a necessary law, but grace to endure the tardiness of an errand boy stopping to play marbles when he ought to deliver the goods. Such a grace as thousands of business men have to-day—keeping them tranquil, whether goods sell or do not sell, whether customers pay or do not pay, whether tariff is up or tariff is down, whether the crops are luxuriant or a dead failure—calm in all circumstances, and amid all vicissitudes. That is the kind of grace we want.

Millions of men want it, and they may have it for the asking. Some hero or heroine comes to town, and as the procession passes through the street the business men come out, stand on tiptoe on their store step and look at some one who in Arctic clime, or in ocean storm, or in day of battle, or in hospital agonies did the brave thing, not realizing that they, the enthusiastic spectators, have gone through trials in business life that are just as great before God. There are men who have gone through freezing Arctics and burning torrids, and awful Marengoes of experiences without moving five miles from their doorstep.

Now, what ordinary business men need is to realize that they have the friendship of that Christ who looked after the religious interests of Matthew, the custom-house clerk, and helped Lydia, of Thyatira, to sell the dry-goods, and who opened a bakery and fishmarket in the wilderness of Asia Minor to feed the seven thousand who had come out on a religious picnic, and who counts the hairs of your head with as much particularity as though they were the plumes of a coronation, and who took the trouble to stoop down with his finger writing on the ground, although the first shuffle of feet obliterated the divine caligraphy, and who knows just how many locusts there were in the Egyptian plague, and knew just how many ravens were necessary to supply Elijah's pantry by the brook Cherith, and who, as floral commander, leads forth all the regiments of primroses, foxgloves, daffodils, hyacinths, and lilies which pitch their tents of beauty and kindle their camp-fires of color all around the hemisphere—that that Christ and that God knows the most minute affairs of your business life and however inconsiderable, understanding all the affairs of that woman who keeps a thread-and-needle store as well as all the affairs of a Rothschild and a Baring.

Then there are all the ordinary farmers. We talk about agricultural life, and we immediately shoot off to talk about Cincinnatus, the patrician, who went from the plow to a high position, and after he got through the dictatorship, in twenty-one days went back again to the plow. What encouragement is that to ordinary farmers? The vast majority of them—none of them will be patricians. Perhaps none of them will be Senators. If any of them have dictatorships it will be over forty, or fifty, or a hundred acres of the old homestead. What these men want is grace, to keep their patience while plowing with balky oxen, and to keep cheerful amid the drouth that destroys the corn crop, and that enables them to restore the garden the day after the neighbor's cattle have broken in and trampled out the strawberry bed, and gone through the Lima-bean patch, and eaten up the sweet corn in such large quantities that they must be kept from the water lest they swell up and die.

Grace in catching weather that enables them, without imprecation, to spread out the hay the third time, although again and again, and again, it has been almost ready for the mow. A grace to doctor the cow with a hollow horn, and the sheep with the foot rot, and the horse with the distemper, and to compel the unwilling acres to yield a livelihood for the family and schooling for the children and little extras to help the older boy in business and something for the daughter's wedding outfit, and a little surplus for the time when the ankles will get stiff with age and the breath will be a little short, and the swinging of the cradle through the hot harvest-field will bring on the old man's vertigo. Better close up about Cincinnatus. I know five hundred farmers just as noble as he was. What they want is to know that they have the friendship of that Christ who often drew his similies from the farmer's life, as when he said: "A sower went forth to sow," and when he built his best parable out of the scene of a farmer boy coming back from his wanderings, and the old farmhouse shook that night with rural jubilee; and who compared himself to a lamb in the pasture field, and who said that the eternal God is a farmer, declaring: "My Father is the husbandman."

Those stone masons do not want to hear about Christopher Wren, the architect, who built St. Paul's Cathedral. It would be better to tell them how to carry the hod of brick up the ladder without slipping, and how on a cold morning with the trowel to smooth off the mortar and keep cheerful, and how to be thankful to God for the plain food taken from the pail by the roadside. Carpenters standing amid the adze, and the bit, and the plane, and the broad axe, need to be told that Christ was a Carpenter, with his own hand wielding saw and hammer. Oh, this is a tired world, and it is a overworked world, and it is an under-fed world, and it is a wrung-out world, and men and women need to know that there is rest and recuperation in God and that religion which was not so much intended for extraordinary people as for ordinary people, because there are more of them.

The healing profession has had its Abercrombies, and its Abernethys, and its Valentine Motts, and its Willard Parkers; but the ordinary physicians do the most of the world's medicining, and the need to understand that while taking diagnosis or prognosis, or writing prescription, or compounding medicament, holding the delicate pulse of a dying child they may have the presence and the dictation of the Almighty Doctor who took the case of the madman, and, after he had torn off his garments in foaming dementia, clothed him again, body and mind, and who lifted up the woman who for eighteen years had been bent almost double with the rheumatism into graceful stature and who turned the scabs of leprosy into rubicund complexion, and who rubbed the numbness out of paralysis, and who swung wide open the closed windows of hereditary or accidental blindness, until the morning light came streaming through the fleshly casements, and who knows the diseases, and all the remedies, and the herbs, and all the catholicons, and monarch of pharmacy and therapeutic and who has sent out ten thousand doctors of whom the world makes no record but to prove that they are angels of mercy. I invoke the thousands of men whose agonments they have assuaged and the thousands of women to whom in crises of pain they have been next to God in benefaction.

Come, now, let us have a religion for ordinary people in professions, in occupations, in agriculture, in the household, merchandise, in everything. I salute across the centuries Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus and Julia.

First of all, if you feel that you are ordinary, thank God that you are not extraordinary. I am tired and sick, almost almost to death with extraordinary people. They take all their time to tell us how very extraordinary they really are. You know as well as I do, my brother and sister, that the most of the useful work for the world is done by unpretentious peovil toil right on—by people who do not much approval, and no one seems to sa "That is well done." Phenomena of but little use. Things that are exional cannot be depended on. Better hen, if you feel that you are ordinary, member that your position invites the attack. Conspicuous people — how have to take it! How they are misrepresented, and abused, and shot at!

higher the horns of a roebuck the aer to strike him down. What a deli-ious thing it must be to be a candidate for Governor of a State or President of the United States! It must be so soothing to the nerves! It must pour into the soul of a candidate such a sense of seren when he reads the attacks in the blessed newspapers!

mention these things to prove it is extraordinary people who get abused, while ordinary escape. The weather of life is not so severe on the plain as it is on the high peaks. The world never forgives a man who knows, or gains, or does more than it can know, or gain, or do. Parents sometimes give confectionery to their children as an inducement to take bitter medicine, and the world's sugar-plum precedes the world's aqua-fortis. The mob cried in regard to Christ, "Crucify him, crucify him!" and they had to say it twice to be understood, for they were so hoarse, as they got their hoarseness by crying a little while before at the top of their voice,
"Hosanna."

The famous river Rhone is foul when it enters Lake Leman, but crystalline when it comes out on the other side. If there are men who have entered the bright lake of worldly prosperity crystal-lin and come out terribly riled. If, therefore, you feel that you are ordinary, thank God for the defences and the tranquility of your position.

Then remember, if you have only what is called an ordinary home, that the great discoverers of the world have all come from such a home. And there may be seated, reading at your evening stand, a child who shall be potent for the ages. Just unroll the scroll of men mighty in church and state, and you will find they nearly all came from log cabin or poor homes.
Genius almost always runs out in the third or fourth generation. You cannot find in all history an instance where the fourth generation of extraordinary people account to anything. In this country we had two great men, father and son, both Presidents of the United States; but from present prospects there never will be in that genealogical line another President for a thousand years. Columbus from a weaver's hut, Demosthenes from a cutler's bar, Bloomfield and Missionary Carey from a shoemaker's bench, Arkwright from a barber's shop, and He, whose throne is high over all in earth, and air, and sky, from a manger.

Let us all be content with such things as we have. God is just as good in what he keeps away from us as in what he gives us. Even a knot may be useful if it is at the end of a thread.

At an anniversary of a deaf and dumb asylum, one of the children wrote upon the black-board words as sublime as the Iliad, the Odyssey, and the "Divina Commedia" all compressed in one paragraph.
The examiner, in the signs of the mute language, asked her: "Who made the world?" The deaf and dumb girl wrote on the blackboard, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."
The examiner asked her, "For what purpose did Christ come into the world?"
The deaf and dumb girl wrote upon the blackboard: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

The examiner said to her, "Why were you born deaf and dumb, while I hear and speak?" She wrote upon the blackboard: "Even so, Father: for so it seemeth good in thy sight." Oh, that we might be baptized with a contented spirit.
The spider draws poison out of a flower, the bee gets honey out of a thistle; but happiness is a heavenly elixir, and the contented spirit extracts it, not from the rhododendron of the hills, but from the lily of the valley.

A MISSIONARY BATTALION.

How a Great Organization to Provide Recruits from the Colleges for the Missionary Field Originated and Developed.

ONE of the most important Conventions of the closing years of this century will be held at Cleveland, O., next week. This is the third Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions. Fully fifteen hundred delegates and invited guests will probably take part in the Convention, and during the five days of its sessions will consider the foreign missionary problem in all its aspects. The delegates will be, first and chiefly, students in our colleges; secondly, professors who are engaged in the training of students intending to become missionaries; thirdly, representatives of the missionary Boards, the Young People's Societies and of the Young Men's and Young Women's Associations; and fourthly missionaries in heathen lands who happen to be in this country for rest and recuperation. The object of the Convention, as of the two former ones which were held in 1891 and 1894, is to promote the cause of Foreign Missions, both in securing volunteers for missionary service and in stimulating the interest of the churches in order that funds may be supplied for aggressive work. The one branch is as necessary as the other, and organized plans will be devised for the promotion of both.

PROF. J. R. STEVENSON.

MT. HERMON, MASS., THE BIRTHPLACE OF THE MOVEMENT.

A more interesting gathering it would be difficult to imagine. There is something absolutely heroic in such an assembly. Some of those present will be men who have taken a brief respite from their labors in Africa, in China and other lands that their lives may be prolonged for more extended service. Others will be young men who have gone into institutions of learning to get the best education that can be given, but who do not propose to use it for their own enrichment or glory, but that they may become more efficient in the service of their Master. They are pledged to devote their lives to the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen. They propose to turn their backs on the prizes the world offers to the highly-educated young man, to leave the honors of the legislative halls, the courts of justice, the pulpit and the learned professions to others; to leave home and friends and civilization and to brave the perils of climate and wild beasts and still more savage men, that they may tell to the perishing millions the glad news of salvation. The world calls such men fanatics, and wonders how they can be so blind to their own interests. They are throwing away their chances, their comfort, their very lives. It is true; but they serve Him who said: "Whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it." And the veterans in the service with whom they will converse at this Convention, who know all the hardships and privations of such a life, will applaud their purpose and encourage them to persevere. If disinterestedness, self-sacrifice and devotion to a cause make men heroes, this will be an assembly of heroes.

The origin of the movement, which is bringing these young men and veterans together, is deeply interesting. It took shape some twelve years ago, when a number of students in colleges accepted Mr. Moody's invitation to spend a few days with him in the beautiful scenes of Northfield. It was a bright company of young men, who were preparing for the bar, for the medical profession, for commercial life, or for the pulpit, who came together and spent part of the day in conversation and Bible reading, and part in fishing, boating and swimming. A hearty, cheerful set of men, full of energy and exuberant life. There were two hundred and fifty of them, representing eighty-seven colleges scattered through the United States and Canada. Ten happy days passed, and the subject of foreign missions was not mentioned. But at the end of that time, three young men: Wilder, of Princeton; Tewkesbury, of Harvard, and Clark, of Oberlin, issued an invitation to all among the students in the company who were thinking seriously of foreign mission work to meet and make one another's acquaintance. Twenty-one responded, and at their meeting, prayer was offered that the spirit of missions might pervade the whole conference.

A few days afterwards the prayer was answered in a remarkable manner. On July 23, 1886, a meeting, which has since become famous as "The Meeting of the Ten Nations," was held at Mount Hermon. At this meeting addresses were given by ten young men, of whom one was a Japanese, another a Siamese, a third a German, a fourth a Dane, a fifth a Norwegian, a sixth an American and a seventh an Indian. The other three were respectively the sons of missionaries in China, India and Persia. These speakers in brief, thrilling words, presented the need of the heathen for preachers and described the opportunities waiting to be used by men who would forget themselves and their own interests for Christ's sake. Many a young student spent the following night in prayer. At the final meeting of the conference the company of twenty-one, who had attended the original meeting, had grown to one hundred, who pledged themselves, if God permitted, to go out as missionaries to the heathen.

Conversing over this wonderful consecration, the suggestion was made that a large number of recruits could be obtained, if the need and the duty were laid before the thousands of college students through the country, who had not been able to attend the conference at Northfield. The opinion of students who were there, confirmed the belief. Accordingly, a deputation was appointed to visit the colleges and present the case. Mr. Robert P. Wilder and Mr. John N. Forman consented to go, and a generous merchant, whose name was not disclosed, undertook to pay the expenses of the tour. During the following year one hundred and seventy-six institutions were visited, and at the end of the year the number of volunteers had grown to two thousand two hundred. So large a number rendered organization necessary, and it was reached through existing societies. The College Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and the Inter-seminary Missionary Alliances, of Canada and the United States, were each invited to name representatives, who should form an executive committee to direct the movement. The committee so nominated consists at present of Mr. John R. Mott, Prof. J. Ross Stevenson, and Miss Pauline Root, M.D., whose portraits appear on this page. As Messrs. Wilder and Forman were going to their fields of foreign labor, secretaries were appointed to continue their work.

Since the organization of the Committee, the work has spread systematically from one institution to another, until now there are few of the eight hundred colleges in which there are not some volunteers. Once in every three years a great convention is held. At the first, which was held at Cleveland, O., in 1891, there were present six hundred volunteers from one hundred and fifty-nine colleges, and thirty returned missionaries, representing every missionary field. At the 1894 convention, held at Detroit, Mich., one thousand one hundred students attended, and representatives of fifty missionary societies participated in the conference. Since that time the movement has grown rapidly. Through its work eight hundred missionaries have been added to the force in the field, and a much larger number are ready to go whenever the missionary societies have funds to send them. Besides this, the institutions of learning in heathen lands have now societies of young men who will devote themselves to Christian work. This is largely due to the visit which Mr. John R. Mott paid last year to these missionary fields. In China these societies are strong and enthusiastic. It has now been decided to send Mr. Robert E. Lewis, one of the secretaries of the movement, to China, to assist Mr. D. Willard Lyon in directing and extending the work of organizing these societies of native scholars. He expects to sail next month if the necessary funds can be raised in time. It is believed that the key to the evangelization of China will be found in the movement. The Christian young natives in the Chinese colleges make efficient preachers, and the number of them is steadily growing. The approaching convention will give Mr. Lewis, who has been an indefatigable worker at home, a hearty God-speed on his mission.

A MISSIONARY VISIT TO PEKING.

Mrs. S. L. Baldwin Describes the Hardships and Privations of Missionary Residence and Travel in China's Capital.

FROM Bai-Tai-Ho by the Sea we returned to Tien Tsin, and on the Imperial Chinese railroad, just opened, we made our way eighty miles to Peking. The road is only completed to within four miles of the Sacred City. We had a large compartment to ourselves, as we had a delightful party of sixteen, our missionaries from different stations, joining us, to attend the North China Conference, which was to convene at Peking the next day, under the presidency of Bishop Joyce. Leaving Tien Tsin, we sped over a level and monotonous country, and soon were in full view of the "New Sea," extending over a vast region of what were once prosperous fields, villages and towns. The New Sea was made by the awful flood of 1890. In that year the Yellow River, Grand Canal, and a tributary of the Pei Theo, united to overwhelm the people. The Yellow River has been called "China's Sorrow," and justly, for year after year it has brought death and destruction to the people and their property. But when the three sources of disaster united in such a flood as history rarely records, four million of these poor Chinese people were swept to death. The Government furnished some relief to the sufferers but its agents cheated the poor people. More than once the Government has given the relief to the missionaries to distribute, as they could be trusted. This is a great testimony to the character of missionaries. They did their utmost to help the sufferers, but the bitter winter set in and froze over this "New Sea," and the poor people were cut on little pieces of their land all that was left to them, in the midst of the desert of water. The ice was not strong enough to travel over, and too strong for boats to pass through. In a Christian land or country, some method would have been devised for relief but not so here, and the people were left to freeze and starve. They ate willow leaves, it such were to be found, and bark of trees, thus hastening the end. This "New Sea" is a grave. Who can measure the suffering it has covered?

sacrifice of innocent lives, which prompt action can save. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, therefore, has urged forward the relief work with all possible haste. Learning that Gen. Lee, our official representative in Havana, was so fully occupied with the receipt and distribution of the relief supplies, that there were many cases of suffering to which no special attention could be given, it was decided to enlist the active co-operation of the American National Red Cross, more particularly in dealing with thousands of starving and sick Cuban mothers and children. Dr. Klopsch accordingly communicated with Miss Clara Barton, President of the Red Cross, with a view to inducing her to go to Cuba in person and undertake this important duty.

Miss Barton's acceptance was conveyed in the following communication:

THE CENTRAL CUBAN RELIEF COMMITTEE

Appointed by the President of the United States and acting under the direction of the Department of State. Headquarters: Temple Court.

NEW YORK CITY, Feb. 4th, 1898.

Dr. Louis Klopsch, Proprietor "Christian Herald," New York City.

MY DEAR MR. KLOPSCH:—Your noble and esteemed letter of the 31st ult., addressed to Miss Clara Barton, President of the American National Red Cross, asking if she would proceed immediately to Havana and take up the work of establishing hospitals, particularly for the relief of the starving and sick mothers and children, and pledging the generous support of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to the extent of $10,000 a month, was duly received. I am requested by Miss Barton to ask pardon for the seeming delay in responding to your letter, and explain that she was compelled to defer the acceptance of your offer (which she most earnestly desired to accept) until she could have an opportunity to confer with the Secretary of State, and through that department, with Consul-General Lee at Havana. In order that she might know that such an undertaking would entirely meet the fullest desires and approval of the Government.

It was only last night, at a late hour, that she was able to come to a final decision that she could go, and to determine how soon she might be able to take her departure. It is with great pleasure that I am now instructed to say to you, in behalf of the American National Red Cross, that Miss Barton accepts your proposal and has made her preparations for leaving the Saturday night train from Washington, D. C., via Tampa, Fla., which should enable her to arrive in Havana on Tuesday morning next. Miss Barton desires me to add that as soon after her arrival in Havana as she can ascertain the precise situation and necessities, and formulate a plan for carrying out your suggestion, she will communicate with you fully in the matter.

In going to Havana, she carries with her letters of introduction and commendation from the Department of State and the President to Consul-General Lee. She also carries a letter from the Spanish Minister at Washington, expressing the full approval of her mission by the Spanish Government.

Very sincerely yours,

STEPHEN E. BARTON,

Miss Barton is now in Havana, actively superintending the work among the starving mothers and children. The Relief Fund could have no better representative. She is organizing her special work with rapidity and thoroughness born of long experience in similar fields, and we trust that her co-operation may be the means, under Divine Providence, of saving many lives and relieving untold misery in the capital and the famine-stricken towns and villages throughout the provinces.

The news received from Cuba during the week is both sad and hopeful: hopeful as showing the rapid and effective relief measures, and depressing, inasmuch as it reveals the fact that the resources thus far available will scarcely suffice to alleviate a fraction of the suffering. Dr. Brunner, the United States Sanitary Inspector in Havana, writes that "all home products were consumed months ago," which startingly suggests the condition of the multitudes whom it is at present impossible to aid. Mr. H. V. Boynton, writing of the official information received at Washington, says:

The tales of continuing starvation of the reconcentrados grow in horror with the arrival of every mail. The most careful estimates that have been made at Havana by those possessing the fullest information there place the numbers that have already been starved to death very little, if any, below 400,000 men, women and children. The death rate from starvation still prevailing is on the increase instead of diminishing.

It is with no desire to harrow the feelings of our readers, who have the cause of Cuba so deeply at heart, that we print these statements, so full of foreboding. We believe that, with the relief machinery now at work, and with an energetic and generous effort on the part of our own church organizations and church fraternities—every individual aiding in the work—a fund can be quickly raised which will most effectually stem the tide of famine and suffering and death. With Gen. Lee and his entire consular staff available for the task of distribution, and with Miss Barton and her experienced aids also in the field, the benevolent American people, knowing the terrible emergency that now exists in Cuba, will not impede the life-saving work by delays but will respond to the call for aid with generous hearts. It is a glorious opportunity for Christian service, in which every one should have a part. There is not a man, woman, boy or girl in this favored land who may not, if willing, save a life in Cuba!

We give to-day as announced last week, another letter from Mr. Sylvester Scovel, now in Cuba, in which he discloses for the first time, the truth concerning the famine on the island:

HAVANA, Feb. 10.

One of the saddest phases of the situation here is that many thousands of deeply religious people have died and been hastily interred without the slightest form of religious ceremony, or any attention from the church.

La Union, of Colon, prints this pathetic description:

Every day we see the dead being carried to the cemetery by their friends. A few days ago there passed by the tiny skeletons of two dead children. They were carried by their father. He bore them in a small, codfish box, tied around with a string, so that the little bodies should not fall out. At each step he had to stop for rest. This lasted all the way to the cemetery. And do you think that any one helped? Not one. Because, inasmuch as the friends of the dead victim have to reopen an old grave, nobody accompanies the bodies, so as not to be forced to such work.

A Havana daily is right in terming starving Cuba as "Without doubt the most horrible spectacle ever presented to civilized humanity!" Hundreds of hamlets, villages, and towns have been almost depopulated. Many are completely so. Even some of the largest cities of Cuba are in danger of extinction. They will be actual "cities of the dead" very soon, if the American people do not aid their perishing people.

I quote from El Correo, the leading daily of Matanzas, a city of 50,000 inhabitants, and formerly of great wealth.

The harvest of death in this capital could not be more terrible. If an immediate and energetic remedy is not applied very soon, Matanzas will disappear through the extinction of its inhabitants.

The article further gives the death rate from July to December. It commenced at 321 and ran up to 1,283 for the month of November.

Another Spanish newspaper states: "Attention should be called to the town of Alphonso XII, where, of eight thousand there would be a national outpouring of relief by the shipload.

A "DEAD CART" ON ITS ROUNDS, SAGUA LA GRANDE.

It takes but ten cents a day to save a life. This estimate does not provide for any reduction in price, nor gifts which might be made by large manufacturers of food products. The Spanish Government allows the entry of America's charity free of duty, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The principal steamship line to Cuba has already transported donations of food and clothing free of charge. The local railroads have given a reduction of forty per cent. in freight rates, and may remove the tariff altogether. And there are plenty of willing hands to distribute the saving food to starving lips. The statement that 250,000 human beings will starve if not fed is absolutely true, and another 250,000 persons have starved too long to be saved except by almost impossible measures. But the figures are nothing compared to the suffering itself.

Photographs are feeble. Each gives you but one aspect of its subject. But when every slow glance, every feeble movement, every new position makes a human being's torture impinge sharper and sharper upon your brain, then and then only can you realize what it means to starve to death. Nearly all of the subjects photographed could stand up, and nearly all of their fellows can move about, and get what little the private charity of exhausted Cuba still offers.

Ten cents a day will save a life. U. S. Consul Brice of Matanzas, at first supported his destitute American citizens for that amount. Mr. Hyatt, in charge of the government relief to its citizens in Havana, states that he is at present supporting his charges on less than ten cents a day, and that with food purchased at war prices right in Havana. The cost of medicines is included in this estimate.

Most touching scenes occur daily when rations are issued to American citizens. In Sagua la Grande, the other day, Consul Barber was superintending this work. A Cuban woman, with a baby in arms, appealed for aid. The Consul could not aid her then, for had he done so, there would have been a crowd of three thousand other victims thronging the consulate in an hour's time. Like a very large proportion of the "reconcentrados," the woman's weakness of body had dulled her brain. She could not understand why her baby, too, should not receive its bottle of milk. There were other women there. This one spoke for all. She said: "Why won't you give us food, also? We are Christians like the Americans? We have hunger just like the Americans? We have babies?"

Half a million human beings are starving to death in Cuba. They have been told "the Americans" would help them. There are a million sad eyes turned longingly northward. They are principally the eyes of women and children. Hundreds of thousands of mothers' lips are praying for the lives of their little ones. The American people can save them.

SYLVESTER SCOVEL.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will send free to all who are interested in this work, an illustrated pamphlet on the Cuban famine, which contains all the essential facts and is specially designed for the use of churches and religious societies, leagues and similar organizations. All contributions for Cuban relief should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Next week's issue will include a supplement, containing acknowledgments of all moneys received for this purpose up to date.

NEARLY HALF A MILLION DEAD OF FAMINE.

These Statistics of Cuba's Hunger-Plague are furnished by Mr. Sylvester Scovel, now in Cuba, and are drawn from official and other sources. They are entirely reliable.

Normal population of Cuba		1,600,000
Cubans living out of Cuba during the war	100,000
Cuban insurgents and their families in the field	270,000	370,000
Number of "concentrados" in fortified towns:		1,230,000
"Reconcentrados" brought into towns (now dead)	380,000
Lower classes of towns-people (dead)	100,000
Estimated number dead of starvation		480,000
Alive in the towns of Cuba to-day		750,000

These figures are wholly outside of losses sustained by the war.

Dangers of City Life.

OUR city life is destroying too many young men. There comes in every year a large influx of those between sixteen and twenty-four years of age, and the united cities that are now known as the Greater New York damns thousands of them every year. They are shovelled off and down with no more compunction than that with which a coal-heaver scoops the anthracite into a dark cellar. What with the wine-cup and the gambler's dice, and the scarlet enchantress, no young man without the grace of God is safe.

There is much discussion about which is the worst city of the continent. Some say New York, some say New Orleans, some say Chicago, some say St. Louis. What I have to say is, you cannot make much comparison between the infinities, and in all our cities the temptation seems infinite. We keep a great many mills running day and night. No rice-mills or cotton-mills. Not mills of corn or wheat, but mills for grinding up men. Such are the grog-shops, licenced and unlicenced. Such are all the gambling saloons. Such are all the houses of infamy. And we do the work according to law, and we turn out a new grist every hour, and grind by warm hearts and clear heads; and the earth about a cider-mill is not more saturated with the beverage than the [illegible] about these mind-destroying institutions is saturated with the blood of victims.

We send to Long Island neighborhoods and villages, "Send us more supply;" and to Baltimore and Chicago and all the other cemeteries of New York, "Send us more men and women to put under the wheels." Give us full chance, and we could grind all the municipal mill five hundred a day. We have enough machinery. We have enough men who can run them. Give us more comes to crush! Give us more paternal hearts to pulverize! Let us be the lever the wheel rolled and the crush! Bodies and the [illegible] of [illegible] and children. Give us more material for these mighty mills, which are set with fires of hell, and with [illegible] and thundering [illegible] the earth quakes at the [illegible] God, who will [illegible] cannot repent, cover us with pack and ice deeper than in August of the year of 79, Vesuvius avalanched Herculaneum.

But all does not stop here. It comes to the door of the drawing-room. There are men of leprous hearts that go into the very best of society. They are so fascinating—they have such a bewitching way of offering their arm. Yet the poison of asps is under the tongue, and their heart is hell. At first their sinful devices are hidden, but after a while they begin to put forth their talons of death. Now they begin to show really what they are. Suddenly a cloud, blacker than was ever woven of midnight or hurricane drops upon some domestic circle. Oh, there are scores and hundreds of homes that have been blasted, and if the awful statistics could be fully set before you, your blood would freeze into a solid cake of ice at the heart.

Real Happiness.

THE grandest luxury God ever gave man is health. He who trades that off for all the palaces of the earth is hopelessly cheated. "Oh," says some one, "it isn't the grosser pleasures I covet, but it is the gratification of an artistic and intellectual taste." Why, my brother, you have the original from which these pictures are copied.

You see people happy and miserable amid all circumstances. In a family where the last loaf is on the table, and the last stick of wood on the fire, you sometimes find a cheerful confidence in God, while in a very fine place you will see and hear discord sounding the war-whoop, and hospitality freezing to death in the cheerless parlor.

I stopped one day on Broadway at the head of Wall street, at the foot of Trinity Church, to see who seemed the happiest people passing. I judged from their looks the happiest people were not those who went down into Wall street, for they had on their brow the anxiety of the dollar they expected to make; nor the people who came out of Wall street, for they had on their brow the anxiety of the dollar they had lost; nor the people who swept by in splendid equipage, for they met a carriage finer than theirs. The happiest person in all that crowd, judging from the countenance, was the woman who sat at the apple-stand knitting. I believe real happiness oftener looks out of the window of an humble home than through the opera-glass in the gilded box of a theatre.

Premiums Without Cash Payment.

VERY many inquiries have been received at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office recently as to whether the Standard Encyclopedia could be included among the list mentioned in the article, entitled, "Premiums without Cash Payment," published in our issue of January 12, 1898. In reply, we now include the Standard Encyclopedia, and for the benefit of those who have subscribed since its appearance, we republish herewith the article in full.

* * * * * *

This year we are determined to make strenuous efforts to increase the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to a quarter of a million copies weekly, and in order to accomplish this we stand ready to make large financial sacrifices. Therefore we have prepared the subjoined table of inducements which we feel sure will prove strong incentives to our friends to co-operate with us in bringing about this gigantic result, which will more firmly secure for the ever popular CHRISTIAN HERALD the proud distinction it already enjoys as the leader of the religious press of the world. Let it, however, be plainly understood that our stock of Minion International Teachers' Bibles is only large enough to meet the requirements of our present subscribers, and that therefore no subscriptions with the Minion Bible Premium can be received under this offer.

* * * * * *

To earn a Minion Teachers' Bible, red under gold, Divinity Circuit binding, you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a Long Primer Teachers' Bible, red under gold, Divinity Circuit binding, with Thumb Index, you must secure three new subscribers either with or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn an Art Bible, London Edition, red under gold, Divinity Circuit binding, with Thumb Index, you must secure seven new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a Standard Encyclopedia—1,000 pages, 800 illustrations, bound in cloth and gilt, you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a Christian Herald Library, ten beautiful volumes, artistically bound in cloth, aggregating 3,200 pages, all contained in an attractive bookcase—the greatest attraction ever offered by us—you must secure three new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn a copy of Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's great book "Stepping-Stones to Happiness," nearly five hundred extra large pages, beautifully illustrated, and very handsomely bound in cloth and gilt, you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

To earn Wm. M. Thayer's stirring book, "Onward to Fame and Fortune," concerning which hundreds of letters teeming with highest praise have been received by us—four hundred and fifty extra large pages, exquisitely illustrated with many original costly wood engravings—a book actually worth its weight in gold—you must secure two new subscribers either with, or without premium.

* * * * * *

It goes without saying that no compensation other than the premiums mentioned above can be allowed on subscriptions received under this proposition, and that, therefore, every order must be accompanied by the full amount in cash without any deduction whatever. All these special offers will positively be withdrawn March 1st, and any of them may be closed sooner should our present stock of that particular premium be exhausted, in which case opportunity will be given to select some other premium, or, if preferred, all the orders and remittances will be promptly and cheerfully returned.

It fur agrees that each one of its members shall assu in turn, the duties of clerical director.

WINTER'S PROBLEMS.

EARS of a repetition of the blizzard of 1888 were entertained in many cities on February 1. During the whole of the preceding day the snow fell continuously and the night brought no relief. ıe morning, however, broke clear and ight, but in the afternoon the sky again came overcast and a fresh fall com- nced. The conditions were so similar those of the great blizzard of ten years o, that a like experience seemed to be pending. New York's new government s face to face with the problem which s perplexed its predecessors and it pro- ed by their experience. The street- aning bureau was encouraged by the surance from the Weather Bureau that e worst of the storm was over, and omptly set to work to remove the five ches of snow that had fallen. The firm ich has the contract for e removal of snow let it known that any man, ho wanted work could ve it and anyone who d a horse and wagon ight earn a few dollars carting the snow to the ers. There were plenty applications. In about hour after word was ven to commence opera- ns, more than eight ousand men, and a mot- y collection of three ousand wagons were ac- ely engaged in the work removal. Even with is large force it was es- mated that four or five ys would be necessary clear the city of snow. he cost will be some- ing over twenty thou- nd dollars, but as those ho benefit by it are the nemployed and needy, ere is no reason to regret ıe outlay. Boston suffer- d more severely by the orm than New York. The ow settling on the tele- raph and electric-light ires in and around the ty, weighted them to uch an extent that, when high wind set in during ıe night of January 31, ıe wires and poles were rought to the ground. or a period of nearly twenty-four hours ll telegraphic communication with the utside world was cut off. In a few cases here communication with New York was nperative the messages were cabled to ngland and thence repeated to New York. he surface car service was almost en- irely suspended and even the steam-cars an slowly and irregularly, with frequent tops, for the employees to remove the allen telegraph poles from the tracks. Conservative estimates place the loss of he city by the blizzard at not less than a nillion and a half. Worse still are the eports from the coast. More than thirty chooners were wrecked in Massachusetts Bay, with a loss of twenty lives. The eaches from Cape Ann to Cape Cod ere strewn with wreckage. It is said hat it is twenty-five years since so terrible storm ravaged Boston and the neighbor- ood. With all his boasted advancement, nan is helpless in the presence of the orces of nature, and when they arouse hemselves he has to admit his impotence.

He giveth snow like wool; he scattereth the hoar rost like ashes; he casteth forth his ice like mor- els: who can stand before his cold? (Psa. 147 : 16).

A Mysterious Patient.

A funeral service in Brooklyn, N. Y., on February 4, ends the mystery which, for four years past, has surrounded the occupant of a small isolated building in the grounds of the Brooklyn Home for Consumptives. Within its walls was a young man who was carefully tended, but who never came in contact with the patients in the Home, and whose name and disease were unknown. It is now explained that the patient suffered from leprosy. He was the son of a wealthy Southern merchant. About five years ago, when he was fourteen years of age, it was noticed, on his return home from boarding school, that there were peculiar marks on his hands and feet, and he had fits of lassitude and depression, which could not be explained. As the Southern physicians did him no good and were unable to diagnose his case, his father brought him north and consulted a specialist in skin diseases. Then he learned that his boy was a leper and that there was no hope of cure. It was useless to take him home, and no hospital would receive him, so an arrangement was made with the managers of the Brooklyn Home to erect a refuge for him on their grounds, where he would be within reach of the best medical skill. It was comfortably furnished, and he had occupied it with a nurse for four years, while the disease took its inevitable course to its fatal termination. The isolation must have been very painful to the boy, but it was necessary to prevent the spread of the disease. We are not as careful in the case of moral lepers, though the contagion from them is infinitely more disastrous.

Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate and touch not the unclean thing (II. Cor. 6 : 17.)

Fatal Worry.

An interesting article by a physician on "the worry that kills" is published by a Boston journal. He admits that the direct effect of worry on the constitution is not understood. It is well known that it brings on disease of the heart, of the arteries, and of the kidneys, but how it operates on these organs cannot be explained. The indirect method, however, is easily understood, and it is quite as fatal. This is when the worry keeps a man awake at night, and leads to indulgence in opium, cocaine, chloral, alcohol, or tobacco. In such cases, though worry is the primary cause, the poisons are the fatal agents, whose operation is easily recognized. In describing the kind of worry that produces fatal results he discriminates between that and the natural anxiety, and care, which all thoughtful men have and cannot avoid. These do not do such deadly injury. It is the impatient expectation, the horrible foreboding, the useless vexation over things that go wrong, which, he says, do the mischief. In some churches "Don't Worry" clubs are being formed, at the suggestion of Mr. Theodore F. Seward, and it would be a good thing if their principle became universal. Christ himself cautions us against worry.

Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof (Matt. 6 : 34).

Two Days Adrift.

A government torpedo boat, which arrived at New York on February 1, brought two men who had a narrow escape from drowning. They were employees of a contractor who has a dredging contract on the Long Island coast. Each man was in charge of a scow which carried the refuse to the dumping ground. On the day before the recent great storm the scows were loaded, and a tug took them out to the dumping-ground, as usual. On returning they were struck by the storm, and the wind and waves were so high that the tug was obliged to abandon the scows. It was about seven in the evening that the tug cut loose. The men on the scows were absolutely helpless, but happily they had their week's provisions on board and plenty of coal. They were drenched to the skin, and were almost dead with cold. The scows were stanch, but were little likely to weather the storm if they were driven out to sea. This was what the men feared, and they arranged to watch in turn for some vessel to take them off. During the night none was seen, but on the following day several passed, but none came within hailing distance. They found an anchor on one of the scows and tried to use it, but it would not hold. During the second night and the following day the scows continued to drift, and the men had no idea where they were. At the close of the second day, just as the sun was setting and the prospect of another night's exposure oppressed them, the torpedo boat hove in sight and bore down upon them. They succeeded in attracting the captain's attention, and a yawl was lowered, which took them off. They had been adrift for forty-eight hours, and were then thirty-five miles off Barnegat. The scows have not been heard of since, though tugs are out searching for them. They were worth seventeen thousand dollars, but the men willingly left them when an opportunity of being saved came to them. They did not need long persuasive appeals as men do who are adrift in life and in danger of perishing eternally.

Thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, for they hear thy words, but they do them not (Ezek., 33 : 32).

Underground to the Klondike.

A New York policeman brought a prisoner to the Sixty-eighth street station a few days ago, who was under a singular delusion. The officer saw him walking rapidly along the avenue beside the park, but did not observe anything strange about him. He carried a large satchel and seemed to be going on a journey. Later on, the policeman saw him again, but he had set down his satchel in the middle of the road and was wrestling with the cover of a man-hole of the sewer, which he was trying to raise. He did not know how it was fastened, but after a struggle he removed it and was just about to descend into the sewer when the policeman seized him. In answer to the officer's questions, he said, he was bound for the Klondike gold-fields. He was poor and out of work and he had been reading of the rich finds of gold there were there, so had determined to go. He had figured out the route and had come to the conclusion that the circular plate in the roadway was an underground way. The policeman at once realized that the man was crazy and after a hard struggle took him to the station whence he was taken to Bellevue. The poor demented creature would have been smothered, if the policeman had not seen him and saved him from descending into the sewer. It is a pity that there is not some way of saving men who are not crazy, from crawling through moral filth, which pollutes the soul, to gain the riches on which they have set their hearts.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition, (I. Timothy 6 : 9).

An Involuntary Separation.

A husband and wife who live in a New Jersey village had an unpleasant experience one morning last week. They had gone to Jersey City to attend some social celebration and did not leave for home until the early hours of the morning. It was very dark and the snow was deep. They waited a long time at the cross-roads for the trolley-car which went to their village. Owing to the severe weather, the cars were running irregularly through the night, and the one they wanted was much behind its time. Other people came to the corner and waited with them denouncing the car-company, the motor-man and all concerned in the delay. When at last the car arrived, it was full of passengers. One or two ladies squeezed in, and among them the wife of the man from the village. Before he could get on the crowded platform, the conductor, anxious to make up lost time, pulled the strap, and the car went whirling away into the darkness. The husband was in consternation; his wife, as he knew, had no money to pay her fare and would be anxious about him. He ran after the car for some distance shouting to the conductor to stop, but no heed was paid to him. He took the next car that came along, got a transfer to another car, and eventually, by a round-about route, reached his home. But his wife was not there. He waited half an hour and then, being extremely anxious about her, returned to Jersey City in search of her. He stopped at several places on the way, to make inquiries, but could find no trace of her. Finally he asked the assistance of the police, but neither could they find her. In despair he returned home and there found his wife waiting for him. Having no money for her fare, she had been put off the car and had trudged home, a distance of six miles through the snow. She had been as anxious about her husband as he had been about her, and had worried over his absence while he was looking for her. Christian workers sometimes have to deal with analogous cases of anxiety, when inquirers are unable to find Christ who is waiting to receive them. But they are able to give the assurance that David gave to his son:

If thou seek him he will be found of thee (1 Chron. 28 : 9).

The Sunday School

WARNING and INVITATION.

Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 27. Matt. 11: 20-30. Golden Text, Matt. 11: 28.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE ministry of John the Baptist had come to an end, and this faithful forerunner of his Lord was now in prison. He had been unable to understand the lesson of the cross: questions had arisen in his heart which needed a solution, otherwise the foundations of his faith would give way. Was he not the voice in the wilderness foretold by Isaiah? Was he not the man which should prepare the way of the Lord? Did not the angel Gabriel come from heaven to declare this to his father Zachariah? Had he not been God's instrument to turn the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, of whom the prophet Malachi (4: 5, 6) had prophesied? How then should the Lord, of whom he was the herald, and who was anointed to preach deliverance to the captives (Luke 4: 18), leave him an undelivered captive in Herod's prison? Was he, after all, deceived? He sent his disciples to Jesus with the inquiry, "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?" To which Jesus sent in answer the message, "Blessed is he which shall not be offended in me."

"And the Lord took occasion to bring home to the men of his generation their great responsibility. As a generation they had not repented either under John's ministry or under his. A few had become disciples, but public opinion, which for a season rejoiced in the light of John the Baptist (John 5: 35), had now so changed that men said, "He hath a devil," and his own popularity was also on the decline: public opinion declared him "a gluttonous man and a wine bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners." It was then that Jesus "began to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done because they repented not. Woe unto thee Chorazin, Woe unto thee Bethsaida, for if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment than for you. And thou Capernaum—" Capernaum with the first city visited by Jesus after he had wrought his first miracle (John 2: 12), and when he proceeded to his own city Nazareth, he said to the people who were prejudiced against him as being only the carpenter whom they had known from childhood: "Ye will surely say unto me this proverb: Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country. Meaning that his mighty works had been done there. It was at Capernaum that the man sick of the palsy was let down through the roof with the withered hand had been healed. And now speaking possibly in this very city he says, "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day."

"Exalted unto heaven." Such is our Lord's estimate of a city the inhabitants of which have seen and heard divine things: which had witnessed the undoubted working of God, which has had the very presence of Christ: the kingdom of God has come nigh unto it. How many cities are there which have been thus exalted unto heaven, and because they have looked upon the working of God with indifference, must be cast down to hell! "Unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance, but from him that hath not," that hath not made his own that which in the grace of God came within his reach, "shall be taken away even that which he hath" (Matt. 25: 29). Let us not forget that God deals with us collectively as well as individually. The special grace of belonging to a city which has been blest with holy and faithful witnesses to Christ, or to a family in which there have been more than usually godly members, is an exaltation of privilege, a coming near of heaven which makes the guilt of rejecting Christ immensely greater than in such cities or families which are not so blest. Privilege entails responsibility.

"At that season Jesus answered." Who did he answer? How much of communion went on between him and the Father of which neither the disciples nor the world knew anything? Some words were spoken audibly, but how much of the secret communing between the Father and the Son, while Jesus was on earth, is unwritten and unknown! Was it, perhaps, a moment when, not only John the Baptist, but the Lord himself, was suffering acutely at the failure of John's ministry and his own to work a change on the chosen people of God, to whom he was sent? Was the Father revealing to his Son the lesson of the cross, and of the utter ruin of the flesh? To that which his Father was communicating to him he answered aloud: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Babes, little ones, helpless ones ignorant ones! To such only can God reveal himself. Every particle of self-dependence, every counting upon what we are, upon our disposition, our education, our ancestry, our religious experience, our success as workers, everything which renders us self conscious, makes us, just so far as we are so, unconscious of and independent of God. A babe is only self conscious so far as to know its existence and its needs, and therefore its complete dependence on others. The very attitude of our Blessed Lord at that very moment was that of a babe. A babe has every thing to receive and nothing to give but itself. And this complete weakness is looked on by God to supreme power. Limitless weakness to limitless power! "All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." How did the Lord at that moment apprehend that all things were delivered unto him of the Father? Perhaps it dawned upon him as Man, (for his Father wakened him morning by morning to hear as they that are taught Isa. 50: 4, 5; Ps. 5), that the unlimited power of the Father dwelling in him (John 14: 10) was contingent upon his maintaining the place of the babe.

SIDON, ON THE SYRIAN COAST OF THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

FOUR important points are emphasized in the verses selected for the lesson: 1. A principle regulating the divine judgment of men. Christ intimates that God will take into account the privileges men have had when estimating their respective culpability. 2. The way to attain spiritual insight. It does not come from education, but through a docile, receptive spirit. 3. Christ's claim to a knowledge of God greater than is possessed by any other being, one of the most emphatic and explicit of his assertions of his superhuman nature. 4. A promise of what he will do for those who come to him. They are promised rest, but it will be a rest in a yoke, the emblem of active, useful labor.

It shall be more tolerable. We are familiar with this principle in our own courts of justice. The jury decides whether the prisoner has done what he is charged with doing: then the judge passes sentence, and he is usually allowed a wide discretion as to the penalty. Broadly stated, a man who takes something that does not belong to him is a thief; but it would be unjust to inflict the same punishment in all cases. A man who has starving children at home steals a loaf of bread to satisfy their hunger. A boy who has been born among thieves and has from infancy been in an atmosphere of dishonesty, picks a pocket. A young man who is well educated, and carefully trained, steals money to spend in dissipation. All these are thieves, but how different are their degrees of guilt! There is a man now spending his time in a convict settlement, harnessed with others to a cart laden with stone, which they have to drag from one end of the prison yard to the other like horses. At his trial for forgery witnesses were brought to testify to his good character. It was shown that he had been educated at school and college, that he had been regular at church, and that his home was beautifully furnished, and contained a library and beautiful pictures. "There is no excuse for you," said the Judge, in passing sentence; "you had all the advantages a man could have, and you knew the heinous nature of your crime. I shall therefore give you the heaviest sentence in my power." And he sentenced him to hard labor for twenty years.

Revealed them unto babes. The people who are most easy to teach and who learn most are those who are conscious of their own ignorance. When a man thinks he knows something of a subject, he is apt to challenge the statements made to him and look critically at the facts. It is easier teach a child how to behave well than teach a man good manners, if he thin his deportment is already right. A nu ber of theologians discussing the junction to pray without ceasing, w unable to come to an agreement as its meaning. After they had separat the servant who waited on one of th and had been in and out during the c cussion, asked her master what decisi they had reached, and was told that th had not settled it. "What do you thi Mary?" her master asked. "Easy enou sir," Mary answered, "when I am ab my work I am always praying. Whe light the fire I pray that God will kin his love in my heart. When I wash dishes I pray that he would cleanse soul from sin. When I wait at tabl pray that I may always do his will. It easy enough to pray without ceasing."

Neither knoweth any man the Fat save the Son. Some travelers on ocean steamer were discussing the me of prominent men, and among others, character of a Justice of the Supre Court was discussed. One of the pa who had practised as a lawyer in Court, and declared he knew him w said he was a stern, hard-hearted m strictly just and of unimpeachable tegrity, but destitute of sympathy compassion. "I should like to tell yo story about him," said one who had yet spoken. And he related how the Ju had sat up night after night with a friend, and how after his death he educated his children and placed them in life. Other instances he gave of pecu kindness and tenderness. "Are you s they are true?" he was asked. "Oh, y was the reply. am his son. 'I need to live w my father to kn how good he is. does not par that side of s character in t Court."

I will give rest. All these were hurt by the y and their necks chafed by it, but the docile, docile, peaceable animal found yoke easy and no inconvenience at all.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Worshipping By the Sea.

Shore Service Among the Simple Belgian Peasantry.

EVER SINCE the days when Jesus of Nazareth and his disciples spoke to the multitudes assembled on the shores of Lake Galilee, it has been the custom in different lands where the Christian religion prevails, to hold gatherings for divine worship by river, lake or sea. In the dark days of the faith, when Christians were persecuted unto death, many found a refuge among the rocky or wooded coasts of the Mediterranean. In the old Covenanting days in Scotland, gatherings by sea-shore or lake were frequent, and when persecution raged in the different countries of Europe, the lakes of Switzerland the fjords of Norway and Sweden, and the rocky coast of Normandy were often witnesses of the assembly of little groups of worshippers who dared not meet in the towns and villages.

Better days have dawned since then, and persecution no longer threatens the followers of the Nazarene, but services by the sea-shore are still held in many lands. In the bright summer time, when the winds are cooled by the waves, the beaches of Europe and of our own land hold many a gathering of God's people assembled for open-air devotions. At our great camp-meeting grounds by the sea, thousands of worshippers crowd the thousand listen to the Gospel message. In the photograph on this page, we have a beautiful scene presented—a service among the fisher-folk of the Belgian coast.

An arm of the sea runs into the land, and the country folk come in boats or often walk long distances to their place of religious meeting. It is Sabbath on the sea-shore, and the peasants have gathered around their good pastor to listen to the words of life as they fall from his lips; and to lift their voices in unison of prayer and song. They wear their "Sunday best," though barefoot sits one little maid, holding in her hand the Bible —the prized Lutheran prayer book. See how attentive the faces are. They have learned to believe in their God, these folks who battle with wind and wave and wrest a living from the sea or from a stubborn soil. The promises mean much to them. They love, too, the good pastor who comes to serve them. Though they have no fine church in which to worship. With the blue sky over them for dome and the sea as organ and orchestra, surely they, in their temple, "not made with hands," are in the presence of the loving Heavenly Father. Looking at this out-door "church," we think of other out-door services, where Christ Himself was preacher; and we seem to see the sea of Galilee and the One who walked upon it, and who sat down beside it, to eat a fisherman's meal with His disciples.

A GOSPEL SERVICE BY THE SEA, BELGIUM.

Kind to the Old Black "Mammy."

A Constant Reader, H. A. W., of Danville, Va., sends this pleasant reminiscence: In a Southern family is an old colored "Mammy," now living, who is over ninety years old. She nursed my children's grandmother, my wife, and one of my own children. After the war, she was given a small, well-located piece of ground, and a comfortable log cabin was built on it, not very far from the old homestead; and there she lives to-day, more comfortable than thousands in our broad land. The last time my children saw her (which was while they were on a visit to the old place) when they were leaving, she took one of them around the waist, and drew the child to her and kissed it. I think it unfair, not to say unfortunate, that some publications should be made to mislead the opinion of really true Christian people in regard to the relation formerly and even now existing between the two classes in the South. Volumes could be written which would prove the great and truly Christian interest felt by the whites in the South for the negro.

Smile Whene'er You Can.

When things don't go to suit you,
And the world seems upside down,
Don't waste the time in fretting,
But drive away that frown;
Since life is oft perplexing,
'Tis much the wisest plan
To bear all trials bravely,
And smile whene'er you can.

Nuts As Food.

Perhaps the reason that nuts have been found unwholesome is that they have not been treated as a substantial meal or part of a meal, but as dainty additions to a meal already complete.

Of all valuable nutrient substances, says an exchange, nuts are, without doubt, the most neglected. Although nuts are relished alike, by both king and peasant, by children and adults, they are, in civilized countries, seldom employed, except as luxuries. Some of the finest uncivilized races live almost wholly upon nuts. Chestnuts are the chief sustenance, during a greater portion of the year, of the stalwart and shapely peasants who inhabit the slopes of the Appennines. Nuts contain the choicest of nutrient elements, complete in variety and admirable in proportion. A pound of almonds is equivalent to a pound and a quarter of beefsteak in blood-making qualities, while it contains more than fifty per cent. of an easily digestible and assimilable fat. The peanut has a still larger proportion of proteids, the equivalent of nearly a pound and a half of the best beefsteak for each pound of peanuts, besides fat and other nutrient elements in ample proportion.

Two Good Qualities.

"Grit" and "Grip" (slang words, which, since they mean very good things, are passing perhaps into good English, as words with lesser right have passed before them) indicate rather sure measures of bringing success to any interest in whose furtherance they are engaged. To good charities, to every worthy word and work, we should see that they are brought, and contrariwise, that ill things die by lack of their employment—so far as we may contrive it so. To train our children to such courage, endurance and tenacity of purpose that we can trust them in the dangerous issues of life, to hold on to high principles is a blessed privilege of parentage. The Academy, in relating this anecdote of a famous writer, furnishes a very striking illustration of certain qualities in a son and confidence on the part of a father that we would be glad to see existing in all sons and daughters, and between all parents and children in the moral issues of life:

When Mr. Rudyard Kipling was a lad he went on a sea voyage with his father, Mr. Lockwood Kipling, and the following incident which occurred is characteristic of the young writer's early grip on things. Soon after the vessel got under way Mr. Kipling went below, leaving the boy on deck. Presently there was a great commotion overhead, and one of the ship's officers rushed down and banged at Mr. Kipling's door. "Mr. Kipling," he cried, "your boy has crawled out on the yard arm, and if he lets go he'll drown." "Yes," said Mr. Kipling, glad to know that nothing serious was the matter, "but he won't let go."

Day by Day.

In accomplishing your day's work, says Dr. Cuyler, you have simply to take one step at a time. To take that step wisely is all that you need to think about. If I am climbing a mountain, to look down may make me dizzy: to look too far up may make me tired and discouraged.

Take no anxious thought for the morrow. Sufficient for the day—yes, and for each hour in the day—is the toil or trial thereof. There is not a child of God in this world who is strong enough to stand the strain of to-day's duties and all the load of to-morrow's anxieties piled upon the top of them.

A Husband's Tribute.

The following beautiful lines were written by a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Mr. S. C. H.) to his wife on the fifty-fourth anniversary of their marriage:

Yes, we go gently down the hill of life,
And thank our God at every step we go;
The husband-lover and the sweetheart-wife;
Of creeping age what do we care or know?
Each says to each: Our four score years, twice told,
Would leave us young. The soul is never old!

What is the grave to us? Can it divide
The destiny of two by God made one?
We step across, and reach the other side,
To know our blended life is but begun.
These fading faculties are sent to say:
Heaven is more near to-day than yesterday!

A Much-Traveled Postal Card.

IN these days of extensive postal facilities, little is thought of the distances a letter may travel before it reaches its destination. Very few missives go through the mails, however, that have so remarkable a history as the postal card photographed on this page. A reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. A. E. Augur, of Peoria, Ill., in sending the photograph, accompanies it with a short account of the travels of this wonderful card.

A POSTAL CARD THAT TRAVELED 30,000 MILES.

It started from Peoria on Oct. 16, 1897, and two days later arrived in Montreal, Canada, whence it was despatched to London, arriving there eleven days after being dropped in the Montreal mail. Thence it was sent to Cairo, Egypt, being six days on the way. Eleven more days were consumed in the journey to Bombay, India, and twenty-five days from Bombay to Sydney, Australia. From Sydney to San Francisco the journey occupied thirty-six days, and four days later, on January 10, 1898, it returned to Peoria, its starting point. The time occupied in the journey of 30,000 miles was ninety-five days.

A Word for Farmer Boys.

There are few people in our enlightened age so unwise as to scorn the homely virtues of a farm life, or so ungenerous and ignorant as to turn into ridicule the awkwardness of the country lad come to town. This sort of bad manners is being rapidly relegated to the dark ages of the past. On the farmer boy's native heath, the city youth who laughed at him would find conditions reversed, and himself at a disadvantage. The city youth, conversant with the state of the stock market, or with the intricacies of the dry goods business, and thoroughly up-to-date on the latest thing in neckties, might discover that he had never been admitted to that inner sanctuary of Mother Earth's mysteries, where the tiller of the soil walks at will, sowing and reaping and drawing life directly from her bounty. "Seed-time and harvest" would be as hidden things to him. It might, says a writer in Young Men's Era, be sometimes profitable to the city youth and encouraging to the farmer boy to look at the list of great men who came up from the farm—not all of them, for that would fill a thousand volumes, but some of the most able ones that flash into mind in a moment. Nearly three-fourths of the men who have been chosen by the people for the great offices of the nation are men who were early familiar with wooded hills and cultivated fields. Follow the list yourself, and see how long it will become.

The Little Child.

For the child, says a distinguished writer in the Northwestern Monthly, everything should be a religion, book and star, home and school, work and play, teacher and companion; heaven should entwine and illumine them all. The child is a gift of God, as the early Christians, by their loving names.—Dorothea, Theodorus, Theophania.—sought to show, and men and women ought to be god-like to receive him. The "Gospel of Infancy" needs not merely a gift of tongues, but of heart and soul as well.

THE CROYDON SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Story of a Pastor's Experience.

BY REV. BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT.

ONE of the foremost members of Manning's church said one day to him, "Probably there are more superficiality, pious blundering, and serious failures in Sunday School work than in any other form of Christian activity. "But," replied Arthur, "what elements of power there must be in an institution to give it such popularity and from which, in spite of its faults, such good is realized by the Church? What successes it has scored! And what a hold it has to-day on all the churches!" And as the young minister pondered the criticism of the wise layman he resolved to begin at once a radical reform in the Sunday School department of the church. And this is the way he began: He preached a sermon, delivered a lecture, appointed a "Council" and organized his forces. The results outreached his expectations.

The sermon made an impression. Here is a mere outline of it: John 21: 15–17: "Feed my lambs. Tend . . . Feed my sheep." The soul of the commission is in the first part of it—"Feed my lambs." The church must feed the lambs and not merely record their names; feed, and not merely frolic with them in Sunday School socials and picnics; feed, and not merely exhibit them as at county fairs, on anniversaries, exhibitions, Christmas festivals, Easter displays, be-ribboned and be-ruffled, with bells around their necks and bleatings in their untrained voices; feed, and not frighten them by the goads and frantic cries of Evangelistic raiders; feed, and not shear them for the gain of ecclesiastical, eleemosynary and educational enterprises. It is the business of the church to feed the lambs; if lost, to find them; to fold them securely in the enclosure of the church; to lead them by still waters, in green pastures, and in ways of righteousness; to restore them when weak or wounded; to comfort them in sorrow and to train them up from lambs to sheep, and then to continue the good work of feeding, folding, tending, leading, restoring and comforting them all their days. He showed how much the adults of the church needed the care and instruction of the Church; how being "disciples," all church members required teaching in the Word of God and in the way of holy living and service. He pleaded for the help of all parents, of all church officers, of all educators and of all citizens, who believe that the ethical and religious life of the people must tell on the well-being of the state. The sermon made an impression, although on so trite a topic. Manning announced that on the following Wednesday evening he would give a lecture on the subject, and requested the presence of organist and chorus-choir, that the exercises of the evening might be attractive, and in the interest of the broader, larger, better, more thorough and more reverent educational work of the church. Cards of invitation were sent to all day-school teachers, to the more thoughtful club women of the town, to the Board of Education, and to all pastors—of all denominations. The local press published the programme including the title of the lecture: "Working Together in the Larger Christian Education."

There was a crowded house. People will turn out when something fresh and good turns up. The organist rendered as a voluntary "Shepherd's Farewell to the Holy Family," from "The Infancy of Christ," by Berlioz. "Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us" was sung, and as a solo, "That Sweet Story of Old," by Mazzulo. Then after a brief and most fervent invocation, Arthur Manning discussed the following propositions: 1. The true development of society is promoted by the true development of the unit. 2. The true development of the unit is through the wise efforts of units. 3. And upon the right environment and efforts at the most susceptible period of life; therefore the power of the home. 4. The personal and social development depends upon collateral and related agencies—the day-school, the press, the parlor, the playground, the lyceum, the political ideals—in a sentence, all agencies and influences that make for personal character and that create a true social atmosphere. He insisted strenuously that the religious schools and the "secular" schools must of necessity influence each other. Each needs the other. The very separation is an advantage. The spirit of each will the more successfully dominate the other. His seven requirements closed a thoughtful and powerful address: 1. Realness—Earnestness in the personal character of those who represent the Church. 2. Thoroughness in all kinds of work that the Church attempts. 3. The Spirit of Genuine Sympathy—The sweetest and strongest ties of friendship to give vitality to the work. 4. Genuineness—Reverence and fervor in every act of worship—in song and prayer and silent waiting. Flippancy and thoughtlessness in acts of public worship blight and wither the soul. 5. The care of units by units—Every individual church member having sympathetic and helpful supervision over some other individual. 6. The uniting of all the educating factors in the one work of developing strong personal character—parents, teachers, church officials, pastor, comrades. 7. First and last and always—The True Home. This meagre outline gives but little idea of the directness, fervor, and power of Arthur Manning's evening talk. It started conversations and discussions in more than one household. Some said, "It's good theory," and others said, "Impracticable!" But after all, there was a new interest awakened. Some good souls offered their services to visit and "look after" children who lacked home care. Four Sunday-school teachers resigned. They did it conscientiously. That their "feelings" were not hurt was proved by their presence in one of the best Bible classes the Sunday after as "scholars." And four better teachers took their places.

* * *

One evening, not long after the "Lecture," a group of ten persons was seated around the library table in the Croydon Parsonage. It was what Arthur Manning called "Our Church School Council." Of the personnel, I have nothing here to say, but the official relations were as follows, 1. The Pastor. 2. The Sunday-school Superintendent. 3. The President of the Young People's Society (which in this case was the Epworth League). 4. A representative of "Home," whose duty it was to study the family in its relation to church and school life, to collect data, to select and circulate literature on parental responsibility and co-operation, especially in Sunday-school work; to hold a monthly "Mothers" meeting, and to promote systematic and judicious visitation of all the Homes of the Church. 5. A representative of the day-school who was commissioned to investigate the school-life of the town, the points of weakness and peril, the attitude of teachers toward the church, and the great end of all day school work—the building up of character. 6. A representative of biblical and religious literature and of supplemental lesson work, who was expected to aid superintendent and pastor in "out-of-school" Bible study, in the selection of books of reference and general reading for teachers and older pupils, on biblical subjects, on travel in Bible lands, and on stories illustrating the various periods of Church history. 7. A representative of the regular international lesson system, who should be able to defend the system, to aid in its adjustment to other special courses of study, and to show how it may be adapted to a general and comprehensive plan of graded study. 8. A representative of periodical, permanent, local, and general literature, the contents of the public libraries which may be of value to our part of the reading public, the best books for young people, etc. 9. A representative of senior work for the adults and the young people of the Church, the questions arising in connection with the "older scholars," the possibilities of more effectual co-operation with young people's societies, college, and "university clubs," for stimulating young people to literary and educational endeavors. 10. A representative of aggressive, personal, missionary work, for the reaching of neglected neighborhoods, and for aiding and encouraging young men and women to take a deeper interest in the higher things of life.

In this "Council," Arthur Manning had a body of loyal helpers. He was compelled to change two or three who soon discovered their lack of tact, adaptation or enthusiasm. He found a few points of collision which needed delicate, and, in one case, heroic treatment. But he held on to his plan. His Council grew enthusiastic. Each member held a little conference of his (or her) own and developed an immense amount of local information to bring to the Council Sessions. Manning himself gained breadth of view. The best people of the town were delighted with his radical way of working. It was a combination of the most modern and effective methods of seminary and mission work. The whole Church and the homes it represented and the Day School and the library and the local papers were inspired by it.

* * *

The Sunday School of Croydon Church was not reorganized. There was no flourish of trumpets. There was no immediate change in the Sabbath program, no smell of new paint, no burst of music, no crowd of spectators, no announcement of what "we are," or what "we are going to do." It was not a reform in things outward. But at the heart there was a new life and with it new light and new force, higher motives, deeper conviction, more intense enthusiasm, and soon thoughtful people detected the sense of reality in the School, more reverence in worship, more conscientiousness and concentration in study, more true soul in the singing, and one good mother one day said: "Somehow there is a great change in Croydon Sunday School." And the Principal of the High School answered, "We feel it in the Day Schools of of the town." And of the many good things that were said, and of the many strange things that happened in Croydon because of Arthur Manning and his "Council" the scribe hath not yet begun to make mention.

TOPEKA, Jan. 25, 1898.

THE GOSPEL SETTLEMENT.

Mrs. Bird, its Founder, Writes of its Progress in the East-side Slums.

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD, the founder of the Gospel Settlement at No. 211 Clinton Street, New York, sends us this interesting letter, which many of our readers will take pleasure in reading:

Having received many letters of inquiry about our Gospel Settlement from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, may I have the privilege of replying through your columns. Our success in reaching our tenement neighbors with Christian influence has been far beyond our expectations. Among the many kind things said to us at the dedication of the Settlement were these: "When the dark days come (as come they will) and those friends who surround you to-day seem to have forgotten your struggles, always remember our God never forgets us, and he will supply all our need." Many times these words have come to us the last few weeks. We find ourselves in the midst of misery and sin, sickness and suffering, and God sends friends to help. Our hearts were agonized at the realization of the condition of the homes of the dear children with whom we come in touch through our classes and clubs. One morning there came from Dr. Klopsch a letter enclosing a check, and all hearts were happy here in our settlement, for now we could go on supplying the needs of the little children.

How I wish you could go one day with our missionary trained nurse, as she finds hid away in attics and rear tenements the sick babies, crippled children—yes, and suffering mothers. She can always, through these gifts, give some nourishing food, supply good milk, fruit, or any of the necessities. The poverty and sickness combined is sometimes appalling. This missionary nurse who has given her services to us is a consecrated young woman, of experience. She goes with simple remedies to these comfortless homes, and daily administers to the sick women and children, makes their bed and spends an hour or more in each home, as the case may require. We need friends who will give us monthly a small sum to use exclusively for this work among the sick poor.

We have full classes at the settlement every night—cooking, dressmaking, sewing and mending clothes, darning stockings, kitchen garden talks on "How to make a home happy and attractive,"—physiology, hygiene, Decarte Friendly clubs, Happy Home clubs, Mothers' Meetings. Last week we had thirty mothers and seventeen babies, and upon inquiry found the thirty mothers represented one hundred and twenty-eight children. Many of these mothers are Jewish and listen eagerly to the reading of the Bible. The praise service on Sunday afternoon is led by turn by the saved men of the Rescue League of the Bowery Mission, followed by a Christian workers' social tea.

The social work of our Gospel settlement forms a subject of much thought along socialistic lines, and our life here on the East Side, brings before us overwhelming problems, but to-day the most serious is how to supply industries for men who, out of home hearts, are crying for work to keep the wolf from the door.

Friends are invited to write to Mrs. Bird personally, and she will gladly report what the settlement workers are doing.

CLOSE TO CHRIST.

The Solution of the Problem of being in the World without Being of it Luke, 10: 38–42; John, 17: 20–26.

Of all nations on earth and of all periods of the world's history, the American nation, at the close of the Nineteenth Century, is most characterized by the disposition which Christ observed in his hostess of Bethany. "Thou," he said, "art anxious and troubled about many things. The hurry and rush of modern life, its busy days trenching on the nights, its demand everywhere that men shall be "hustlers," the urgency with which we insist on speed in work and travel, as the first necessity rather than thoroughness and safety, are all signs of this unquiet disposition. Christ did not condemn, but he said that there was something better. We have need to remember this, otherwise in our hurry, we may miss the best part. It is right that we do our duty in the world and that the Christian shall not be characterized by incapacity, or stupidity, but worldly things are not to monopolize our thought and energy. The problem we have to solve is, how to be in the world without being of it, to be efficient in our occupations without being dominated by them. This can be done only by keeping in close touch with Christ, by having the spirit of love and tenderness and control passion, which will keep us from worldliness. It is not so difficult to do this as may appear at first sight. There are excellent men of business, alert, courageous, far-sighted, who seem to be absorbed in their business, yet who never lose consciousness of their home, or of the loved ones there for whom they are working. The thought of them gives them energy and endurance and stimulates them to greater activity. We may sometimes forget as we see such men at their work that they have wife and children, but they never forget. So it may be with Christ. The close walk with him will not diminish our energy or capacity, but it will keep us from sin, from subservience to worldly principles, and from everything that may alienate us from him. It should save us too from worry, from foreboding and from the distressing anxiety which embitters and shortens so many lives. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace," says the prophet, "whose heart is stayed on thee." So it is that there remaineth a rest for the people of God and he that believeth hath entered into rest. The harass of life is powerless to touch such men, because they have an armor in their love and confidence which is impervious to the thrusts.

"The Preacher's Saviour."

A writer in an exchange tells this anecdote of Spurgeon:

A gentleman was visiting a friend who was an admirer and lover of Mr. Spurgeon. "I have never heard him," said the visitor, "but I will go and see whether he deserves such praise." On his return from morning service, his host asked, "What do you think of him?" "Nothing." Seeing the look of astonishment and sorrow on his friend's face, he said: "No, nothing." But his eyes filled with tears of joy as he added: "All I can think of is not the preacher himself, but the preacher's Saviour!"

A Little Woman Missionary.

Sara Curry's Good Work for Slum Babies and Their Mothers.

THE "Little Missionary's" Day Nursery, now located in large, sunny rooms at 355 East Tenth street, New York City, has been in existence a little over one year. During that period over one thousand five hundred children of the slums have been cared for during the day while their mothers went forth to work to earn enough to keep their homes together. The nursery is in a district which abounds in vice and poverty, and where children are much neglected. The hard-worked mothers, who would look after their little ones if they could, have no time for maternal cares, even if thoroughly competent to rear their children. Toiling from early morning till late at night, they return home worn out in mind and body.

MISS SARA CURRY, MISSIONARY.

A GROUP OF MISS CURRY'S LITTLE CHARGES.

The nursery is under the direction—if it may not be called literally the creation—of Miss Sara Curry, a woman, small in body and great of heart and in faith. Miss Curry came to New York in the fall of 1894, and for about a year was in charge of a day nursery at Mariner's Temple, from which she was called to mission work by Rev. E. L. Cox, pastor of the Eleventh Street M. E. Mission.

Part of this work was in Chinatown. How through the events which brought Miss Curry to her nursery and her nursery to her, a golden thread of purpose seems to run so plain that one can but see it. Early in September, 1894, Dr. Stone and Mr. Cox, standing at the foot of the stairway leading up into one of the towers of the "Old Asbury," which at that time stood in Washington Square, planned to establish at least half a dozen cottage prayer-meetings in the surrounding community. They did so—all of these but one held for a longer or shorter period—the remaining one had an exceptional career; it resolved itself into a praying-band, and at last began work in Chinatown, where they held meetings from ten at night till two in the morning. Miss Curry was drawn into this midnight work in Chinatown, and the going back and forth to it brought her in continual contact with the children of the streets. "The streets seemed to be full of them—children turned out loose, as a farmer would turn his sheep to graze—children hearing and seeing nothing that was good. One day she saw one of these waifs as a big truck went over and crushed him. From this day forth, stronger than ever from her heart went up the cry: "God, give me a place, so I can care for the little children, whose mothers go out to work; and the little children whose mothers, needing work for their sakes, yet seek it not, because if they do, the little ones must run wild."

Her prayer was answered; hearts were opened; friends helped. She took a floor and started the nursery, which quickly filled to overflowing. The mothers of the slums knew her goodness to little ones; worthy women who needed a place at which they could leave their children while they worked were glad to trust their little ones to her keeping. During her mission work her gentle ways had won the hearts of the street urchins, crowds of whom would follow her to the mission on Twelfth street and to the Sunday-school, which was started there by her. Tenement homes learned to long for the coming of the quiet, practical, yet withal, firm, friend, who helped, not only with kind words, but with purse and hand. She would tidy a room, cook for the sick—in fact, do anything to alleviate the poverty, distress, or untidiness of any needy family; and the result is that the poor love her.

In her present work for the babies, she has not forgotten the mothers. Many mothers have been won to Christ through her kindness to their little ones; brutal husbands and fathers have learned to honor the religion of this gentle friend, who made their homes cleaner and sweeter. Rich men and women have been glad to see their money distributed by her wise and conscientious hands, and her work has grown and prospered. From cramped quarters on Avenue C, the nursery was recently moved to its present location. Mr. D. M. Torrey, banker, and treasurer of the institution, (and one of those men who, holding their wealth as a trust from God, make it a blessing to their fellows), has been a strong and active helper in this work for mothers and children of the slums. The Fresh-Air Camp, at Westfield, N. J., is an interesting summer feature of the work. This camp is not only for the refreshment of babies, but of mothers also. It is possible for many mothers to accompany their babies in the outing, and so a double blessing is conferred.

The Mothers' and Children's Fresh-Air Camp was at first literally what its name implies, the only shelter being a large tent, which was furnished through the efforts of Mrs. Geo. E. Woolfe, whose husband had generously given the site of the camp. It was not long before good friends in Westfield and elsewhere saw to it that a substantial dormitory was provided. This good work, which needs means to carry it on, well deserves the support of all who have the interest of the poor of the slums at heart.

Grace Darling's Early Death.

Mr. G. A. Darling, the surviving brother of Grace Darling, the heroine who saved the sailors from the wreck of the Forfarshire, recently told the story of her early death. He said: "She was on a visit to Alnwick Castle, by advice of the Duke and Duchess. In driving home there was a tremendous rain. She got a severe cold, and, being a spirited girl, did not complain enough until it was too late. She contracted a malady from which she never recovered. There is a monument in Bambrough churchyard. By a heavy gale of north wind it was partly destroyed. The figure was very little the worse. It lay three years in ruins until there was a subscription raised to repair it. You will see she is reclining, with an oar on her arm. You may see in a book that my brother was on shore the morning the Forfarshire stranded, so that left only my father and mother with Grace on the rock at home. It was a trying time for my mother—only herself on the rock at the lighthouse.

Work Given Up

Because Dyspepsia Had Broken Down His Health—How the Disease Was Completely Cured.

"I was troubled with dyspepsia for twelve years, and at last my health became so much run down I was obliged to give up work. I took medicines but with very little improvement. I kept losing strength and flesh and fell off in weight from 155 to 116 pounds. After this I became so I could do very light work, but later I was seized with terrible pains in my back in the region of my kidneys. I also had vomiting spells after eating. I then gave up all other medicines and began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. After using three bottles I could do a fair day's work and I continued taking the medicine until I was cured. I now weigh 156 pounds and am well most of the time. I still take Hood's Sarsaparilla whenever I need a tonic and blood purifier and it always helps me." J. B. Worn Out?

Do you come to the close of the day thoroughly exhausted? Does this continue day after day, possibly week after week? Perhaps you are even too exhausted to sleep. Then something is wrong. All these things indicate that you are suffering from nervous exhaustion. Your nerves need feeding and your blood enriching.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, contains just the remedies to meet these wants. The cod-liver oil gives the needed strength, enriches the blood, feeds the nerves, and the hypophosphites give them tone and vigor. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Business Girls' Qualifications—Young People and Fun—About a Fickle Lover.

OUR conversation the last time we met turned upon some practical issues. One of my younger friends ran in, bright and cheery, but a little discouraged because she could not at once succeed in getting such a position as she longed for. She asked me to tell her what in my judgment was really the most essential outfit for a young woman who had to make her way in the world. "Tell me," she said, "in two words what a girl must possess in order to fit herself to earn her own living." I answered that to condense advice into two words was not a very easy thing; but that if she would give me only those two, I would say that common sense included more than almost any other phrase of which I could think. A young girl going into business must lay aside, for one thing, all superfluous thoughts of personal vanity. Her dress should be neat, plain, and inconspicuous. She should be comfortably shod, if possible; and her skirts should be short enough to let her walk over wet streets without getting her clothing unpleasantly damp.

If she is engaged to be at her desk at a certain hour, she should never be even one minute late. She should allow herself sufficient time between the hour for leaving her home and the time for arrival at business, to make her punctuality certain. Punctuality is one of the most important requisites in a business woman's outfit. She should always be ahead of her work, and never have her work crowd her because it is at loose ends and not finished in time. If a young girl undertakes to be a stenographer, she requires an accurate knowledge of spelling and grammar. If her desire is to be a reporter, she still needs to know how to spell, to write good, straightforward English in grammatical form, and to get right at the heart of the thing she is sent to see and to describe. Far more than many people think success is dependent upon a thoroughly elementary knowledge. That which is taught in the primary school and in the earlies classes of the grammar school is more important to success in life nine times out of ten than is what we call, for the want of a better term, the higher education. A young woman who wishes to succeed must have a modest, yet firm degree of belief in herself. She must not be timid about entering new fields, but she must remember that the way to the new field is always through the old one; that only those who can follow the beaten path are ever fitted to strike out into new roads.

* * *

When I was a girl the avenues for employment, so far as women were concerned, were very few in number. A woman had to support herself, it gently thought upon might turn to sewing, to teaching, or, had appropriate age, to keeping a boarding-house. In these days, there is absolutely no limit to the occupations which women have made their own. Photography is one of the most inviting among the arts which women are pursuing with great success to themselves, and with a large variety of merit, but not every one who has a keen will learn to produce artistic pictures. The ways in which women can earn as honorable as the people themselves.

I know a bright girl who determined to [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

TWO NATIONAL HEROES.

Contrasts and Resemblances in the Characters of Washington and Lincoln.

BY REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

WASHINGTON had been dead only six years when Lincoln was born. The two men were dissimilar in many regards—in complexion, in feature, in physical form, in intellectual constitution, al especially in environment. Washingt 's father was well-off and left a large eate: Lincoln's father sold his little fm in Kentucky for ten barrels of whisk and twenty dollars in cash, started vn the Ohio river for his new home in Iliana, when the flat boat struck a snag, ping the whiskey and a part of the hsehold goods into the water leaving h penniless. At the time of his inagural, Washington, in his own name, through marriage, was thought to be of the richest men in the United tes. Lincoln was hard up for money his life. Washington wore silk stockis, Lincoln never had a pair of stockings his feet till he was grown. Washington re costly shoes with silver buckles; Lincoln went in his bare feet except in nter time, when he wore a rude pair of es made by his father. Washington re the finest linen, the loveliest purple, al from the time he was in his teens the utiful blue and buff uniform of an cer, rode a spirited charger, carried an ant sword and was courted by the ts and ladies of the land. Lincoln up the time he was twenty-one years of wore a deer skin hunting shirt, deer sn pants, and a coon skin cap with the t, attached behind, was surrounded by rs and wolves, was ill at ease in culti ed society and, up to the time he be me President, wore clothing that fitted poorly and a silk hat a season or two of date with the fuzz rubbed the ng way. Wealth gave us one of se heroes, poverty the other; the drawi-room gave us the polished Washingt, the log cabin the rugged Lincoln.

Washington and Lincoln were as differ in their intellectual peculiarities as y were in their physical features. In ir moral characteristics there was a eat similarity between them. There s in each the same fondness of prinple, fidelity to the truth, incorruptible egrity, devotion to country, and in Lin n's last years, the same faith in God.

In looking at Lincoln's character, it is sy to discover that he made Washingh his ideal. Lincoln, it is said, read s and thought more than any other eat man in the world. One of the few oks he ever read through was Weem's Life of Washington." He was a good ed boy at the time and borrowed the ok from a neighbor, Josiah Crawford. eading late one night he became sleepy d tucked the book in a crack between e logs of the hut. A rain-storm that ght pelted in and soaked the book. e was greatly troubled. But he went er to Mr. Crawford's to ask how he ld make it right. The man told him at if he would pull fodder for three ys he might have the book. He did so. d that book got into his blood, into his ain, and became a part of him.

In many ways Lincoln seems to have ed to be just like Washington. On the st of February, 1861, Lincoln, on his y to his first inaugural, stopped at hiladelphia. There was a meeting at d Independence Hall, and Lincoln ke and hauled up with his own hands the top of the flagstaff a new flag made r the purpose. He said that rather than rrender the principles laid down by the unders of the Republic, he would al st rather be assassinated on that spot. id the next day, at Harrisburg, on ashington's Birthday, he said he re etted that he had not had more time at the g-raising at Philadelphia to express his elings toward the revolutionary fathers ich had been the feelings of his life.

There was a contrast in the religious servances of the two men. Washington as a member of the church and attended his religious duties faithfully. When winter quarters at Morristown, N. J., called on the pastor of the Presbyrian Church in the village and asked m if he was to have the Sacrament of e Lord's Supper administered on the llowing Sabbath. The minister answered that he was. Washington asked if members of other churches were allowed to commune. On being told they were, he said, "I will be with you and enjoy the service. I need that kind of food. I am a member of the Established Church, but my heart takes in all denominations." Lincoln, on the other hand, made the great mistake of not joining some branch of the Christian Church.

They were, however, similar in their faith on prayer and divine guidance. Washington believed in the efficacy of prayer, and on the eve of battle was often found in the woods, alone, asking the God of battles for wisdom and victory. It was this faith in Divine Providence to which Lincoln referred in his short address in leaving Springfield for his inaugural the first time. About a hundred friends came down to the train to see him off. He stood on the platform of the last car. The snowflakes were falling softly, and there was the stillness of death as he said: "A duty devolves upon me which is, perhaps, greater than that which has devolved upon any other man since the days of Washington. He never would have succeeded except for the aid of Divine Providence, upon which he at all times relied. I feel that I cannot succeed without the same Divine aid which sustained him, and on the same Almighty Being I place my reliance." Lincoln drank in the spirit of Washington and copied his example in his insistence that this is a Christian nation, and in his maintenance of Christian institutions. In one of his celebrated orders he says: "The discipline and character of the national forces should not suffer, nor the cause they defend be imperilled by the profanation of the day or name of the Most High." At that time of public distress, in adopting the words of Washington in 1776, he said: "Men may find enough to do in the service of God and their country, without abandoning themselves to vice and immorality. The first general order issued by the Father of his Country after the Declaration of Independence indicates the spirit in which our institutions were founded, and should ever be defended."

Lincoln's profound reverence for Washington cannot be more powerfully expressed than in his letter to a certain benevolent society, stating his inability to be present. It closes thus: "The birthday of Washington and the Christian Sabbath coinciding this year, and suggesting together the highest interests of this life and of that to come, is most propitious for the meeting proposed."

Lincoln and Washington, though dissimilar in many ways, were alike in this, that they were ideal men, typical Americans, sincere Christians. It is a tribute to the public virtue of the nation that its two greatest heroes were men, the crown of whose greatness was their goodness.

To Feed India's Orphans.

Ten Thousand Dollars Cabled to India from "The Christian Herald" Fund for the Support of Famine Orphans.

AN urgent letter was received last week from Rev. L. S. Hume, of Bombay, describing the need of the missionaries for help in the support of the orphans they took in during the famine. In response, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD promptly cabled $10,000 to Bishop Thoburn, who is chairman of the Interdenominational Committee of Missionaries, of which Mr. Hume is secretary. This committee, as our readers are aware, was organized last year to apportion the money contributed to this journal for famine relief. Its members are representatives of all the missionary societies laboring in India and are well acquainted with the comparative necessities of the various localities. They have ably and impartially fulfilled the purpose for which they were organized and have carefully expended the ninety thousand dollars remitted to them. It is very gratifying that they are willing to continue their labors and to arrange to apply the remainder of the fund to the support of the orphans as far as it will go.

Mr. Hume writes: "Money is needed as urgently now as it was during the famine. The missionaries have received large numbers of children to their schools and orphanages. This has been done in faith, for, with few exceptions they have no prospect of money from their respective societies for this purpose. Some of them are struggling even now with the greatest difficulty to keep the children until help comes. Our committee has decided to distribute any funds you may remit, to the various orphanages according to their need. I do hope that you will make further appeals to your generous readers for these poor little children.

"The average cost per child is from twenty to twenty-five dollars a year, though some missionaries undertake to support them for fifteen or even twelve dollars a year. Of course the expense is greater in the cities and greater in institutions where the children are well cared for and taught than in those where they are made to work all day for a living. I am satisfied, after nearly twenty-three years of experience, that it pays to spend fully twenty-five dollars on each child. We spend even more than that.

"As the result, all our orphans are well and not one has died. This is the more noteworthy as we have received a larger number of children than any one else in the region. Our friends in the next institution to ours, which is one for girls, have lost many.

"I wish our readers could have witnessed the scene in our church last Lord's Day, when one hundred and forty of our inmates received Christian baptism. A more interesting and beautiful service I never saw. I hope that as you read over your readers have rendered during the time of anxiety and trial will be continued for the famine orphans who have been saved and that largely through their compassion. We feel after careful inquiry that the number of children in the care of the missionaries is slightly over two thousand, and it depends entirely on the Christian public how many of these children it will be possible to keep and educate for Christ. You may take it as a fact that the cost varies from twelve dollars a year per child to thirty dollars, according to the care bestowed and the time that the child is expected to give to education or to work which will contribute to its maintenance."

The above facts will give an authoritative answer to many inquiries addressed to this office, and will explain how it is that the rates ditter in the various institutions. It is, of course, possible to set the children to such work as will bring in money to help in their own support; but it would be a neglect of opportunity to keep them constantly employed in such work, when they might be receiving practical Christian teaching. If any of our readers would be willing to undertake the maintenance of one or more orphans for the five or six years during which they will need support, we shall be happy to put them in communication with a missionary who has orphans dependent upon him, or we will receive their gifts and apply them as with the famine fund. It is specially a Christ-like work to aid these poor little waifs, and God's blessing is explicitly promised to those who minister to the orphan and the fatherless. This blessing many are now enjoying, and the opportunity is open to others. It will be very gratifying to any true Christian if some child, through his means, is not only saved from perishing of hunger, but is trained to labor for Christ in some one of the Christless towns of India.

Similar testimony to the urgent need and the value of the opportunity now open for missionary effort comes from Pandita Ramabai, who has embarked with sublime faith on this benevolent enterprise. In the early days of the famine she received a large number of orphans into her institution at Poona and when help reached her from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund she went into the afflicted districts and collected the child widows who would as she very well knew be among the first and worst sufferers. These she took to her settlement at Khedgaon where she is supporting them. "With the money I received from you," she writes, "fifty girls are supported for a whole year. You therefore have the satisfaction of having helped to save so many lives from starvation or from a life worse than death."

INTENSE SUFFERING

From Dyspepsia and Stomach Trouble.

INSTANTLY RELIEVED AND PERMANENTLY CURED.

A New Discovery, But Not a Patent Medicine.

Dr. Redwell relates an interesting account of what he considers a remarkable cure of acute stomach trouble and chronic dyspepsia by the use of the new discovery, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

He says: The patient was a man who had suffered to my knowledge for years with dyspepsia. Everything he ate seemed to sour and create acid and gases in the stomach; he had pains like rheumatism in the back, shoulder blades and limbs, fullness and distress after eating, poor appetite and loss of flesh; the heart became affected, causing palpitation and sleeplessness at night.

I gave him powerful nerve tonics and blood remedies, but to no purpose. As an experiment I finally bought a fifty cent package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at a drug store and gave them to him. Almost immediate relief was given, and after he had used four boxes he was to all appearances fully cured.

There was no more acidity or sour watery risings, no bloating after meals, the appetite was vigorous, and he has gained between 10 and 12 pounds in weight of solid, healthy flesh.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are advertised and sold in drug stores, yet I consider them a most valuable addition to any physician's line of remedies, as they are perfectly harmless and can be given to children or invalids or in any condition of the stomach with perfect safety, being harmless and containing nothing but vegetable and fruit essences. Price 50 cents an f Golden Seal.

Without any question they are the safest, most effective cure for indigestion, biliousness, malnutrition and all derangements of the stomach I have ever used.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists everywhere at fifty cents for full sized package.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON

QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN

Discovered by Accident.—In COMPOUNDING, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substance, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes as directed, hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT WILL NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heaviest growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without the slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SURPASSES ELECTROLYSIS

Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in MODENE which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility. MODENE is guaranteed to be an harmless application to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use MODENE to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Story of Famous Hymns.*

Jesus Lover of my Soul.—Many accounts are given of the immediate circumstances of the writing of this, the most famous of Charles Wesley's hymns, and one of the most popular in the English tongue. One account is that the poet was standing one day at a window, when a hawk pursued a little bird so closely that it flew against the pane, losing its fear of man in the great danger which threatened: and Wesley, opening the lattice, took it in out of peril, and turned away and wrote this hymn. This story probably arose from the imagery of the opening lines in the first and second verses,—

"Jesus, lover of my soul, Let me to thy bosom fly;"

and—

"Other refuge have I none."

It is quite probable, however, that the hymn had its inspiration on the sea. But short time before writing it. Mr. Wesley had narrowly escaped shipwreck in a storm on the Atlantic, and the words, taken as a whole, seem to indicate that this was the vision before his mind.

Rock of Ages.—Toplady wrote this hymn, which vies with Charles Wesley's "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" in being the most universally popular hymn in the English tongue, while dying of consumption, at forty-six years of age. This knowledge makes especially pathetic the title which he gave the hymn. His thought was that the holiest person in the world must say this prayer. "Thou must save, and thou alone."

Mr. Gladstone, easily the first private citizen of the world, has made a version of this hymn in Latin, and another in Greek. Many distinguished people have used it as a dying prayer, among whom was Prince Albert, the lamented husband of Queen Victoria.

There is a Land.—When young Watts was eighteen years of age, he became greatly disgusted with the ungraceful and silly rhymes which were used in the church where he attended. On a Sunday morning when the singing had been worse than usual, the boy stepped up to one of the church officials and expressed his contempt for the miserable doggerel. In those days youngsters were expected to keep silent in regard to such matters, and the church elder sternly regarded him, and said: "Give us something better then, young man!" The disgusted lad went home and set himself to work to accept the challenge. Before sunset he had written a hymn which was lined off and sung at the evening service. The first verse was as follows:

"Behold the glories of the Lamb,
Amidst his father's throne;
Prepare new honors for his name
And songs before unknown."

He was sitting, one spring day, at his window in Southampton, looking out across the river Itchen. Beyond the narrow river was the Isle of Wight, marvelously picturesque and beautiful in the full glory of its spring coloring. It was one of those lovely days when there is gladness in simply being alive, and as he drew in the fresh air, and his eyes feasted on the beauties of harbor and river, and field and forest, his thought led him on to consider that if God had made so beautiful this world in which we were to spend so short a period, how much more glorious must be the heavenly world which is to be the scene of an immortal career.

One Sweetly Solemn Thought.—Phœbe Cary wrote this beautiful lyric, which will probably outlive all her other poems, when she was only a girl, seventeen years of age. It was on the Sabbath. She had attended church in the morning, and on coming home to a friend's house, her heart stirred with emotion by the services in which she had but just taken part, she retired to her room and wrote this hymn. Metrical versions have been made by many compilers, and the poem is now found in nearly all the hymn books of the English tongue.

After both she and her hymn had become famous, this friend wrote to her, inquiring about the hymn and its story. In answering her friend's letter she says: "I enclose the hymn for you. It was written eighteen years ago (1842) in your own house. I composed it in the little back third-story bedroom, one Sunday morning, after coming from church; and it makes me very happy to think that any word I could say has done any good in the world."

Just as I Am.—Dr. Cæsar Malan, of Geneva, Switzerland, was being entertained in the home of Miss Elliott. The young lady was then in failing health, and during an evening conversation that earnest missionary asked her if she thought herself to be an experimental Christian. She was at first inclined to resent so personal a conversation, and replied that personal religion was a matter she did not wish to discuss. Dr. Malan answered with great gentleness that he would not pursue the matter if it displeased her, but he would pray that she might become a Christian. Some days afterwards she apologized to the minister for her rude answer, and said: "I do not know how to find Christ. I want you to help me." Dr. Malan's reply was, "Come to him just as you are." Neither of them thought at the time that that simple reply would be caught up in song by the whole Christian world, and be repeated for many years to come. It was this reply of Dr. Malan to her personal question that first led to her own conversion, which was Miss Elliott's inspiration in writing her famous hymn.

Nearer to Thee.—This hymn, which has not only found its way into all hymn books of the English tongue, but has been translated into many foreign languages, was written by Sarah Flower Andrews as a record of personal religious experience and as a memorial of gratitude because the author's prayers had been answered. Like many another hymn that has become famous and universally helpful, it was the upspringing of gratitude in a reverent soul, and was written without any expectation that it would become a popular hymn.

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of ten year's standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power

Dr. Hunter's Book on the Lungs

Progress of Medical Science.

A little book published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption, fully explaining their differences and their cure by medicated air inhalations.

Dr. Hunter was the father and founder of the local treatment of the lungs by antiseptic medicated air inhalations, the inventor of the first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of lung diseases, and the discoverer of the only germicide that cures Consumption by destroying the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs of the patient. His treatment consists of healing and cleansing balms applied to the lungs three times a day by his inhaling instruments, the application of antiseptic oils to the chest, which surround the body with a zone of medicated air, and filling the chamber in which the patient sleeps with antiseptic vapors, thus keeping up a curative action on the lungs day and night.

No other treatment in the world is so direct, common-sense, and successful.

Mrs. Milford Jones says: It gives me pleasure to give all the information I can concerning Dr. Hunter and his treatment.

I can truly say that with God's blessing I am a living witness of its power to cure.

My disease was of nearly three years' standing; I had been treated by seven different doctors, all pronouncing my case very serious and some hopeless. I heard of Dr. Hunter and called on him as my last hope. He stated my case very clearly, saying there was a cavity in my right lung which to me looked very dark. He told me he could cure me if I had patience and would be faithful in the treatment, but that it would take a long time.

I am now able to do my housework and work in the store. My friends can scarcely believe it possible for me to look and be so well, for they had expected to bury me long ago.

I firmly believe if you are in a curable condition at all, Dr. Hunter can do it. I feel much interested in all sufferers of such a terrible disease. May God bless Dr. Hunter's treatment to your cure.

Your unknown, but sympathetic friend,
Mrs. MILFORD JONES,
Dover, Morris Co., N. J.

Dr. Hunter's Book contains many similar letters from prominent people who have been successfully treated. It will be sent free to Christian Herald readers by addressing him at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

ASHAMED OF HIS COLORS.

AN English evangelist relates this interesting incident in his Gospel temperance work: "While at a restaurant I met a gentleman whom I had met in temperance work, and noticed that the blue ribbon which had always been most conspicuously displayed in his coat buttonhole at the meetings was wanting. 'Where is your blue ribbon?' I asked. For reply, he opened his coat, and there in one of the buttonholes of his waistcoat was a thin, very thin piece of blue. I asked him why he did not wear it where it could be seen, to which he replied that during business hours it is subjected him to so much chaff from those with whom he came in contact that he thought it better not to let it be seen. I said to him, 'Did you ever hear of Admiral Nelson?' He looked surprised, but answered, 'Yes, of course I have; but what has Admiral Nelson to do with the question?' 'You remember when Nelson was about to engage the enemy at the battle of Trafalgar, he dressed himself in his full uniform, and placed all the medals and orders that he had won on his breast. His officers remonstrated with him, saying that he should take off his decorations, or at least cover them up with a handkerchief, as otherwise he would become a mark for the enemy's musketry. But the gallant admiral would have none of their advice. 'I won these distinctions in the face of the enemy,' he replied 'and I shall wear them in the face of the enemy.' The lesson was not lost upon any hearer, I am assured."

The Great Pamir Desert.

Gradually, and with infinite effort, the Great Pamir plateau in upper India is being explored by intrepid travellers. Dr. Sven Hedin, who has spent the last four years in Asiatic exploration, recently read before the Royal Geographical Society, of England, a history of his travels.

He set out in February, 1894, with a caravan of twelve horses and four men, on the hither side of the Pamir plateau. It was a campaign interrupted by snow-blindness, and once by the loss of half his caravan—but it included several notable finds and notable achievements. Among the achievements was the ascent of the great Mus-tag-ata, which rises like a great frontier fortress in the Central Asian deserts. Mus-tag-ata, the highest mountain in the Pamir plateau, and one of the highest in the world, rises to a height of twenty-five thousand feet, and at the same time constitutes a worthy continuation of the great mountain chains, Himalaya, Kwenlun, Kara-Korum, and Hindu-Kush, which meet to form the roof of the world. Another great and most dangerous achievement was the crossing of the Takla-makan Desert—the "desert of the shifting sands." It was an appalling journey—even the explorer describes it as an unhappy one—three hundred miles in distance, and always traversed in danger because of the great sandstorms and moving hills of sands and quicksands. The first thirteen days all went well, but the following thirteen they could not find water, and Dr. Hedin lost two men, seven camels, and almost all his baggage. As years roll on, the gradual rapprochement of Russia and Britain will invest the centre of Asia with ever-increasing interest.

The Past and Future of Formosa.

The Island of Formosa, says The Missionary Review of the World, now part of the Japanese Empire, lies about one hundred miles from the Western coast of China. Its area is about fifteen thousand square miles, or one-half the size of Scotland. The climate is mild, the natural resources rich, and the soil fertile.

The first effort to Christianize the inhabitants was made in the seventeenth century by the Dutch, who sent thirty-seven ordained pastors to engage in this missionary work. These were finally driven out, and Christianity declined. The present Christian missions were started by the English Presbyterians (1865) in the south of the Island, and the Canadian Presbyterians, Dr. Mackay in the north. The Japanese Christians have put forward the plan of sending preachers to their new possession. One has only to read Dr. Mackay's journals and other writings of the work of Rev. Dr. Talmage to be convinced of the wonderful power of Christianity among these people. Under the influence of the Japanese, the Chinese population will certainly have left the island or sunk into obscurity, thus removing disturbing elements from foreign dealings. The Japanese authorities have forbidden the importation of opium, and have, in other ways, made improvements which are calculated to better the material condition of the people, and to promote civilization, if not Christianity. Now is the critical time in the history of the island.

THE PATRIARCH'S GOD.

I WANT the God who calls me
To heed his blest command:
To "seek a better country"
Within the promised land.
I want the God of promise
To lead me all the way—
I need the God of Abraham
To be my God to-day.

I want the God of Isaac
To bring salvation nigh,
And who a Lamb provideth
That sinners may not die.
I want the God who blesses
And who my path will choose,
Who, when I at the altar bow,
His covenant renews.

I want the God of Jacob
Whose pledge will never fail,
Who, when I plead in earnest prayer,
Will let my prayer prevail.
I want the God who loves me,
Nor lets me grieve too long;
Who brings me to my own at last
And righteth every wrong.

Oh, Israel's God must aye be mine!
My joy, my staff, my stay—
The God of all the fathers
Must be my God to-day.

Children Helping Cuba.

ow the Boys and Girls of Cambridge Are Doing the Master's Work.

A LETTER from Havana contains an interesting account of the good that was accomplished among the oor, starving Cubans by five dollars sent them by the Cambridge, Mass., Boys' nd Girls' Christian Band. It shows at if ever there was a time and place nen a loaf of bread given in Christ's me went a long way, that time is now, nd the place is Cuba. And it shows what n be accomplished by the pennies of a nd of little children. Those five dollars ve brought food and happiness to at ast five poor Cuban homes.

This is not the first and only good deed, y any means, of the Cambridge Boys' d Girls' Christian Band. The institu- on is quite unique, and our readers ll be pleased to hear something of its story. In 1883, Mr. S. Paine, the Bos- n merchant and philanthropist, who ad long been active- connected with the

A LITTLE BAND MAID.

THE BAND TRUMPETER.

Sunday School of the Broadway Baptist Church in Cambridge, organized an association called the Children's Band," and its membership was thrown open to all creeds. It started with twenty-three members, but the present enrollment now exceeds two thousand five hundred, the association four times outgrowing its quarters, and moving into larger halls. Conditions of membership establish an age limit of five to fifteen years; and each new applicant must be introduced to the secretary by a child already enrolled, who becomes responsible for the new member's obedience to the rules. Admission to the hall is by ticket, each registered attendance card bearing name, street, number, and age of the member holding it. As children enter, the number for the day is punched on cards by doorkeepers. Regular meetings, held on Saturday mornings, show an attendance seldom less than one thousand two hundred, and often exceeding one thousand five hundred. "God's word has a charm for children," explains Mr. Paine, when people wonder how children are so ready to "sacrifice" their weekly holiday. At 8.45 service opens with singing of Gospel hymns, accompanied by piano, organ, and cornets, all the children singing. At nine a ringing stroke of the gavel brings the meeting to order, and Superintendent Paine says: "Good morning, children," and the children respond: "Good morning, Mr. Paine." Then all heads bowed in prayer, as with one voice they repeat:

Jesus take this heart of mine,
Make it pure and wholly thine;
Thou hast bled and died for me,
I will henceforth live for thee.

Notices are given out, and requests for prayers for the sick are made by uplifted hands. Again all the heads of the members are bowed in prayer, and follow their leader sentence by sentence, in prayer for the sick and bereaved.

Passing out of the hall, each child receives a paper—the girls THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the boys a youth's paper, and little tots, something suited to their tastes. Attendance is seldom less than 1,200 or 1,500. The expenses of the organization are met by Mr. Paine, who thoroughly enjoys the happiness he gives and the good he is doing. In winter time he gives a series of lectures on interesting subjects, illustrated by stereopticon views. Admission is five cents for adults and one cent for children, the money being devoted to some good work. In summer there is a picnic to Lake Walden. A paper called The Light is issued by this little "band" who are truly shining lights in the great world around them, where their example is a blessing to many.

Cheerfulness a Virtue.

Everybody cannot be handsome, but it is the duty of every one to look as well as possible, and nothing adds more to one's good looks than a cheerful countenance, says an exchange. "I have always," observed the good Vicar of Wakefield, "been an admirer of happy human faces." This sentiment is a universal one. The pleasure thus derived compensates for the absence of beauty, and supplies the deficiency of symmetry and grace. Cheerfulness can be cultivated and acquired as well as other qualities. If one's work is exacting and tiresome, it is made no easier by being tretful. Form the habit of being cheerful under adverse circumstances. Our happiness is a sacred deposit for which we must give account. Admiral Collingwood, one of England's great naval heroes, in his letters to his daughters, says, "I never knew your mother to utter a harsh or hasty thing to any person in my life." What loftier eulogy could a woman have?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

THE Scripture riddle propounded in our issue of February 2d, by M. V. L., Elizabeth, N. J., has brought forth many answers, a large number of which are correct. Many which are incorrect, are of much interest, and show that our readers have been stimulated in their "searching of the Scriptures." The riddle, as will be remembered, read:

"A casement held a wondrous view,
And all the living world looked through."

The answer is, the window in Noah's Ark; and the passage is found in Gen. 8: 6. We give below the names of those whose answers are correct, and which have been received up to the date of this printing:

The versified answers to our Scripture problem will be found on page 163 of this issue.

J. H. I., Chesterfield, Va. I have suffered great anxiety about my soul's salvation. How am I to know that my sins are forgiven?

If you are unwilling to trust God's promise, and are not satisfied to accept the assurance wish to gratify him. There is no necessity one way or the other. Your love for one another should decide the question. It is not one of conscience, but of whether you love your husband well enough to sacrifice your preference to please him, or whether he loves you well enough to wish you to follow your own preference.

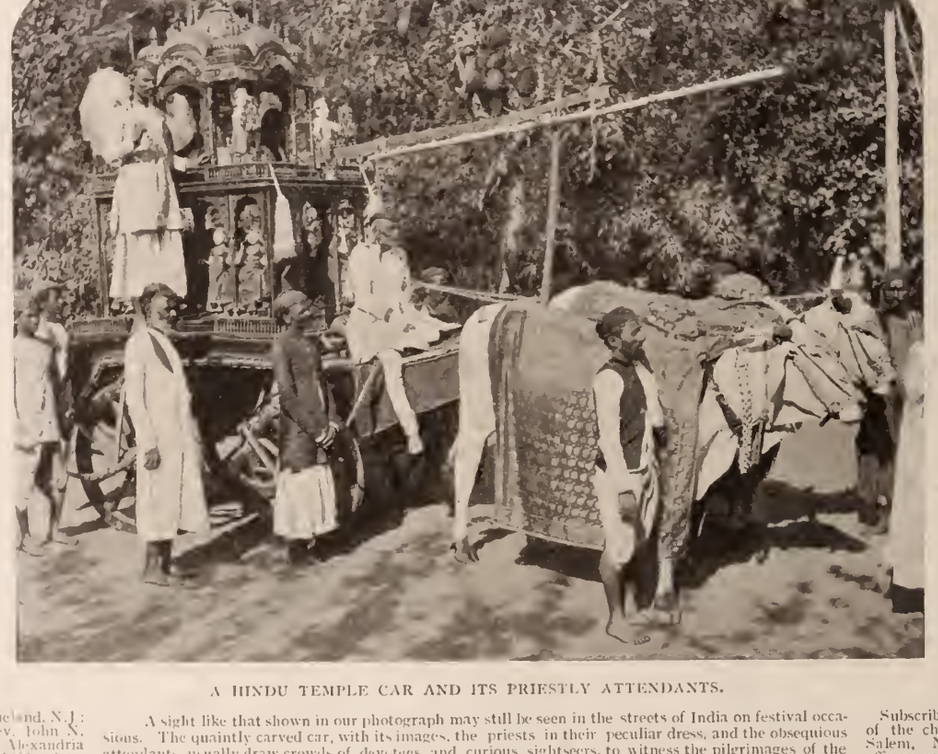
In view of the articles that have recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD regarding Abraham Lincoln's religion, this letter will be read with special interest:

GREENVILLE, PA.

I see in your paper of Feb. 2d an article headed "Lincoln's Christianity," and I wish to say that an old soldier and a faithful member of my church (Jackson Breakman, Sharkleyville, Pa.,) lived in the family of Amos Williams near that place. A son of the latter, Harrison Williams, for a long time during the Civil War was on guard at the White House door, and Mr. Breakman says that Harrison Williams told him that many a time Lincoln came to the door and invited him in to family worship. REV. W. T. ALAN.

Repentance, Sauk Centre, Minn. If past sins, sincerely repented of, continue to harrass the mind, is it an evidence that God has not forgiven them?

No, it is sometimes an evidence of lack of faith. But generally it arises from a very proper sense of the heinous nature of our sin. Though God forgives, and we rejoice in the fact and adore him for his marvellous magnanimity, we cannot forgive ourselves. There is a very touching expression in Mark 14: 72 which intimates that Peter's memory of his denial of Christ was lifelong: "When he thought thereon, he wept." The other Evangelists speak of his weeping at the time, but Mark, who probably knew him well in his later years, phrases it differently. Yet, though



A HINDU TEMPLE CAR AND ITS PRIESTLY ATTENDANTS.

A sight like that shown in our photograph may still be seen in the streets of India on festival occasions. The quaintly carved car, with its images, the priests in their peculiar dress, and the obsequious attendants, usually draw crowds of devotees and curious sightseers, to witness the pilgrimages of the heathen deities from one place to another, on the recurrence of stated Hinda festivals.

Christ gave to all who believe on him, we really do not see how you can know. No other way has been revealed.

L. K., Perkinsville Vt. In a late issue it was stated that Russian pilgrims took cans and bottles of water from the river Jordan, to carry home for baptismal purposes. Do they (the Greek Church) sprinkle or immerse in baptism?

The Greek Church requires trine immersion in its rubrics, but in Russia, baptism by sprinkling or "affusion," thrice repeated, is regarded as equivalent.

Reader, When was Washington's birthday first celebrated?

On the 14th of Feb., 1832, a resolution was introduced in the Senate by Henry Clay, that year being the centenary of Washington's birth.

Constant Reader, New Haven, Conn. Is it necessary that I should discontinue attending the communion service of the church in which I was brought up and attend the communion of the church to which my husband belongs?

You probably realize that the service is as much a means of grace in one church as the other. The question, therefore, turns on your relation to your husband. If he is aware that you have a decided preference for a form other than that of his own church, he will have no objection to your attending it. On the other hand, if you perceive that your presence with him is a joy to him, you will naturally Peter may have continued to weep at the thought, he could never have had any doubt as to his being forgiven.

Subscriber, Charlottesville, N. Y. 1. How can a man who offends in only one point be guilty of all, as stated by James? (2: 10). 2 Why was Saul afterward called Paul?

1. He is a breaker of the law, and can no longer take his stand on his righteousness. He must plead as a sinner the same as a man who has broken all the commandments. The difference is after all but one of degree. The nature of his offence is the same. 2. We are not told. Probably it was the Gentile form of the name, and he used it when he began to travel outside Judea.

J. E. B., Mt. Vernon, Tex. Does God communicate his will in any way other than by his Word?

We believe that there are special cases of difficulty in which, when guidance is sought, God does reveal to his children the way in which he wishes them to walk. This he does by interpositions of his providence. We knew an instance in which a young man after listening to a missionary address set his heart on becoming a missionary. But being an earnest believer, he asked for direction from God, pledging himself to obey. He expected something in the nature of a call to the work, but instead, circumstances occurred which made it his manifest duty to stay at home. He accepted it as the intimation that he had ask for, and obeyed it. The results, we und stand, have justified his course. Many simi cases might be quoted. There are some w think they receive direction in dreams, or casting lots, or by opening a Bible at rand and noticing the first passage that catches eye. It is unwise to give heed to intimati supposed to reach us in such ways. They utterly untrustworthy and should be di garded.

Reader, Arlington, N. J. If a Christian, desir to strengthen his resolution, solemnly vows God that he will not do a certain thing afterwards he does it in spite of his vow, you think he would ever be forgiven? Wo not that be an unpardonable sin?

It would be a very grievous sin, but not pardonable. It would simply show that s vows are useless and would add to the g of the wrongdoer. As Ecclesiastes said, it better not to vow than to vow and not p The duty of a person in such a case is humbly confess to God that he had ov estimated his own strength, to ask forgi ness and to beg for the strength of Christ keep him from again falling into the sin. he is sincere in his wish to be so kept, honestly strives against it, God will ena him to win the victory, but he does not h those who do not wish to overcome.

SAVED FROM LIVES OF CRIME.

w Nearly a Thousand Boys and Girls are Trained and Educated in a Great Industrial School—New York State's Model Institution.

AMONG the many places of interest in the beautiful city of Rochester, N. Y., few will better repay a visit than the State Industrial School. Although a State titution, and not ranked as a charity, s school well deserves a place among t schemes for the reclamation and elevan of the unfortunate youth of both ses. It was founded in 1849, under the ne of the Western House of Refuge of w York State. Since that time it has dergone many changes, in method and ipment as well as in name. Buildings ve been added from time to time as the eds of the institution increased, until it ms a model institution of its kind. The hool occupies about forty-two acres of ound in the northern part of Rochester.

NTRANCE TO MAIN BUILDING.

this about twenty-two acres set apart for the school pper, surrounded by a wall solid masonry, twenty-two t high. Entrance to this ensure is obtained through a h iron gate, which is kept ked and constantly guarded a sentinel, and the sensation perienced on hearing the gate sed beind one, and the key ating in the lock is not soon rgotten.

Once inside, however, the vis- r is agreeably surprised to d the "prison" aspect for hich he was prepared, wholly cking. A row of massive ildings extend from end to d of the inclosure, with a ooth, well-kept lawn in front them. Mounting the high ne steps of the Administration Build- g, we find ourselves in a broad corridor vestibule in which are several cases filled th specimens of the boys' and girls' ndiwork. Clothing, shoes, specimens of odeling, and parts of machinery are nong the exhibits. In this building the fices of the various departments are cated, and in the rear are officers' din- g-rooms and kitchens. The second or is the Superintendent's home, the ird is set apart as quarters for officers. the basement is the store-room, where l supplies are taken when first taken to the school. Eleven other buildings ve space for additional offices, library, hool-rooms, shops, bathroom, and din- g-rooms, kitchen, and dormitories for e 746 boys who, just at present, form the opulation of the school. In a building t apart for them are 125 girls and their ficers.

As many of these children and youth me from homes of the most degraded id degrading character, and are here re- iving their first lessons in obedience. der, cleanliness, morals, and manners, it ill readily be seen that strict discipline id an unlimited amount of confidence e required in dealing with them. It is ot every man who is fitted to be at the ead of such an institution. The officer who has the most direct influence on the characters and behavior of the children is the Disciplinarian. This officer is at present a woman, and she is very well fitted for her trying work by an unusual endowment of common-sense, coupled with a genuine love and understanding of boy nature. To her all cases of infringement of rules are brought. No punishment is ever inflicted without careful consideration of the attending circumstances, and after hearing the boy's own evidence. Corporal punishment was abolished in 1892, and the present methods are generally quite as effective. Being deprived of recreation, bread and water for one or more meals, or being put in the guard-house are the usual punishments, but occasionally a boy new to the school, or one of a very violent temper may require special treatment. Sometimes a kindly "talking-to" will send the offender back to books or work resolved to do better. Insubordination is very rare.

It would seem hard lines indeed for the average boy to rise at 5.45 every morning and retire at 7.15 every night. To give nine hours to book and work, an hour to military drill, and only about half an hour to play, would seem out of all proportion. But in the majority of cases, a wandering child may be paroled sooner. Two chaplains minister to the spiritual welfare of of the children. Sunday is a very busy day. There is a general song service in the morning, chapel service for the Protestants in the afternoon, and either a concert or an instructive lecture in the evening which all the children attend. A few of the boys in the primary department started an Epworth League last summer, holding their meetings on one of the fire-escapes, not without taunts and annoyances from other boys. When the weather became too cold for out-door meetings, they appealed to the Chaplain, who interested himself in securing for them the use of one of the school rooms. The number has increased, and although the Chaplain is invited to be present, the little lads conduct the meetings for themselves.

THE INDUSTRIAL'S "CADET BAND."

ADMINISTRATION BUILDINGS AND CHAPEL OF THE N. Y. STATE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

In the boys' dining rooms everything is of the plainest character, but neat and clean. The food is wholesome and well cooked. The boys enter the dining room in orderly ranks. When all are seated, they bow their heads and repeat in unison this simple grace:

God is great and God is good.
And we thank him for this food.

A number of boys, called the "Dining-room Squad" have already dined, and serve the others.

Everywhere one is struck by the prevailing order and cleanliness, and one is surprised to learn that it is the work of the children themselves. In the lavatory every towel and tooth brush is in its own place; in the armory every uniform, rifle and belt is in its proper compartment. Passing up to the dormitory, we find that the same beautiful order prevails here also.

The rows of small white beds are as straight as if lined with a straight-edge, and as neatly made as the most notable housekeeper could desire.

At 7.15 P. M. the steady but light tread of two hundred small pairs of feet is heard ascending the stairs, and they march in, each boy halting by his own bed. The disrobing is done in response to orders given by the cadet captain; then all the white clad little figures kneel and very reverently repeat the Lord's prayer. The little prayer, "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild," is added, and like a flash, every boy has disappeared and only the deep regular breathing indicates where they have gone. Lights are turned out, and the attendant leaves the room.

Just east of the Primary Building stands the Girls' Building, the last in the row. Here everything necessary for the work is found under one roof. The department is in charge of a matron, with an able corps of assistants. In addition to kitchens, dining rooms and school rooms there are sewing and dressmaking rooms, where the girls are taught to do all kinds of sewing and mending, and to make their own dresses. In the basement is a laundry, and a cooking school, each in charge of a competent instructor. Separate sleeping rooms are provided for all the girls.

One of the most delightful hours of a never-to-be-forgotten visit to the school, was spent with one of the nurses in the ward of the boys' hospital, where she had charge. Surely, if "poets are born, not made," nurses are even more so. The young orderlies, who were themselves convalescing from illness, looked so happily important, taking temperature and pulse and administering medicine or nourishment under her directions; and the little satellite, "James," who is as comical as only a small colored boy can be, will long be remembered.

The next generation will owe a heavy debt of gratitude to the founders and promoters of this institution, for, while it is not to be expected that all will lead upright lives after leaving its walls, many are undoubtedly receiving here an impetus in the right direction, who but for it would in all human probability have helped to swell the ranks of the criminal classes.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Two Thousandth Publication

A SERMON OF GRATITUDE . . .

By REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., on the Text: Nahum 2: 4, ... They shall seem like torches; They shall run like the lightnings.

EXPRESS, rail train and telegraphic communication are suggested if not foretold in this text, and from it I start to preach a sermon in gratitude to God and the newspaper press for the fact that I have had the opportunity of delivering through the newspaper press two thousand sermons or religious addresses, so that I have for many years been allowed the privilege of preaching the Gospel every week to every neighborhood in Christendom, and in many lands outside of Christendom. Many have wondered at the process by which it has come to pass, and for the first time in public place I state the three causes. Many years ago, a young man who has since become eminent in his profession, was then studying law in a distant city. He came to me, and said that for lack of funds he must stop his studying, unless through stenography I would give him sketches of sermons, that he might by the sale of them secure means for the completion of his education. I positively declined, because it seemed to me an impossibility, but after some months had passed, and I had reflected upon the great sadness for such a brilliant young man to be defeated in his ambition for the legal profession, I undertook to serve him; of course, free of charge. Within three weeks there came a request for those stenographic reports from many parts of the continent. Time passed on, and some gentlemen of my own profession evidently thinking that there was hardly room for them and for myself in this continent began to assail me, and became so violent in their assault that the chief newspapers of America put special correspondents in my church Sabbath by Sabbath to take down such reply as I might make. I never made reply, except once for about three minutes, but those correspondents could not waste their time and so they telegraphed the sermons to their particular papers. Afterawhile, Dr. Louis Klopsch of New York, systematized the work into a syndicate until through that and other syndicates he has put the discourses week by week before more than twenty million people on both sides the sea. There have been so many guesses on this subject, many of them inaccurate that, I now tell the true story. I have not improved the opportunity as I ought, but I feel the time has come when as a matter of common justice to the newspaper press, I should make this statement in a sermon commemorative of the two thousandth full publication of sermons, and religious addresses, saying nothing of fragmentary reports, which would run up into many thousands more.

There was one incident that I might mention in this connection, showing how an insignificant event might influence us for a lifetime. Many years ago on a Sabbath morning on my way to Church in Brooklyn, a representative of a prominent newspaper met me and said, "Are you going to give us any points to-day?" I said, "What do you mean by 'points?'" He replied, "Anything we can remember." I said to myself, "We ought to be making 'points' all the time in our pulpits and not deal in platitudes and truisms." That one interrogation put to me that morning started in me the desire of making points all the time and nothing but points.

And now how can I more appropriately commemorate the two thousandth publication than by speaking of the newspaper press as an ally of the pulpit and mentioning some of the tools of newspaper men.

The newspaper is the great educator of the nineteenth century. There is no force compared with it. It is book, pulpit, platform, forum, all in one. And there is not an interest—religious, literary, commercial, scientific, agricultural, or mechanical—that is not within its grasp. All our churches, and schools, and colleges, and asylums, and art galleries feel the quaking of the printing-press.

The institution of newspapers arose in Italy. In Venice the first newspaper was published, and monthly, during the time Venice was warring against Solyman the Second in Dalmatia, it was printed for the purpose of giving military and commercial information to the Venetians. The first newspaper published in England was in 1588, and called the English Mercury. Who can estimate the political, scientific, commercial and religious revolutions roused up in England for many years past by the press?

The first attempt at this institution in France, was in 1631, by a physician, who published the News, for the amusement and health of his patients. The French nation understood fully how to appreciate this power. So early as in 1820 there were in Paris 169 journals. But in the United States the newspaper has come to unlimited sway. Though in 1775 there were but thirty-seven in the whole country, the number of published journals is now counted by thousands; and to-day—we may as well acknowledge it as not—the religious and secular newspapers are the great educators of the country.

But alas! through what struggle the newspaper has come to its present development. Just as soon as it began to demonstrate its power, superstition and tyranny shackled it. There is nothing that despotism so much fears and hates as the printing-press. A great writer in the south of Europe declared that the King of Naples had made it unsafe for him to write on any subject save natural history. Austria could not bear Kossuth's journalistic pen pleading for the redemption of Hungary. Napoleon I., wanting to keep his iron heel on the neck of nations, said that the newspaper was the regent of kings, and the only safe place to keep an editor was in prison. But the great battle for the freedom of the press was fought in the court-rooms of England and the United States before this century began, when Hamilton made his great speech in behalf of the freedom of J. Peter Zenger's Gazette in America, and when Erskine made his great speech in behalf of the freedom to publish Paine's Rights of Man in England. Those were the Marathon and the Thermopylæ where the battle was fought which decided the freedom of the press in England and America, and all the powers of earth and hell will never again be able to put upon the printing-press the handcuffs and the hopples of literary and political despotism. It is remarkable that Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of Independence, also wrote these words: "If I had to choose between a government without newspapers, and newspapers without a government, I would prefer the latter." Stung by some new fabrication in print, we come to write or speak about an "unbridled printing-press." Our new book ground up in unjust criticism, we come to write or speak about the "unfair printing-press." Perhaps through our own indistinctness of utterance we are reported as saying just the opposite of what we did say, and there is a small riot of semicolons and hyphens and commas, and we come to write or talk about the "blundering printing press," or we take up a newspaper full of social scandal and of cases of divorce, and we write or talk about a "filthy, scurrilous printing press." But this morning I ask you to consider the immeasurable and everlasting blessing of a good newspaper.

I find no difficulty in accounting for the world's advance. What has made the change? "Books," you say. No, sir! The vast majority of citizens do not read books. Take this audience, or any other promiscuous assemblage, and how many histories have they read? How many treatises on constitutional law, or political economy, or works of science? How many elaborate poems or books of travel? Not many. In the United States the people would not average one such book a year for each individual! Whence, then, this intelligence, this capacity to talk about all themes, secular and religious; this acquaintance with science and art; this power to appreciate the beautiful and grand? Next to the Bible, the newspaper, swift-winged and everywhere present, flying over the fence, shoved under the door, tossed into the counting-house, laid on the work-bench, hawked through the cars! All read it; white and black, German, Irishman, Swiss, Spaniard, American, old and young, good and bad, sick and well, before breakfast and after tea, Monday morning, Saturday night, Sunday and week day. I now declare that I consider the newspaper to be the grand agency by which the gospel is to be preached, ignorance cast out, oppression dethroned, crime extirpated, the world raised, heaven rejoiced, and God glorified. In the clanking of the printing-press, as the sheets fly out, I hear the voice of the Lord Almighty proclaiming to all the dead nations of the earth, "Lazarus, come forth!" and to the retreating surges of darkness, "Let there be light!" In many of our city newspapers, professing no more than secular information, there have appeared during the past thirty years some of the grandest appeals in behalf of religion, and some of the most effective interpretations of God's government among the nations.

There are only two kinds of newspapers—the one good, very good, the other bad, very bad. A newspaper may be started with an undecided character, but after it has been going on for years everybody finds out just what it is; and it is very good or it is very bad. The one paper is the embodiment of news, the ally of virtue, the foe of crime, the delectation of elevated taste, the mightiest agency on earth for making the world better. The other paper is a brigand among moral forces; it is a beslimer of reputation, it is the right arm of death and hell, it is the mightiest agency in the universe for making the world worse and battling against the cause of God. The one an angel of intelligence and mercy, the other a fiend of darkness. Between this Archangel and this Fury is to be fought the great battle which is to decide the fate of the world. If you have any doubt as to which is to be victor, ask the prophecies, ask God; the chief batteries with which he would vindicate the right and thunder down the wrong are now unlimbered. The great Armageddon of the nations is not to be fought with swords, but with steel pens; not with bullets, but with type; not with cannon, but with lightning perfecting presses; and the Sumters, and the Moultries, and the Pulaskis, and the Gibraltars of that conflict will be the editorial and reportorial rooms of our great newspaper establishments. Men of the press, God has put a more stupendous responsibility upon you than upon any other class of persons. What long strides your profession has made in influence and power since the day when Peter Sheffer invented cast-metal type, and because two books were found just alike they were ascribed to the work of the devil; and books were printed on strips of bamboo; and Rev. Jesse Glover originated the first American printing-press; and the Common Council of New York, in solemn resolution, offered two hundred dollars to any printer who would come there and live; and when the Speaker of the House of Parliament in England announced with indignation that the public prints had recognized some of their doings, until in this day, when we have in this country many thousands of skilled stenographers, and newspapers sending out copies by the billion. The press and the telegraph have gone down into the same great harvest field to reap, and the telegraph says to the newspaper: "I'll rake, while you bind;" and the iron teeth of the telegraph are set down at one end of the harvest field and drawn clean across, and the newspaper gathers up the sheaves, setting down one sheaf on the breakfast table in the shape of a morning newspaper, and putting down another sheaf on the tea table in the shape of an evening newspaper; and that man who neither reads nor takes a newspaper would be a curiosity. What vast progress since the days when Cardinal Wolsey declared that either the printing-press must go down or the Church of God must go down, to this time, when the printing-press and the pulpit are in glorious combination and alliance.

One of the great trials of this newspaper profession is the fact that they are compelled to see more of the shams of the world than any other profession. Through every newspaper office, day by day, go the weakness of the world, the vanities that want to be puffed, the revenges that want to be wreaked, all the mistakes that want to be corrected, all the dull speakers who want to be thought eloquent, all the meanness that wants to get its wares noticed gratis in the editorial columns in order to save the tax of the advertising column, all the men who want to be set right who never were right, all the crack-brained philosophers, with stories as long as their hair and as gloomy as the finger-nails, all the itinerant bores who come to stay five minutes and stop an hour. From the editorial and reporters' rooms all the follies and shams of the world are seen day by day, and the temptation is to believe neither in God, man nor woman. It is no surprise to me that in your profession there are some skeptical men. I only wonder that you believe anything. Unless an editor or a reporter has in his present or in his early home a model of earnest character, or he throws himself upon the upholding grace of God, he may make temporal and eternal shipwreck.

Another great trial of the newspaper profession is inadequate compensation. Since the days of Hazlitt, and Sheridan, and John Milton, and the wailings from Grub Street, London, literary toil, with very few exceptions, has not been properly requited. When Oliver Goldsmith received a friend in his house, he (the author), had to sit on the window, because there was only one chair. Linnæus for his splendid work for a ducat. De Lolme, the author of so many volumes, died penniless. The learned Johnson dined behind a screen because his clothes were too shabby to allow him to dine with the gentlemen who, on the other side of the screen, were applauding his works. And so on down to the present time literary toil is a great struggle for bread. The world seems to have a grudge against a man who, as they say, gets his living by his wits; and the day laborer says to the man of literary toil: "You come down here and shove a plane, and hammer a shoe-last, and break cobble stones, and earn an honest living as I do, instead of sitting there in idleness scribbling!" But there are no harder-worked men in all the earth than the newspaper people of this country. It is not a matter of hard times; it is characteristic of all times. Men have a better appreciation for that which appeals to the stomach than for that which appeals to the brain. They have no idea of the immense financial and intellectual exhaustion of the newspaper press. Oh, men of the press, it will be a great help to you, if when you get home late at night, fagged out and nervous with your work, you would just kneel down and commend your case to God, who has watched all the fatigues of the day and the night, and who has promised to be your God and the God of your children forever!

Another great trial of the newspaper profession is the diseased appetite for unhealthy intelligence. You blame the newspaper press for giving such prominence to murders and scandals. Do you suppose that so many papers would give prominence to these things if the people did not demand them? If I go into the meat market of a foreign city, and I see that the butchers hang up on the most conspicuous hooks meat that is tainted, while the meat that is fresh and savory is put away without any special care, I come to the conclusion that the people of that city love tainted meat. You know very well that if the great mass of people in this country get hold of a newspaper, and there are in it no runaway matches, no broken-up families, no defamation of men in high position, they pronounce the paper insipid. They say, "It is shockingly dull to-night." I believe it is one of the tasks of the newspaper press, that the people of this country demand moral slush instead of healthy and intellectual food. If you are a respectable man, an intelligent man, and a paper comes into your hand. You open it, and there are three columns of splendidly written editorial, recommending some moral sentiment, or else ing some scientific theory. In the next colun there is a miserable, contemptible div ce case. Which do you read first? You dip into the editorial long enough to say Well, that's very ably written," and you read the divorce case from the "long primer" type at the top to the "nonpareil" type at the bottom, and then you ask your wife if she has read it! Oh, it is only a case of supply and demand! Newspaper men are not fools. They know what you want and they give it to you. I believe half of the church and the world bought nothing but pure, honest, healthful newspapers, nothing but pure, honest and healthful newspapers would be published. If you should gather all the editors and the reporters of this country in one great convention, and ask of them what kind of a paper they would prefer to publish, I believe they would unanimously say, "We would prefer to publish an elevating paper." So long as there is an iniquitous demand, there will be an iniquitous supply. I make no apology for a debauched newspaper, but I am saying these things to divide the responsibility between those who print and those who read.

Another temptation of the newspaper profession is the great allurement that surrounds them. Every occupation and profession has temptations peculiar to itself, and the newspaper profession is not an exception. The great demand, as you know, is on the nervous force, and the brain is racked. The blundering political speech must read well for the sake of the party, and so the reporter, or the editor, has to make it read well, although every sentence were a catastrophe to the English language. The reporter must hear what an inaudible speaker, who thinks it is vulgar to speak out, says; and it must be right the next morning or the next night in the papers, though the night before the whole audience sat with its hand behind its ear, in vain trying to catch it. The man must go through killing nights and. He must go into heated assemblies and into unventilated audience rooms that are enough to take the life out of him. He must visit court rooms, which are almost always disgusting with rum and tobacco. He must expose himself at the fire. He must write in fetid alleys. Added to all that, he must have irregular mastication and irregular habits. Those up under this tremendous nervous strain, they are tempted to artificial stimulus, and how many thousands have gone down under their pressure God only knows. They must have something to counteract the wet, they must have something to keep out the chill, and after a night's sleep they must have something to revive them for the morning's work. This is what made Horace Greeley once a stout temperance man. I said to him "Mr. Greeley, why are you more eloquent on the subject of temperance than any other subject?" He replied, "I have seen so many of my best friends in journalism go down under intemperance."

O my dear brother of the newspaper profession, what you cannot do without artificial stimulus, God does not want you to do? There is no half-way ground for our literary people between teetotalism and dissipation. Your professional success, your domestic peace, your eternal salvation, will depend upon your theories in regard to artificial stimulus. I have seen so many friends go down under the temptation, their brilliancy quenched, their homes blasted, that I cry out this morning in the words of another, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright; for at the last it biteth like a serpent, and it stingeth like an adder."

Another trial of this profession is the fact that no one seems to care for their souls. Some of them came from religious homes, and when they left the parental roof, whether regarded or disregarded, they came away with a father's benediction and a mother's prayer. They never think of those good old times but tears come into their eyes, and they move through these great cities homesick. Oh, if they only knew what a helpful thing it is for a man to put his weary head down on the bosom of a sympathetic Christ! He knows how nervous and tired you are. He has a heart large enough to take in all your interests for this world and the next. Oh, men of the newspaper press, you sometimes get sick of this world, it seems so hollow and unsatisfying. If there are any people in all the earth that need God, you are the men, and you shall have him, if only this day you implore his mercy.

A man was found at the foot of Canal Street, New York. As they picked him up from the water and brought him to the Morgue, they saw by the contour of his forehead that he had great mental capacity. He had entered the newspaper profession. He had gone down in health. He took to artificial stimulus. He went down further and further, until one summer day, hot and hungry, and sick, and in despair, he flung himself off the dock. They found in his pocket a reporter's pad, a lead pencil, a photograph of some one who had loved him long ago. Death, as sometimes it will, smoothed out all the wrinkles that had gathered prematurely on his brow, and as he lay there his face was as fair as when, seven years before, he left his country-home, and they bade him good-bye forever. The world looked through the window of the Morgue, and said, "It's nothing but an outcast:" but God said it was a gigantic soul that perished, because the world gave him no chance.

Let me ask all men connected with the printing press that they help us more and more in the effort to make the world better. I charge you in the name of God, before whom you must account for the tremendous influence you hold in this country, to consecrate yourselves to higher endeavors. You are the men to fight back this invasion of corrupt literature. Lift up your right hand and swear new allegiance to the cause of philanthropy and religion. And when, at last, standing on the plains of judgment, you look out upon the unnumbered throngs over whom you have had influence, may it be found that you were amongst the mightiest energies that lifted men upon the exalted pathway that leads to the renown of heaven. Well, my friends, we will all soon get through writing and printing and proof-reading and publishing. What then? Our life is a book. Our years are the chapters. Our months are the paragraphs. Our days are the sentences. Our doubts are the interrogation points. Our imitation of others the quotation marks. Our attempts at display a dash. Death the period. Eternity the peroration. O God, where will we spend it? Have you heard the news, more startling than any found in the journals of the last six weeks? It is the tidings that man is lost. Have you heard the news, the gladdest that was ever announced, coming this day from the throne of God, lightning couriers leaping from the palace gate? The news! The glorious news! That there is pardon for all guilt and comfort for all trouble. Set it up and direct it to the whole race.

And now before I close this sermon, thankfully commemorative of the "Two Thousandth" publication, I wish more fully to acknowledge the services rendered by the secular press in the matter of evangelization. All the secular newspapers of the day—for I am not speaking this morning of the religious newspapers—all the secular newspapers of the day discuss all the questions of God, eternity and the dead, and all the questions of the past, present and future. There is not a single doctrine of theology but has been discussed in the last ten years by the secular newspapers of the country. They gather up all the news of all the earth bearing on religious subjects, and then they scatter the news abroad. A pastor preaches to a few hundred or a few thousand people, and on Monday, or during the week, the printing-press will take the same sermon and preach it to millions of people. God speed the printing-press! God save the printing-press! God Christianize the printing-press!

When I see the printing-press standing with the electric telegraph on the one side gathering up material, and the lightning express train on the other side waiting for the tons of folded sheets of newspapers, I pronounce it the mightiest force in our civilization. So I commend you to pray for all those who manage the newspapers of the land, for all type-setters, for all editors, for all publishers, that, sitting or standing in positions of such great influence, they may give all that influence for God and the betterment of the human race. An aged woman making her living by knitting unwound the yarn from the ball until she found in the centre of the ball there was an old piece of newspaper. She opened it and read an advertisement which announced that she had become heiress to a large property, and that fragment of a newspaper lifted her up from pauperism to affluence. And I do not know but as the thread of time unrolls and unwinds a little further, through the silent yet speaking newspaper may be found the vast inheritance of the world's redemption.

Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till suns shall rise and set no more.

STAFF-CAPTAIN FROST AND HER CORPS OF SLUM NURSES.

This is a new and interesting phase of Salvation Army Work in New York City.

Motherhood in the Slums.

Salvation Army Maternity Nursing Work Under the Shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge.

ONE of the most recent developments of Salvation Army work among the friendless poor of New York City is its department for slum maternity nursing. This has been in operation for only a few months. It was organized last fall at the Carnegie Mass Meeting, in response to the pressing necessity which continually forced itself upon the observations of Mrs. Frost, staff-captain of New York slum-work, and her fellow-laborers. They come across a great many people who would have been thankful beyond expression to command some care at such times of helplessness and trial, but whose pride held them back from applying to strictly charitable organizations; they could perhaps pay a trifle and desired to do so, but were utterly unable to give the high prices charged by the average professional nurse. And indeed, were they able to do this for a brief period, the professional nurse would hardly care to put up with the discomforts of sharing a tenement mother's quarters. The salary of the trained maternity nurse in New York City is $25.00 a week; there are those who receive more. The work is hard; nurses die young. It needs the love of Christ to take trained maternity nurses into the tenements of the slums. It goes without saying that there are many who can pay nothing, who are ready to apply for help, and who receive it free of charge; but those who really suffer most are the self-respecting poor who will not ask for charitable aid and cannot command paid. These matters were urged upon public attention by Mrs. Frost and her co-workers; and the Slum Maternity Nursing Department was the result. The Training Home is at Fordham, N. Y. Clinical advantages are gained by actual experience, Mrs. Frost taking a nurse along with her on each of her missions of mercy to suffering womanhood and newborn infancy.

Five good women, ready with professional experience, and glad to give themselves to such relief work, are now in active service, at as many slum posts. The aim of the organization is to keep a resident nurse at every slum post. At present, however, the limited force necessitates continued exchange. There is continual demand in Brooklyn and New York in the Bridge district. Cherry Hill absorbs the entire attention of one nurse, with room for more. Chambers street Canal street, and other posts on the extreme east and west keep the nurses taxed to their utmost degree of usefulness. It is to be hoped that this field of the Master's service will rapidly fill with laborers. No need can have a tenderer claim on humanity's heart than that of suffering motherhood and helpless infancy. Mrs. Frost, a trained nurse herself of exceptional qualifications, is fully equal to the task of bringing her pupils to a high degree of efficiency.

Of many incidents which demonstrate the need of the organization, the following will touch all hearts: A woman's time of trial was near; her husband, a poor workingman, had run hither and thither for help, and found it not: at last, a neighbor ran to the Slum Captain: the Captain, knowing from what was said that trained nursing was needed, applied to Mrs. Frost, who went in haste. The bare room was clean—and cleanliness is not characteristic of the seething city life which has its being under the shadow of Brooklyn Bridge. Mrs. Frost did all that was possible; but cold, hunger and fright had done their work. The little life went out to God, but the mother, thanks to Christian care and a kind woman's mercy, was saved; and every day as long as need existed, a trained nurse visited the room, attended the patient, and kept the poor room clean.

Pittsburg's Great Revival.

The Evangelistic meetings at Pittsburg, Pa., have surpassed the most sanguine expectations. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, has had an audience daily which has packed the large East Liberty Presbyterian Church and hundreds have been turned away for lack of room. The meetings for men only, for women only and for young people have all been densely crowded. More than five hundred inquirers have remained after the dispersion of the congregations for personal talk and there have been many notable conversions.

The Sunday School

JESUS AND THE SABBATH.

Sunday School Lesson for March 6. Matt. 12 : 1–13. Golden Text, Matt. 12 : 8.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

ALWAYS throughout his life on earth the daily portion of our Lord was to endure "the contradiction of sinners against himself" (Heb. 12 : 3). Surrounded by the suspicious Pharisees and Sadducees, who shut their eyes against the light, and would not see in him the promised Messiah, he was continually in an antagonistic atmosphere; yet his love to the lost world never wavered. He had reproached the cities in which his mighty works were done because they repented not, and yet he had been able to thank his Father for the babes to whom he could reveal those things which the wise and prudent rejected. And at that season Jesus went on the Sabbath day through the cornfields, and his hungry disciples began to pluck the ears of corn.

He knew well what awaited him. This was certain to arouse the enmity of the Pharisees. They were strict Sabbatarians. They kept the letter of the law, while the spirit, "Thou shalt love," was utterly unknown to them. All their religion was an outside thing; a thing of doing, which could gather merit to themselves; and from the pinnacle of self-righteousness where they placed themselves as being such rigorous observers of the Sabbath day, they looked down upon those who were far more one with him who instituted the Sabbath than themselves. Just as long as there is anything whatsoever on which we can value or pride ourselves, we find it possible to look down on others, and impossible to obey the Scripture, by esteeming all others as better than ourselves (Phil. 2 : 3). All the righteousness which exalts us has in it the elements of corruption, it cannot live in the atmosphere of the life of Christ, the true eternal life.

The criticizing Pharisees came to Jesus to lodge a complaint against his disciples; they were apt fault-finders, and thereby they manifested their origin; a family likeness to him who accuses the brethren before our God day and night (Rev. 12 : 9) was apparent in them. "Behold," they said, "thy disciples do that which is not lawful on the Sabbath day." "Have ye not read what David did when he was an hungered, and they that were with him?" was the answer of him who, as the Living Word, used no other word than the written Word. "Have ye not read how he entered into the house of God and did eat the shew-bread, which it was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them that were with him, but only for the priests?" Or, "Have ye not read how that, on the Sabbath, the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath and are blameless?" Our Lord acted under instructions received from his Father; he referred the Pharisees to the Scriptures which were the rule of his life, and were given to be the rule of theirs. Under obedience as he was, our Lord gave his authority. David, the royal psalmist, whose words were only on their lips, had broken the Sabbath in the letter (1 Sam. 21 : 6), and the very offering of the morning and evening sacrifice daily by the priests in the temple, according to Num. 28 : 9, was a breaking of the Sabbath, if it was to be looked upon as the letter as they regarded it. Oh, how we need to see the wonderful meaning of Scripture that we may not fall into the same hard judgment of others.

"But I say unto you, One greater than the temple is here" (R.V.). The temple, the sacrifices, the shew-bread, only served their purpose as they typified and foreshadowed him, and in their zeal for the shadow, the Jews were insensible to the substance. There is in us the same missing the mark, whenever and in whatsoever we count upon or admire ourselves; wherever self is recognized there Christ is ignored. We cannot depend upon him for anything which we esteem in ourselves; it is on the utter ruin of ourselves that himself can exist within us. Our Lord went on to say: "But if ye had known what that meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless." Scripture again; our Lord did not trust himself with any other weapons than "the sword of the Spirit," which the Father had put into his hands. Is it not the breathing out of his own soul (whoever may have been the inspired writer) which in Ps. 119 expresses the deepest and most thorough appreciation and understanding of the holy word of God?

For the Son of Man is "Lord even of the Sabbath day," "One greater than the temple," for he was the fulfillment of the temple and all the worship connected with it. He was Lord of the Sabbath, for it typified and foreshadowed the rest of his indwelling our hearts by faith, when we have entered into his rest and ceased from our own works, as God has ceased from his (Heb. 4 : 10). To substitute the temple worship now for the worship of him whose human body was the first living temple of God was to go back from a language to its alphabet. To observe the Sabbath in the strictest and most rigorous way without having entered into the true Sabbath rest, of real, abiding union with an indwelling God, by the Eternal Spirit, is, in these days of grace, to be satisfied with an empty sheil instead of the kernel. Christ himself is the key to the temple worship; he is himself dwelling in us, the true Sabbath, which makes the outward Sabbath real.

The Father had yet tests for the Son of Man to pass through on this question of the Sabbath. Departed thence, he went into their synagogue. A man was there whose hand was withered. Did the Pharisees purposely bring the man there as a test whether Jesus would heal on the Sabbath day? It looks like it, for they asked him, saying: "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath days?" that they might accuse him. He answered them, as usual, with an unanswerable answer: "What man shall there be among you that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it and lift it out? We suspect that not so much kindness to animals as care for the money value of the sheep would influence the proprietor. But a man! What is he to me? Am I my brother's keeper? Such was the spirit which lay behind the question of the legal Sabbatarians. Meanwhile he who came into the world, not to condemn the world, but to save, added: "Wherefore it is lawful—your own treatment of your live stock bears witness, it is lawful—to do good on the Sabbath days."

Having thus discomfited his critics, Jesus turned to the crippled man, "Stretch forth thine hand." "His word was with power" (Luke 4 : 32); the man "stretched it forth, and it was restored whole, like as the other." Are we to gather from this that our Lord looked lightly on the law of the Sabbath, ordained for man from the very days of the creation? (Gen. 2 : 3). Never for one moment. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matt. 5 : 17). Had there been some operation with surgical instruments, some preparation of bandages, some laborious bathing, etc., there might have been some ground for accusation, but the four words of power which were made life to that man's withered hand were in no way doing any manner of work which is forbidden in the fourth commandment. Had the Lord Jesus retaliated, how much might he have brought them in guilty of breaking the Sabbath day, for "they went out and held a council against him how they might destroy him!" Surely their angry, vindictive, and bitter words were far less in keeping with the Sabbath than the quiet words which brought peace and power to the cripple's soul and body, and rest to those who must necessarily wait upon him.

THE RUINS OF THE SYNAGOGUE OF CAPERNAUM.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ALL religious history proves that one of the first signs of spiritual degeneration is an undue attention to forms and ceremonies. An impression appears to grow that God will accept these observances as a substitute for that purity of heart and consecration of life which he requires. Such a condition was prevalent in Christ's time. There were men who would cheat a widow out of her house and not be concerned about it; while if they had overlooked a herb when they made their tithe, they would be horrified, although the value of the herb itself on which they paid their tenth was worth only the fraction of a cent. In this way the Rabbis had made the Sabbath a burden. The fourth commandment simply forbad labor on the seventh day, and did not enjoin even religious observance, but the Rabbis had made it a day of harassing regulations. They said no man must carry a staff on that day, however lame he might be, because that would be bearing a burden. No man might walk on the grass, because that would be a species of threshing. It was unlawful to snuff a candle, or put fuel on the fire, or to eat before the close of the synagogue service. Christ came to set men free from such nonsensical restrictions. He swept them away in contempt. Love to God and love to man were, he intimated, better in God's sight, than the technicalities of legal observance.

That which is not lawful. Canon Tristram mentions a tragical illustration of this bondage to law. While he was visiting Jerusalem a few years ago, a fire broke out in a house in the Jewish quarter. A few pails of water would have extinguished it when it was first noticed; but it was the Sabbath, and, therefore, to handle a pail was unlawful. Not a Jew there would do anything to put the fire out. It spread, and before it was extinguished, three beautiful girls had been burned to death. Some humane person expostulated with them, and they answered that even the deaths were pleasing to God, and he would reward people who suffered their loved ones to perish rather than break his commands. This shows how little such men know of God's nature.

If it fall into a pit on the Sabbath. A machinist who had a contract to keep the machines of a certain factory in order, was annoyed at the frequency with which he was sent for on a Sunday. Suspecting that it was done purposely, so as not to hinder the work of the factory on week days, he made complaint. He objected to working on Sunday because he was off Sunday for rest and pleasure, but the manager assumed that his objection was based on religious grounds. "The Bible says," the manager urged, "that if a sheep fall into a pit on the Sabbath, you may help him out, and this is just as much a matter of necessity." The machinist replied that he admitted the case as to the sheep, but if he had the habit of falling into the pit every week, his owner ought either to kill the sheep or fill up the pit.

The Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath Day. There are some people at the present time who are trying to break down the observance of the Lord's day by observing the Jewish Sabbath and working on Sunday, claiming that the Jewish law is still in force. They are the same kind of cavillers as those who continually charged Christ with breaking the Sabbath because he disregarded the letter of the law while fulfilling the spirit. They knew no higher law than that of the Sabbath, but he told them that he was Lord even of the Sabbath. A Christian father who had a son was leaving his native country home to live in the city, and exacted a promise from him that he would not go to a theatre. The young man promised, and scrupulously kept his promise. But the church he attended was burned down while it was rebuilding the congregation assembled in a theatre for worship. The young man after a few weeks wrote home how much he missed the church services. He could not go with the others, because he had promised his father that he would never enter a theatre. "I gave you credit for more sense," the father wrote in reply. "You vex me by obeying me like a slave or a convict. I want you to be an intelligent man. You ought to have known better in going to a theatre on Sunday to worship than you would not violate a promise. Go by all means, and in future pay more attention to the spirit than to the letter of my instructions." There are some of God's children who are similarly punctilious about words and forms, who are likely to hear words of reproof when they come before him at the last.

One greater than the temple. This is one of the pregnant sayings by which Christ revealed the nature of his mission. Henceforth the rites and ceremonies, the laws and prohibitions which had become necessary were to be abolished or put in a subordinate position. Loyalty to God was to supersede sacrifices and outward worship. A Sunday School teacher missed a pupil from his place in school and learned that he was riding his bicycle out of town at the time that the other boys were going to school. The teacher is deeply grieved that the boy should absent himself to go bicycle-riding and he goes to remonstrate with him. On the face of it this looks bad, but suppose the boy explains that a man in the house where he lives has been taken ill suddenly, or has met with a hurt and the bicycle ride was not for pleasure, but to summon a doctor, or the injured man's wife or child. That would give a different complexion to his action. Better than attending school or church is it to do some Christ-like act. It is better to be in the temple, but it is better still to be showing the spirit of one greater than the temple whenever the opportunity offers.

Each horse was supplied with ten large apples, divided in quarters. Ten pounds of carrots and about four pounds of bread. These were mixed and sprinkled with sugar. Some ladies brought several delicacies and fed their special favorites, who seemed to greatly enjoy their repast. The oldest inmate of the Home is a mare called "Betsey," whose age is forty-one years. The famous black charger "Bones" who was once in the Horse Guards Blue, is in the Home, and is quartered with a diminutive animal which was once owned by a muffin-man. Another pony in the Home was rescued by the Duchess of Portland a few months ago from the hands of a brutal costermonger, who persisted in ill-treating the animal by putting it to the hardest labor possible in spite of the fact that it was nearly forty years old.

Man Entering on His Dominion.

The early command to Adam and Eve recorded in the Book of Genesis, where God declares that they shall enter into possession of the earth and have dominion over it, is being more rapidly fulfilled in our own time than in any other.

Vast as the scheme was to harness Niagara for the production of electric power, work has commenced upon a still larger scheme of water-power development near Massena, on the St. Lawrence River. It is intended to develop here one hundred and fifty thousand horse-power, by taking advantage of the difference in level between the St. Lawrence River and the Grass River, flowing nearly parallel to it at a distance of only three and one-half miles. A huge canal is to be cut across the intervening plateau, and a fall of water, fifty feet in height, thus obtained on the banks of the Grass River. The latter river will itself form the tail race of the power station. This scheme dwarfs the Niagara one, since not only do the plans provide for a greater amount of power, but man is going to do what Nature has done for him at Niagara, namely, provide the waterfall. The necessary capital for carrying out this scheme has been provided, work has been commenced, and it is hoped that some of the turbines and dynamos will be working by December, 1898. This will be one of the most remarkable achievements of the century.

Communion with God.

One of the most pathetic things in life is the number of people to whom life is all commonplace and barren of oases where they retire from the desert sands and hold secret communion with the heavenly Father, drawing strength from sources that the world knows not of.

On Broadway, in New York City, in the crowded part of the city, there stands a church whose doors are always open during all the busy hours of the day. The other day an old woman was noticed to leave the mass of hurrying humanity and ascend the steps of this church. Her face was the picture of misery and desolation, but not the desolation of poverty. Within all was silent, vast; a boundless gloom lay over everything, broken here and there by the yellow flicker of a low-turned gas-jet. Above in the gallery the organist was pouring forth a soft flow of improvisation that in its gentle harmony seemed to breathe forgiveness upon a few, far-separated figures kneeling below. The old woman took her place among them and knelt there for awhile. Then she arose and passed out into the street, and the light falling upon her face revealed a countenance of perfect peace.

The Wastage of Modern Life.

Few things are sadder to note than the waste which goes on in all departments of our modern life. Many young people waste evenings enough to become well educated. Many professed Christians waste Sundays enough to become storehouses of spiritual knowledge, which would brighten and bless the circle in which they move.

Much French attention has lately been drawn to the object lesson given to the pupils of certain public schools of Brussels. During eight months the scholars, rich and poor, were requested to collect each day and bring to the school any and all objects that they saw while going and coming to their schoolway—material thrown away and counted as refuse in the gutters, in vacant ground, street sweepings, and like deposits. Waste paper, wood, fragments of leather, bits of metal, empty bottles, broken glass, corks, and a score of other classifications were made as the flotsam and jetsam poured in daily.

The general result was that this unattractive and quite convertible material was sold to dealers, in raw material with surprising profits. They provided clothing for about five hundred little waifs of poverty, and furnished money for the sending of ninety-eight invalid children to health resorts; paid for all the books needed in several charity classes, and afforded a sum of several hundred francs for the city's Public Assistance of the Poor. Jane Taylor's little girl who cried: "Dear me! what signifies a pin wedged in a rotten board?" should have been educated in Brussels.

THE FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOL ON DISMAL RIVER, NEB.

This photograph, forwarded by Mr. W. E. Bowers, Mullen, Neb., is specially interesting as showing the lonely, pioneer character of the work done by many of the American Sunday School Union Missionaries in different parts of the West and Southwest. The school was organized by Missionary F. A. Moss, in 1895. It is only a log cabin in a black hillside, but much good work has been done there.

A Wolf in Sheep's Clothing.

A man may hide a vicious nature down underneath a pleasing and even virtuous exterior for a time, but in the long run the inner viciousness will disclose itself and bring upon him the shame and disgrace which he deserves:

The other day a professor in a Bulgarian college took his class for an excursion into the neighboring mountains. As the students were eating luncheon they were attacked by a band of brigands. The son of a rich merchant alone was held captive for ransom. The others were told to return to their homes and have the father of the prisoner return, unaccompanied, the next morning with the amount of the ransom. He came, but closely following was a brigade of soldiers, which surrounded and captured the entire band. The brigands were tried, and three of them were condemned to death. This was more than they had expected, and the trio made a confession, which was afterwards verified, that the professor, who in former years had been a member of the band, had planned the capture of the merchant's son, and was to have had a share of the ransom for his well-played plot.

THE WIDOW'S MITE.

(See colored illustration in first page.)

OF ALL with whom the Saviour came in contact, during his life on earth, none won from his lips more precious words of praise than the poor widow whose gift to the treasury of the Temple has been immortalized by the divine commendation. The evangelists tell the story in a few words; but their brief sentences have sufficed to bring vividly before the imagination of the reader of the Scriptures, the incident, with all its surroundings and details. Withdrawing from the contentions that had followed his appearance and words in the Temple porches, Jesus had ascended the steps that led into the building itself. Pausing there, he could see the groups of worshippers, (some of them in the "Court of Women,") who had remained after the sacrifice for the purpose, it may be, of performing vows or giving offerings and alms. For the reception of such gifts there were boxes at various points along the Temple colonnades. Past these streamed the tide of worshippers, the rich and influential, magnificently robed, casting in their offerings with an ostentation that was apparent to all beholders. Probably the greater part of the throng had thrown in their gifts and passed by when the poor widow—ashamed to be seen by the wealthy worshippers because of the undeniable shabbiness of her attire and her miserable condition—came forward to drop her offering into the treasury. It was such a pitiful gift—so small and utterly insignificant—that she was not willing that the world should see it—but it was all she had. Rev. Alfred Edersheim beautifully describes the scene:

> She was a pauper widow. We can see her coming alone . . . ashamed to bring her offering; a widow in the garb of a desolate mourner. . . . Jesus observed her closely and read her truly. She held in her hand only the smallest coins—"two Perutahs"—and it should be known that it was not lawful to contribute a less amount. Together these two Perutahs made what was the ninety-sixth part of a dénar, itself of the value of seven-pence. But it was "all her living," and of this she now made humble offering unto God. He spoke not to her words of encouragement, for she walked by faith; he offered not promise of return, for her reward was in heaven . . . yet, though perhaps she knew not why, that must have been a happy day when she gave up "her whole living" unto God.

The doctrines Christ taught were evidently a part of her life. She may have been one of the multitude who followed him, and "heard him gladly," as the rich words of heavenly wisdom, concerning the Kingdom of God, fell from his lips. Poor on earth, she had laid up treasures in heaven by her simple practical faith, even to the voluntary sacrifice of her entire living. Her act has been an inspiration to Christian men and women throughout the ages, and has demonstrated that to give acceptably, one must give with the whole heart, unostentatiously, and to the full extent of what we feel to be our spiritual obligation at least. The length of the purse or the volume of one's possessions has little relation to the quality of the act itself. Jesus pointed out that the widow's "two mites" were more than equal, in the eyes of God, to the gifts of all other worshippers combined. The mite was equal to about half a mill

There are, in our own day, many noble, self-sacrificing followers of the Master who delight in "casting their gifts into the Lord's treasury," for any good cause that appeals to their hearts and consciences. Many have already given their "mite" to aid in saving the mothers and children of Cuba from death by starvation. There are thousands of others—mothers, wives, sisters, daughters—who hear Cuba's pleading, and are preparing to give their "mite" also. There are none so poor, that they cannot give something to a cause which, like that to which the poor widow gave her offering, was one that assured a rich blessing to all who gave in the spirit which Christ so grandly commended. It is not to be forgotten that the simple act of helping others, by giving, with the whole heart in the gift, won from him what is probably the highest encomium of human conduct ever uttered.

Dying Cuba!

FAMINE and pestilence continue their ravages in Western Cuba. Every mail that reaches New York from Havana, is filled with ghastly reminders of the fact that, within a few hours' journey of our shores, multitudes are dying of hunger and the diseases that are the unfailing accompaniment of long-continued privation. The revelations concerning the famine, which have appeared in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, have opened the eyes of the American people to the real character of the frightful tragedy that is being enacted almost at our very doors—a tragedy involving the fate of nearly a million human beings, of whom over 400,000 have already perished. That such a calamity could occur within a half day's sail of an American port seems incredible, and it is not surprising that the statement should have been called in question by many on hearing it for the first time. But there is no longer a shadow of doubt about the actual condition of affairs in Cuba. The awful sacrifice of life through starvation and disease is now established by official admissions on the part of the Spanish authorities, by the reports of a number of United States Consuls, by the reports of visiting American commissions, by a number of correspondents of American newspapers, and finally and most conclusively, by Consul General Lee at Havana and our own correspondent, Sylvester Scovel, whose remarkable letters have thrilled the hearts of our people as they have not been thrilled in many years.

Under Divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers may be the means of saving many thousands of lives in Cuba. Let us, however, work quickly. Mere abundant supplies of food and medicine are now needed. This is a case in which the liberality of God's people should flow like a river, carrying [illegible] Clara Barton and Consul General Lee and the prospective co-workers are equal to any exertion they may be called to make in the prosecution of this great life-saving work. They are in the field at your special request. They will be able to accomplish glorious results if properly and promptly supported.

Yet not for God's sake only, but for the sake of our brothers and sisters in poor, dying Cuba, and of the [illegible] Him who went about healing the sick and feeding the hungry multitudes, we ask all to send in their offerings for the Relief Fund. It is His work, and you must act promptly if you would be the means of saving a life in Cuba.

Mr. Moody at Yale.

THE reception of Mr. D. L. Moody by the students of Yale on Sunday, Feb. 13, is an indication of spirituality, which is very welcome, in view of the charges which have been made of late against the University. The fact that all three of the meetings Mr. Moody held were densely crowded by the young men, and that many of them sought him out personally afterward for direct conversation, will cheer Christian people who have been alarmed by the criticisms of the press. It is evident that there are in Yale as at Princeton and other colleges many young men who are anxious to walk "according to the spirit, and not according to the flesh." These, too, are not laggards or effeminate but men who are prominent in the football team and in the boating club, as they are in the class-room. It was only recently that Dr. A. J. Lyman, of Brooklyn, gave similar testimony as to the life at Williams college, at which, by the spontaneous request of the students, he spent four days preaching in the college chapel and holding personal talks with them on vital religion.

In spite of all that has been said by the critics of the colleges, there are indications of a strong and pure religious life in these institutions of learning which are very encouraging. That there are some students who have been guilty of excesses, cannot be denied, but there appears to be good reason for believing that these do not constitute the majority of the students, nor the class of greatest influence. Parents would be unwise who deprived their sons of a University education through fear of contamination. As the apostle said, to escape such danger, "must ye needs go out of the world." There is in our colleges a spirit which will foster spiritual life rather than repress it. A young man will be safe there if he will exercise the care in choosing associates which, sooner or later, he will have to exercise in the affairs of life.

MISS CLARA BARTON'S LETTER.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., February 6, 1898.

DEAR MR. KLOPSCH: It would have given me much pleasure to have made an earlier acknowledgment of your magnanimous letter of January 31st, received by me February 2d, had time and opportunity made it possible. As it is, I employ the moments en route, waiting in a railroad station for that purpose.

Notwithstanding your voluntary guarantee of financial support, greater than any proffer I have ever known, made in aid of any humanitarian effort, and which must stand before the world as a leading example, and a lasting honor both to yourself and the grand journal you represent, it was still proper from the high nature of the call, that the matter of my action be submitted to the government before giving my final reply. I need not now say to you how the proposition was received, nor that the haste required for my departure left me no spare moment of time until the present.

I can only add that the offer is characteristic of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its patrons, and my one prayer is that wisdom and ability be granted me to justify their hopes and sustain the trust so magnificently reposed in me, both by them and by you.

It will be my purpose to give to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD such information as I am able as to the distribution of their gifts, and the needs of the suffering people whom they are striving, with a charity so truly Christlike, to relieve.

Accept, I pray you, Mr. Klopsch, the high appreciation and regard of

Yours sincerely, CLARA BARTON,
President American National Red Cross.

DR. KLOPSCH'S ANSWER.

NEW YORK, February 8, 1898.

MISS CLARA BARTON, Havana, Cuba.

DEAR MISS BARTON:—I was very glad indeed to receive your letter dated at Jacksonville, and to learn from it how fully you appreciated the object of your mission to Cuba. Ever since I had received authentic information as to the true status of the people there, I have been greatly troubled in heart and soul. The suffering is so intense, and much of it so easily avoidable, that I could hardly wait for your reply accepting the call. It seemed to me that the messengers of mercy should be provided with wings, and be swift of flight, in order the more speedily to stay the hand of suffering and of death.

I cannot express to you how relieved and delighted I am that you are now in Cuba, ready to do intelligently, lovingly and prayerfully, all that you possibly can to quickly and effectively relieve the sick, the suffering, and the dying. On Friday last, I sent you a brief letter and check for Five Thousand Dollars, which money I place at your disposal to be expended specially for the relief of the sick women and children, according to your own best judgment. More money will be sent to you, just as soon as you call for it, and you may confidently expect financial support to the extent of at least Ten Thousand Dollars a month for February, March and April.

We would like to have from you a letter twice a week, setting forth the condition and the needs of the people among whom you labor, and we will receive with much gratitude any suggestions which may be apt to prove helpful to us in the larger work of relieving the famine sufferers, in which we are engaged.

Now, dear Miss Barton, I pray that you may be divinely protected and guided in this great enterprise to which you are consecrating your energies, and that success may attend your efforts; that, through your instrumentality, lives may be saved, and suffering alleviated, the hungry fed, and the naked clothed. May you bring light to hearts that are dark, hope to those that are hopeless, joy and happiness where sorrow and desolation hold sway, and may it all be done in the name of Him whom we both delight to serve, and may His blessing rest upon you and upon the work in which you are now engaged.

Yours very cordially,
LOUIS KLOPSCH.

Our Relations with Spain.

OUR relations with Spain, which have been strained since the outbreak of the Cuban insurrection, have not been improved by the recent indiscretion of Senor de Lome, the Spanish minister to Washington. It is extremely unfortunate that such an incident should have occurred at a time when so many causes of irritation exist. Senor de Lome, in a letter to Don Jose Canalejas, a Spanish journalist who visited Washington a few months ago, on his way to Cuba, gave his private views on the political situation here. In the course of the letter he described President McKinley as "weak and catering to the rabble," and said, "he is, besides, a low politician, who desires to leave a door open to intrigue and to stand well with the jingoes of his party." The letter, of course, was confidential, and probably would never have been seen the light, if the minister had not, in the same letter, written contemptuously of a Spanish gentleman, whose son-in-law is an intimate friend of Don Jose Canalejas. He saw the letter, and in order to revenge himself on De Lome, allowed it to reach the Cuban junta, which gladly availed itself of the opportunity to further inflame American animosity against Spain. Senor de Lome instantly realized that his usefulness as a Spanish envoy was at an end, and promptly sent in his resignation. The President is said to be satisfied with this termination of the incident, though some of his advisers hold that Spain should be called upon to disavow De Lome, and express formal regrets that he should have made such criticisms on the head of the Government to which he was accredited. Our minister at Madrid has the matter in hand, and his report is eagerly expected. In the meantime, certain people in this country, and a much larger number in Spain, are doing their utmost to widen the breach between the two countries. On the one hand our Government is being urged to intervene in Cuba, which would precipitate a conflict with Spain; on the other hand, the lower classes in Madrid, Barcelona and other Spanish cities are clamoring for a war with this country. Neither party is taking a prudent or a patriotic course. While it is certain that such a war would in the end prove to be ruinous to Spain, it is equally certain that it would entail disaster upon us. Spain possesses a navy of quick-sailing ships which could play havoc with the cities on our defenceless coasts, while it is by no means sure that our more powerful navy could intercept it and force a battle. Enormous mischief might result for us, and in the end to Spain, by such a conflict, and it may be hoped that for the sake of both countries the rash people in both, who are trying to precipitate a war, may fail. Each nation has need to pray:

Deliver me, O Lord, from the evil man; preserve me from the violent man; who imagine mischief in their heart, continually do they gather themselves together for war (Psa. 140: 1, 2.)

How the Eagles died.

A western journal has a remarkable story, which, whether true or not, has its significance. It says that in a certain district there is a long electric line over which a current of twenty thousand volts is passed. The line is worked by two copper wires, somewhat imperfectly insulated, one for the positive current and one for the return. The wires are attached to poles, side by side and not far apart. One day recently there was a sudden break and it was supposed that a pole had been blown down. When the break had been located, men were sent to repair it. They found both wires melted in two at the same point, and near the place were the remains of two large eagles. An examination of their bodies showed that they had been fighting. Their death and the fusing of the wires supplied a clear idea of what had occurred. One of the eagles had evidently alighted on one one wire and one on the other. As long as they sat thus apart, no harm would come to them, but the moment their beaks touched, the electric circuit would be completed and they would be killed. The electricians have no doubt that this was just what occurred. The birds acted according to their nature and could not know that the consequences of their quarrel would be mutual destruction, but that excuse cannot be made for Christians who attack one another, because they have been warned.

But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another (Gal. 5: 15).

Won Her Husband's Liberty.

A romantic marriage was solemnized at Kansas City, Mo., a few days ago. The bride was formerly matron of the Kansas State Penitentiary. While there, a Mexican, who was unable to speak English, was brought in, under a sentence of thirty years for murder. It was proved that he had gone to Wichita, Kan., with a drove of cattle from his home at Guanajuato, Mexico, and that in a fight he had killed a citizen of Wichita. He had no money, but counsel was assigned to him at his trial, and an interpreter tried to make the evidence clear to him. He took little interest in the case, however, and was speedily convicted and condemned. In the penitentiary he learned to speak English, and in the course of his duties made the acquaintance of the matron. To her, he told the story of his crime, and she took a deep interest in his case. She sent to Wichita and had a thorough investigation made. It was proved that the Mexican was more a victim than a criminal. He had been murderously attacked, and was struggling for his life when he struck the blow which had killed his assailant. The matron laid the facts before Governor Leedy, who has issued a pardon to the condemned man. He did not know of the efforts that were being made on his behalf, and when the news of his pardon came, he was overjoyed. The first thing he did after receiving it, was to go to the matron and ask her to marry him. She consented, and the couple left the penitentiary as man and wife. It is a pity that when men hear that Christ has won liberty for them and that he has given his life to save them from bondage to sin, they are not grateful as this man was, nor willing to consecrate their lives to him.

For ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit which are God's. (1. Cor. 6: 2.).

Whiskey Explodes at a Fire.

A sad loss of life and property occurred at a fire at Pittsburg, Pa. on February 10. The fire started in a large warehouse belonging to an Ice Company. The warehouse occupied an entire block and was divided into six departments, separated by thick walls, with communicating doors which were usually closed at night. One of the departments was occupied by the Federal Government as a bonded warehouse and in this, on the night of the fire, there are said to have been two thousand barrels of whiskey. Tongues of flame were seen shortly before midnight in the department occupied by the Ice Company. Two alarms were given and the firemen were quickly on the scene. They found that the fire was spreading to the next department in which groceries were stored. They took their stand in an alley which runs at the rear of the warehouse and from this poured continuous streams of water on the burning building. Suddenly there was a muffled report. The fire had reached the Government bonded warehouse. It was followed by a succession of explosions, and with a roar, hundreds of barrels of whiskey exploded and the rear wall of half the building was blown out, filling up the alley with debris, dragging down electric light wires, crushing several smaller buildings, and injuring firemen and spectators. Explosion followed explosion for nearly half an hour. Sometimes it was a tank of ammonia, sometimes barrels of whiskey. The flames shot up a hundred feet high and the heat was intense. When the fire was under control it was found that a police-officer and a number of firemen were missing. Eight bodies were recovered from the ruins, and it is feared that still more will be found. The loss in property is estimated at nearly two million dollars. The saddest part of the calamity, however, is the loss of the lives of the brave firemen who were fighting the fire. The part played by the whiskey was according to its nature, and we are familiar with it, though it is generally in another way that it does its fatal work.

At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder (Prov. 23: 32).

Released for Her Children's Sake.

A truckman in New York made two applications to the Jefferson Market Police Court last week. The first application was to have his wife committed on the charge of drunkenness. No evidence was needed to prove the charge, as the woman's condition at the time abundantly justified it. It was shown, however, that this was not her first offence, but that her husband had forgiven her several times. The magistrate decided to send her to the Island, but two days later the husband again appeared, this time accompanied by eight children, the youngest of whom was a baby in arms. He came to plead for his wife's release, and he pointed to his children as eight substantial reasons for wishing to withdraw his former application. The younger children were all weeping, and the magistrate's stern face softened as he looked at them. He ordered the woman to be brought into court, and told her to look at her family. She wept, too, and pleaded for her release, that she might go home and attend to them. "You do not deserve it," said the magistrate, "but if you will promise to let the drink alone I will let you go for their sake." The woman gave the required promise and was allowed to depart. Thus even at our own tribunals the wrongdoer is released for the sake of others. But how different is the case of this woman from that of the sinner, who is pardoned for Christ's sake! It is not on account of what he can do, that he is pardoned, but on account of what Christ will do for him.

Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it and present it unto himself a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing. (Eph., 5: 25-27).

UNITED STATES BATTLESHIP "MAINE" DESTROYED AT HAVANA.

On the evening of Feb. 15, as the vessel lay at anchor, an explosion occurred on board, by which the ship was destroyed and many of the crew were killed and wounded. The cause of the catastrophe is said to have been the accidental explosion of one of her forward magazines.

Loss of the Veendam.

The steamship St. Louis, of the American line, which arrived at New York, on February 12, brought two hundred and twelve men, women, and children, whom its brave crew had taken off the steamer Veendam, of the Holland American line, which had been found sinking at sea. The Veendam, which many travelers will remember as the Baltic of the White Star line, left Rotterdam for New York, on February 3. Three days later, in passing through some wreckage a severe shock was felt, and when the engineer went below to ascertain what injury had been done, he found that the propeller shaft was broken. There was a large jagged hole in the ship's side through which the water was pouring. Whether the hole was made by the wreckage or by the ship's broken propeller cannot now be known. It was late in the evening when the accident occurred, and before midnight all hope of saving the ship was abandoned. But a systematic and energetic effort was made to keep her afloat until assistance could be had. The engines were kept at work pumping, until the fires were extinguished. Then bucket brigades were formed, and the hand-pumps were manned. Crew and passengers worked for dear life, but the ship steadily sank. Meanwhile a cannon was fired and rockets sent up, to attract the notice of passing ships. The St. Louis, on her way from Southampton to New York, heard the boom of the gun and went to the rescue of the imperilled people. It was stormy and a high sea was running, but three boats were lowered and they went to and fro between the St. Louis and the sinking vessel, until every soul was brought off. Then the Veendam's captain, fearing that the vessel would be a danger to navigation, set her on fire, and she went down a blazing wreck. The St. Louis distributed the wrecked people among her own crew and passengers, and showed them great kindness. They had not been able to save any of their baggage, and many will doubtless suffer from the loss. Some of them being penniless, are liable to be sent back if the Immigration Commissioners obey the strict letter of the law. It will be peculiarly hard if any of them should be sent back to Holland on account of their poverty, seeing that they lost all that they had on the way here. Those who turn their backs on their old life and come to Christ need never fear such treatment. It is the poor that receive from him the most cordial welcome.

Ho, every one that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk, without money and without price (Isa. 55: 1).

CUBA MAY YET BE SAVED!

THE WHOLE NATION ALIVE TO THE URGENT DUTY OF RESCUING THE STARVING RECONCENTRADOS.

THE RELIEF FUND NOW NEARLY $40,000.

Gifts and Fervent Prayers Pouring in from Many States — Local Committees Hard at Work — Clara Barton Actively Superintending the Relief of the Sick and Starving Women and Children—Many Lives already Saved, but the Death-rate in the Provincial Towns steadily increasing—Gen. Lee Appeals for a Children's Hospital.

CUBA'S cause has touched the hearts of the American people. Since the publication in these columns of the letters written from the famine field by Sylvester Scovel, in which, for the first time, the true facts were made known concerning the awful sacrifice of over 400,000 lives by famine and disease, there has been such an outpouring of generous sympathy for the suffering Cubans as has seldom been witnessed in any land. Thousands of letters have come to us urging the adoption of relief measures on the largest scale and proffering help. As was suggested by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, local relief committees have been organized in many cities, towns, and villages, and Christian organizations of every denomination are now exerting themselves to assist the relief fund, and thus have a share in the beneficent work of saving life in Cuba. Churches, Sunday-schools, leagues, and societies are widely interested, and the movement is of such proportions and the zeal so marked that it is now hoped that great results may follow.

Fully alive to the importance of prompt action, the Relief Committee is now making large shipments of food supplies and medicine by the Havana steamers from New York on every sailing day. These shipments, each representing thousands of dollars contributed to the fund, are consigned to General Lee, who, with a most efficient staff, directs the food distribution, while Miss Clara Barton, President of the Red Cross, has charge of the work among the sick and starving mothers and children. Reports received during the week show that the work is progressing as satisfactorily as the resources will permit. The supplies are exhausted very quickly after being received at Havana, the applications of aid from a large number for interior towns and villages being greatly in excess of the distributors' ability to satisfy.

A CUBAN OX-TEAM.

The reports state that the death rate, except at those points where relief has been afforded, is increasing. This is particularly the case in the interior. Wherever the relief has reached, the change is perceptible. Large crowds of the poorer classes are included, since the famine has reduced all to a general level—come to the relief headquarters pleading for food. In Santa Clara, many of the large towns have applied for a share of the relief. Arrangements are now preparing for further extending the distribution to interior towns, where the long-continued scarcity of food has resulted in the death of a large part of the population.

One of the saddest stories of suffering is related by Capt. E. D. Taylor, of the American schooner Charles S. Davis, which lately arrived at Fernandina from Sagua la Grande. He visited a considerable part of the province and where formerly green fields and growing crops were seen, there was nothing but barrenness and ruin. In Sagua at least thirty persons were dying daily of starvation. He adds:

The streets are filled with emaciated women and children whose clothes are nothing but shreds, the bones plainly visible through the rags. One old man said that he at one time owned a little farm near town and always made a living for himself and seven children, but he lost property and cattle has been destroyed and he was forced to go into the town, where he was without shelter, money, or food; that he and his family subsisted only on what they could beg and what little they got to eat from the government, which issues to each of these poor pacificos only three gills of soup a day. This only prolongs their lives for a little while.

Major Geo. L. McDonald, of Meridian, Miss., has received a letter from United States Consul Walter Barker, at Sagua la Grande, in which these passages occur:

I counted, on returning from breakfast at 11 o'clock this morning, three dead bodies on the streets. I was told another was lying in the plaza (market). God help these poor, innocent creatures! When the veil is moved and the matter given the light of heaven, it will show a scene no Christian people can face. I fear my reason has departed. The Alcalde stated to me yesterday (Sunday) that the 6,000 reconcentrados in this city (Sagua has 14,000 population) on his register as starving (many, he said, they had no account of, as they preferred to die rather than beg) got no relief; that the city had no funds, and that they would soon see people falling in the streets like grass before the mower. The relief fund is exhausted, and now American citizens are in the same pitiable plight as the reconcentrados. A widow (her son is my clerk), an American—her husband a Virginian, rich at the inception of the war, who died of a broken heart, is in a pitiable plight. I have been feeding her and her family of nine. Five of these daughters were educated in the United States. She told me they were starving; that soon she would be laid beside her husband, and that her last request to me would be place a wooden slab between the graves and inscribe on it: "Victims of Spanish cruelty and American indifference." Then, after reflecting a moment, she said: "I will not, though I could use a harsher word." The people are dying, thousands daily.

A significant indication of the widespread suffering is found in the fact that the Spanish government has now unreservedly thrown all the ports of Cuba open to relief contributions. In one district, outside of Havana, as a late official report admits, over 50,000 persons are starving, the authorities being absolutely powerless to help them. In a single city, the alcade has applied to the Relief Fund for aid for 6,— persons, and adds, "They will die, unless they are fed immediately." A recent letter from a United States Consul says:

I have certificates signed by the Alcaldes of the municipalities and towns of the Sagua la Grande zone, showing that the estimate of fifty thousand perishing souls (in that district) was not above the mark, but rather under The destruction grows, and the death-rate increases hourly. I have selected a relief committee, composed of women as well as men, who will distribute all contributions received. Tell the generous people of America, who has never turned a deaf ear to the cry of the distressed, to send us food, medicine, and clothing for the sick.

A well-known American officer, now in Cuba, states that ninety thousand persons have died of starvation in the province of Santa Clara alone, since Jan. 1, 1898. In Matanzas twenty-two cases of death from famine recently occurred in one day.

A letter from Gen. Lee, just received, will be read with keen interest by all who have helped the relief movement through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. He writes to Dr. Klopsch, as follows:

"CONSULATE GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
HAVANA, Feb. 9, 1898.

"My Dear Sir: I am glad to hear that there is such a wide and growing interest in the condition of the destitute on this island, and that you are confident a large sum will be raised for their relief. I do not think it is possible for any one to realize the situation here without being present.

"Among other measures of relief I have considered the advisability of renting a large and suitable building for the purpose of founding a destitute orphan asylum, where the little starving children, who have no fathers and mothers or other relatives to watch over and protect them, can be placed, and where they will be fed and taken care of, and, perhaps, later, given some form of education.

"I find that I can rent a most commodious establishment, with a large bath and all conveniences, as well as some ground around it, which the children could use and get their air and exercise. If you could help me to pay said rent for, say, six months, or possibly nine, it would, in my opinion, be the best assistance that could be rendered. I would, through humane agents, collect these helpless little ones, and have them transferred to said establishment, where they would be in charge of nurses and other suitable attendants. In this shelter I shall place the one hundred children's cots you were good enough to send me, and probably we may want some more, together with the necessary articles of furniture, such as chairs, small tables, bedclothes, etc. I think if you will have such articles marked 'Furniture for Hospitals,' I will be able to get them delivered free of duty, as was the case with other supplies. From time to time I shall be most happy to communicate with you and keep you informed of the progress being made in the great work undertaken by the generous and benevolent people of the United States.

[Signed] "FITZHUGH LEE,
"Consul-General."

reader of this journal. We have cab to General Lee, assuring him that T CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers stand by him in his good work and s port him in every way. The necess supplies will be sent immediately, the rent of the building he mentions d provided, so that the kind-hearted gallant soldier who now represents Government in Cuba may put his pl for saving the orphans into opera without delay. Every Christian mo in America ought to feel grateful to eral Lee for his noble effo

Miss Barton, who is ergetically at work among Havana sufferers, has mad contract with a bakery supplying bread and crack to the starving. There thousands of destitute re centrado families who, if they were supplied v flour, have no means of c ing or baking it. Their p verty is abject and comp and Miss Barton has wi decided to set at rest doubt as to such cases having an abundant supp wholesome bread distribu among them.

Writing to THE CHRIST HERALD from Havana, Sylvester Scovel says:

"Much good is being complished—you see fe little skeletons lying abo doorways or loitering a pennies. Gen. Lee's C dren's Hospital will be an cellent thing. My corres dents in the smaller to are jubilant over the firs ceipt of American relief the Julian Hawthorne, the known author, cables fr Havana to the Philadelp Press:

I called on Miss Clara Bar who had arrived by Plant steamer in the morning. No one could help being impressed by presence of this gracious woman and comes as an angel of mercy into the mid the mercilessness of war. She is organ her plans for succor and relief and it was dent that under her experienced guidance der will soon emerge from chaos and every ounce of food and dollar of money bither from America would reach its pr destination. LO! A CRY FROM O'ER THE WATERS

LO! a cry from o'er the waters
Borne on every gale,
Fathers, mothers, sons, and daughters
Send a bitter wail.
"Give us bread or we must perish!
Give us bread to-day!"
Do we hear them? Are we Christians?
Can we still delay?

If the wolf of famine hovered
O'er the dear home-fold;
If our loved ones sadly wandered
Hungry, sick, and cold;
Would we listen to the story
Of a Christ who died;
If when his children—those who told us
Of the Crucified—
Still refused to share our sorrows
And their faith denied?

They are starving! they are dying!
Hear that far-off cry.
Shall we heed it? Are we Christians?
Can we let them die?
He who gave us all our treasure,
Asks that we, to-day
Feed the hungry, clothe the needy—
Dare we answer nay.
"Inasmuch," we hear him saying;
Shall we linger still?
Or responding nobly, grandly,
Do his blessed will?

Kind Words for Cuba.

IN the letters received daily by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD there are many expressions in every mail, showing how deeply the hearts of all have been touched with sympathy for Cuba's great affliction:

In sending her gift a contributor writes: "One whom God has greatly blessed and who wants to do a little in return." In striking contrast to this, another contributor at Fulton, N. Y, writes: "My income is very small—just what it takes to live on. I would like to give more." F. A. T., Jacksonville, Vt. writes: "May God's blessing rest upon you and upon all who have helped."

"For Jesus and humanity's sake," writes a friend in Elgin, Ill. Mrs. W. and daughter, of Visalia, Cal., in sending a joint offering cordially add: "We wish it were hundreds instead of dollars." "How sad, how heart-rending, to think of so many starving in this land of such great plenty," is the expression of two kind Christian ladies of Kittaning, Pa.

English Sunday School Veterans.

Since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, some time ago, closed its great Sunday-school competition, leading religious journals abroad have been adopting a similar method of awaking interest in the question of Sunday-school attendance.

The new Roll of Honor for Sunday-school workers, recently inaugurated by the editor of The Quiver, has disclosed the remarkable fact that at one Sunday-school in Manchester—St. Paul's, Bennett street—there is a regular army of veteran workers. Forty-five teachers and superintendents, who are at the present time actively engaged in the school, can each show a record of over twenty years' service, and the list is headed by Mr. Samuel Goodwin, who commenced work in the school as far back as 1839, and after fifty-eight years of continuous service is still at his post. The combined services of these teachers reach the amazing total of one thousand four hundred and sixty-five years, which gives an average of thirty-two and a half years each. There is probably no other Sunday-school in Britain with such a record, and only last year testimonials were presented to no less than five gentlemen, who had each been working in the Sunday-school for over half a century. It is possible that the silver medal and presentation Bible for the longest service in the county of Lancashire will fall to the lot of Mr. Goodwin.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Italian Peasant Life.

Simple and Idyllic, and with Little Care or Thought of To-morrow.

THE Italian peasant is a true child of nature. In his own sunny clime, among its gently sloping hills and vine-clad valleys, he lives an exceedingly simple life, with few wants and fewer ambitions. A few acres well tilled, a rude, weather-proof cottage, sheltered from rough winds by the side of some friendly hill, a vegetable garden and a little vineyard supply his material needs. He is passionately patriotic, loving his native land with an ardor rarely equalled, and cherishing its songs, its dances, and its traditions.

Our photograph shows a typical peasant home in Northern Italy, a region where the scenery is bold and rugged, with great mountain masses intersected by rivers and beautiful level valleys between. Rugged as it is, the district is most fertile, its steep slopes enjoying in a climate favorable to the cultivation of fruit of many kinds. Few towns of any importance are found on these slopes or in the valleys. Many of the mountain torrents, which are rapid and swollen in Spring, are absolutely dry in Summer, all save for a few springs, the valleys suffer from drought. Huts, like that shown in the illustration, are not uncommon. They are stout frame structures, solidly joined together, and so thickly covered with thatching as to be impervious to storm. For dwelling purposes, however, much more substantial structures of stone are built, low-studded and with dark interiors, but they are sufficiently comfortable, and in the Spring and Summer seasons, with their picturesquely luxuriant surroundings, they look even attractive. Cereals form the principal food of the people: maize and beans, wheat, macaroni, figs, grapes, melons, potatoes, onions, garlic, and other vegetable products being used in abundance. Animal food is very little used except during the winter months. Health and vigor are wonderfully preserved by the free out-door life and simple tastes of these Italian peasants, among their native hills. They are a hardy, vigorous race, and far superior, physically, to the native population of the Italian cities.

A PEASANT HOME IN NORTHERN ITALY.

The Origin of a Name.

Alma-Tadema, the famous English artist, is a Belgian by birth, though with a Friesland name, and has just passed his sixty-second birthday. Originally, he was simply Laurens Tadema, but he hyphened Alma with the latter: first for the sake of euphony, it is said, and, secondly, that his name, appearing among the first in the Academy catalogues, he might learn his fate quickly as an exhibitor when the Academy tickets were sent out. Laurens has of late been Anglicized fully into Lawrence, but to the great world the famous Friesian artist is simply Alma-Tadema.

Frontier Feast.

Speaking of the National Stock-Growers' Convention, held in Denver, January 25-27, a western exchange describes a memorable barbecue given in Denver, after the adjournment of the convention. Those guests might carry away memories and hand them down as heirlooms if the last time that a menu of buffalo meat, bears' meat, opossum, antelope steaks and venison of other kinds as served a la barbecue on the American continent. It was expected that twelve thousand people would be fed on this occasion, for which the following menu was provided: Five buffalo. Ten beeves. Four elk. Thirty sheep. Two bears. Fifteen antelope. Ten thousand pickles. Half a ton of cheese. Three thousand loaves of bread. Two hundred opossum, and thirty-five barrels of yams.

Lead the Little Ones to Christ.

The question is often asked: At how early an age can children experimentally understand the way of salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ? Rev. E. Payson Hammond, writing on this subject says:

It may not be easy to give a definite answer to this question; but I have found in many parts of the world eminent Christians who experienced a change of heart at such an early age that they could not remember the time when they first began to love God. I firmly believe that it is possible for Christian parents and Sabbath-school teachers of infant classes, so to hold up Christ before little children, even of only three, four, and five summers that their young hearts will be drawn, I might say almost involuntarily, to him. A mother in England taught her little child that his father was away in India. As soon as he could lisp his father's name, his picture was shown him, and he was taught to say, "That's my papa." Though he had never seen his father to know him, yet, through that mother's faithful teaching, he learned to love him. One day, unexpectedly to all, the father returned from India, and as he entered the door his little son was the first to greet him, exclaiming as he did so, "My dear papa, I so glad to see you." Why is it not possible for mothers, therefore, so to bring home to their little ones the great fact of Jesus' love for them, that their young hearts will be drawn to him at such an early age that they will never be able to remember the time when the light of the Sun of Righteousness first dawned upon them?

Help One Another.

The best way to ease your heart of a sorrow is to lift a burden from another. The best way to enlarge your happiness is to share it. And not merely with those whom you love, those who love you and will repay you in kind, or even in the coin of gratitude. Help for the joy of helping, give for the joy of giving. To hide money in old tea-kettles and stockings is to put it where it will do no one any good; to keep your pleasures and successes all to yourself is much the act of a miser: you will get no interest on them. Put your pleasures and successes in the great bank of humanity and trust God for the profits. If you make others better, nobler, and truer, what higher dividend can you want on your investment? While you should not limit your giving to the loving and beloved, still it is right to remember that by that very relationship, theirs is the first right. God did not plant you in your home for nothing. He means you to help, to love, to make happy all humanity, and you are doing this by making your own home a shining light as far as in you lies. Don't be discouraged if you don't always see immediate results. Perform the little acts of courtesy and kindness with a glad heart and free, and trust God for results.

It was for this that God's gifts were lent—
To light the way for those that roam;
It was for this the Christ was sent—
To shelter those that had no home!

Suffer the Children.

It is beautiful to see how children everywhere love to come to him, when they hear of his pure and loving Gospel. A consecrated woman writing from a Chinese mission station, says: "It was touching to see the pupils coming to the meeting, holding their grandmothers by the hand. One little girl brought hers every night. The old lady would not sit near the pulpit, so the child seated her near the door, and then came up close to the organ, where she always sits on Sundays. It was delightful to see how much the children seemed to enjoy the services. Although the weather was cold and rainy, the church was always full."

Courtesy in the Home.

In Germany there stood a castle having two towers, and the old baron to whom it belonged stretched wires from one tower to the other, thus constructing a harp upon which the winds could play, making music for the inmates of that home. Soft winds made gentle harmonies and the strong tempests rushing down the mountain side hurled themselves against the wires and they began to roll out the most majestic strains. There is sweet music in every home where the heart strings are touched by gentleness and courtesy. The mild word, the gentle answer, the tender act, the patient considerateness, will touch chords of kindness and make sweet melody in the family life as everywhere. A desolate, dreary place is a home devoid of those little courtesies which are practiced in the best social life. The courtesies which are practiced in social life are fully as charming and more thoroughly appreciated in the home circle. "Be courteous."

THE GUEST.*

THERE was once a restless boy,
Who dwelt in a home by the sea,
Where the water danced for joy,
And the wind was glad and free;
But he said, "Good mother, oh! let me go;
For the dullest place in the world, I know,
Is this little brown house,
This old brown house,
Under the apple tree."

So he traveled here and there,
But never content was he,
Though he saw in lands most fair,
The costliest homes there be.
He something missed from the sea or sky,
Till he turned again with a wistful sigh
To the little brown house,
The old brown house,
Under the apple tree.

Then the mother saw and smiled,
While her heart grew glad and free.
Hast thou chosen a home, my child?
"Ah, where shall we dwell?" quoth she.
And he said: "Sweet mother, from east to west,
The loveliest home, and the dearest and best,
Is a little brown house,
An old brown house,
Under an apple tree."

Little Blind Ruby.

IN Galveston, Texas, there is a little deaf, dumb and blind girl, of whose remarkable performances an interesting report was made by a writer in the News. Ruby is bright, intelligent, and pretty, recognizes a stranger's presence, and greets him courteously. To thread a needle, she put both the end of the thread and eye of the needle in her mouth, and, taking them out again, quickly passed the thread through the needle's eye. She seemed to locate the eye of the needle with her tongue. As is the case with most blind persons, Ruby's sense of touch is remarkably acute. Her fingers are soft and slender, with a peculiar velvety feeling, and they serve for her eye as well as her fingers. Her sense of smell is very keen. Ruby seems to be as fond of dolls as the average little girl, and displays wonderful skill in cutting out and making dresses, aprons, capes, etc., for her mimic babies. She has a habit of inspecting the trimming and style of cut of the dresses of lady visitors, and she shows great ingenuity in so cutting and trimming her doll's wardrobe. Her sewing is not confined to her fingers by any means. She is equally expert with the sewing machine, and is very fond of operating it. Ruby's accomplishments do not stop at plain sewing. After cutting and sewing her doll's clothes she also cuts and works the buttonholes and sews on the buttons. She is, for the most part, self-taught in these manipulations. She keeps her clothes in her own trunk, and does not allow any one else, no matter whom, to put anything in it. Besides her doll she has a cat, of which she is quite fond, and she also loves to play with chickens. Not long since she got up in the night when all the rest of the family were sound asleep, went to the fowl-house, where she found a hen that was desirous of sitting. Ruby procured a box, in which she fixed up a nest of straw, and, gathering up all the eggs she could find, some three or four dozen, she set the hen up in business, placing the box upon the sewing machine, where her mother found it next morning. She sometimes goes into the fowl-house—always at night—and catches chickens, which she puts into a coop. Next day, after amusing herself with them awhile, she turns them out. The chickens do not seem to be afraid of her.

The Children's Song.

Sing on, little children—your voices
Fill the air with contentment and love;
All nature around you rejoices,
And the birds warble sweetly above.
Sing on—all our struggle and battle,
Our cry when most deep and sincere—
What are they? A child's simple prattle,
A breath in the Infinite ear.

Under Nobody's Auspices...

The Story of a Brave Girl's Effort to Win Souls for Christ

By CAROLINE A. CREEVEY.

THE afternoon was waning as the train drew near Oakland. It had been a long ride through a wild country. Oakland was a mining camp, and Mr. Philip Hardie, a passenger on the train, was its newly-appointed superintendent. He was a college-graduate, and had the easy assurance of a man of the world. He was considered a rising young fellow. His good looks, and kindly but authoritative ways of managing men, made him a capital boss, and the company which owned the camp had done wisely in sending him to Oakland. Under the last superintendent, the discipline had been lax, and drinking, gambling, and other frontier vices had crept in among the men, who were a rough set at best.

Mr. Hardie had been interested all day in a young lady who sat across the aisle, now, towards the end of the journey, the only lady passenger left in the car. Mr. Hardie wondered if she too were bound for that out-of-the-way place, Oakland. He had extended civilities to her, which she had gracefully received. When he raised or closed her window, or brought her a glass of water, he observed that she was simply but stylishly dressed, in a tailor made suit of brown cloth. A soft, blue silk vest peeped from the coat, which was fastened above the waist by a broad band and two large buttons. A hat of brown felt completed the costume, the whole, thought Mr. Hardie, looking exceedingly well on a very pretty girl. Her eyes were large, of a gray color, warm, earnest, and full of vivacious expression. Brown, wavy hair was caught in a loose psyche knot, through which a tall, silver comb was thrust. Her hands were smooth, plump and delicate. Mr. Hardie always noticed a lady's hands. He had a theory that he could read character in them better than in the face. These were ringless, and had an odd little gesture backward when she talked. She also gave her head an emphatic bit of a toss at such times, that was quite original as well as charming.

They would shortly be at Oakland, and the young lady performed what she called a "dry toilet," smoothing her dress and wiping cinders from her face. She had with her a black bag, a musical instrument in its case, and an umbrella. When Oakland was called, she alighted, permitting Mr. Hardie to carry her bag. He was surprised, and not ill pleased, that this decidedly interesting young lady should be coming to the same place as himself, but he could not conceive what business should call her there.

The station was a poor affair, a single, small shed, with a stove in the middle, and a settee along one side. The floor was stained with tobacco juice. One man did duty as ticket-agent, baggage-master, train dispatcher and telegraphic operator. Two or three men were lounging about the stove, smoking dirty pipes. Not a woman in sight. Virgin forests were all around them. A lonelier place could not be imagined.

A hack was driven up, Mr. Hardie's trunk transferred to it. "Why," said he, "they have forgotten your baggage. How stupid!"

"I care so little," the girl said, with a smile. "I get fog contracts for me the necessities of life. I can take it easy, thank you!" Turning to the station-master she said: "May I put up a notice here?"

Permission being granted, she took from her bag first a hammer and paper of tacks, then a roll of big posters, from which she detached one. Near the door of the station she fastened to the wall a notice. The men staring, drew near and read:

> ATTENTION!
> MEN AND BROTHERS!
> Come to a meeting to-night
> At 7:30 in — ——— > Conducted by > MISS MARION.

"You have some sort of a hall in this place?" she queried, turning to the men.

"'Taint much of a hall," one of them answered. "It's back of the grocery."

"What do you call it?"

"Well, mum, we've dubbed it Liberty-Pavilion, 'cause you see"—he grinned.

"Never mind why," she said. With a blue pencil, in large, decisive letters, the young lady filled in the blank with "Liberty-Pavilion." Then she added the date, "Sept. 25."

Mr. Hardie was no less astonished than disgusted. The mystery was explained. A preacher in petticoats! He was wrathful. He approached this young person and said:

"You are Miss Marion, I presume?"

"At your service, sir," and she laughed. "Your name, as written on yonder trunk, is Mr. Philip Hardie. So now we are properly introduced to each other, are we not?"

He said, with his most freezing manner:

"It is really none of my affair, but I want you to forego this plan of holding a religious service here, of all places. Do you know? This is not a town, not even a small village. Oakland is only a mining-camp of rough men." Mr. Hardie's tone was imperative.

"I have never been here before. I have yet to learn what kind of a place it is," she said.

"Then I must beg of you not to remain. There are no ladies here;" emphasis on the word "ladies."

"I beg your pardon. There is one lady here," she said with utmost good nature.

"Of course," he answered. "And because you are a lady, this is no place for you. I would not let my own sister stay here a single night. There is a train back, about ——"

"Then, fortunately for me, I am not your own sister," she said, with a merry laugh. "I am sorry you don't approve, though I did not expect you would. He leads me," she continued, softly. "It is the rough men I am after. I am not in the least afraid. Why should I be? I must hold my meeting, Mr. Hardie, and I beg you to come." Turning to the men, she said: "Come, please, to Liberty-Pavilion, to-night, and bring all the other men with you. And now, where can I find a boarding house?"

"There are no cabs, I regret to say." Mr. Hardie spoke haughtily, his anger still burning hot within him. What man would not be incensed with a young woman, who, under like circumstances, would have none of his well-meant advice?

"If you choose to walk to the camp with me, I will carry your satchel," he said. As they passed along the rough path, through woods, he suddenly exclaimed with an air of relief: "Oh, I see. You belong to the Salvation Army."

Her laugh rang out long and merrily. "No, indeed! Nothing would tempt me to wear one of those hideous bonnets. The Army has done splendid work, though, and they have shown the value of women in religious work. Be content, my friend, I am plain Miss Marion, under nobody's auspices. Wait till you have heard me. Then judge me. I wish you would come," she gently urged.

"Probably I shall not," he said. "I confess to a prejudice against women's preaching."

"Don't call it preaching. It is only talking. These men have souls to be saved, Mr. Hardie, just like yourself."

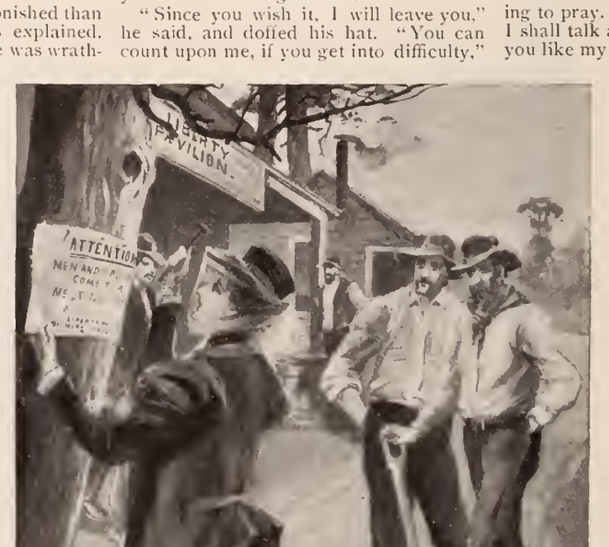
"I am a church-member." Mr. Hardie straightened himself.

"Doubtless. But you see that is not quite the question. Christ, when he comes, will not ask first about church-membership. He will say: 'Is your soul purified from sin, and are you fit to sit with me on my throne?'"

"Oh, well," said he, impatiently, "you are one of these cranks——"

"Cranks? As you please. But now we are coming to the camp. There are some of the men, and these are their miserable shanties that they call homes. Where lumber is so plenty, what a shame that the Company does not build better houses! It is like other men's towns where woman is not. How true it is that she only can make a home. But I dare say there are a dozen liquor shops to one grocery. Never mind, I will shake the groggeries. Good-by, my friend, and thank you for your exertions in my behalf, inciuding physical," as she took possession of her bag. "My work begins now, and while I am here, unless you choose, you need not recognize me."

"Since you wish it, I will leave you," he said, and doffed his hat. "You can count upon me, if you get into difficulty,"



MARION NAILED UP THE NOTICE OF THE MEETING.

(and he inwardly hoped that she would fall into direst extremities, from which she would be compelled to beg for his help).

Then he watched her step daintily around the mud and refuse—Oakland boasted no street-cleaning department then—nailing her notices on trees and fences. She spoke to all the men whom she met, took a look inside Liberty-Pavilion, then inquired her way into the boarding-houses. There were two. Miss Marion chose the cleaner-looking, and went in. Thither Mr. Hardy went also. He preferred to keep an eye upon her in case she should need his interference. She had already secured a room, and asked to have her supper sent to her there, when Mr. Hardie applied for admission, so that he did not see her.

Liberty-Pavilion was rough and dirty. Tables for drinking beer and playing cards usually occupied the centre of the room. At Miss Marion's request they were moved to one side, where they served as seats. The chairs were arranged in some order. A few ill-odored kerosene lamps with blackened chimneys were supported in rude brackets against the walls. In the huge stove in one corner a light fire was kindled, for the evening was chilly. The roof was leaky and the ceiling stained. The only thing in all the room when the hour for meeting arrived was a little lady in brown, sitting on a slightly raised platform, smiling, at ease. Philip Hardie was there. He felt very anxious about her, and he was there to protect her in spite of herself. As he looked at her, she seemed to him like a tall, fair lily, which raises its fearless head in the midst of a thicket of briars. The men crowded in, curious to hear the "gal preacher." When scuffling of feet and loud talking were heard at the door, a few delicate sounds of music floated through the air. Few of the men had heard a mandolin, and they listened pleased as children, while Miss Marion played a lively tune. Then stepping forward, she struck a few chords and sang with a clear, sweet soprano, playing meanwhile a running accompaniment upon her mandolin:

> There were ninety and nine that safely lay
> In the shelter of the fold,
> But one was out on the hills away,
> Far off from the gates of gold.
> Away, on the mountains wild and bare,
> Away from the tender shepherd's care.

Four verses, Miss Marion sang, and with each, her voice gathered longing and pathos. Mr. Hardie was surprised that she could sing so well. He was moved. He wished she would sing to him a whole evening. Her voice reminded him of the clarionet of an orchestra, that instrument which more than all others seems to have a soul, pent up, wailing, sobbing with infinite desire.

The men were quiet when Miss Marion said, laying down her mandolin:

"Men and Brothers! I am not going to read from the Bible, except as we need a verse here and there. And I am not going to pray. I prayed before I came here. I shall talk and sing to you, — that is, if you like my singing."

Cries of "We do" "That's roight" —Sing another purty chune," followed by "Hist! let the lady speak." "Shut up ould man!" threatened to create disturbance. A few more notes, and a merry little tune on the mandolin brought quiet again, and Miss Marion continued:

"Men and Brothers! I am not very strong, and I cannot talk if there is noise in the room. Will you all help me by keeping perfect quiet? Men and Brothers! The night is dark. Gloomy woods surround this place. I am glad that I did not have to walk from the station after night-fall. For a child I have been a little afraid of the dark. There was once a darkness so great it could be felt."

Taking up a small Bible, Miss Marion read: "There was a thick darkness in all the land of Egypt, three days. They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place for three days." Think of the awfulness of that long night! Candles gave no light; they were quite useless. Business was suspended. They stumbled and groped about, a nation of blind men. They could not cook. How they managed to subsist through that awful time I do not know. It was like a nightmare, cold, queer, veil-like, horrible.

"Men and Brothers! Your souls are surrounded by a darkness to which the long night of Egypt would be as light. Fog, noisome vapors spring from the ground, and sicken your souls. Slimy things crawl around. Men are sometimes buried in avalanches of snow, or in landslides. They die the death of suffocation. Your souls are dying of that. They are panting, struggling for breath. Dig them out, men and brothers, before it is too late. Light and air! oh, the sweet light and air!

"Do you ask me of those whose souls have been buried alive under the avalanches? They are surrounded by darkness. So a soul that chooses, may walk away from God—ever away,—enfolding itself with foul darkness as with a cloak. Further, further! I see it growing smaller a mere speck. Now I can scarcely see it so small, so distant has it become. Oh the sight! A soul dwindled to a mere speck in the darkness."

Miss Marion strained her eyes, peering under her hand. The men were looking far away, too. Not a sound was heard in the room.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Books and Book Borrowers—A Troublesome Church-Going Problem—Concerning Babies and Family Jars—Meddling Husbands.

WHILE we were thinking around the fire the other night, we asked why people who owned books were usually so unwilling to lend them. My experience has been that the owners of books are very willing to lend them to those who will take good care of the books and return them in the same condition in which they have received them from their owners. I have myself, however, gaps in my library made by missing volumes of a set. In several instances these losses can never be replaced. I have had books returned to me with bindings loose, with stains of coffee upon some of the pages, and with a general air of defacement and rough usage, which can only be accounted for by very great carelessness. No one likes to lend a book and have it ruined, or even marred. The person who borrows a book should make a little memorandum of the transaction. This will be a check upon herself as time passes, and she will not be likely to retain for an indefinite period a piece of property which she ought to have returned within a fortnight. A book should be covered and should not be lent a second time—that is, one who has borrowed a book has no right, without the consent of the owner, to lend it to another friend. We really need a good thing-up on the subject of borrowing property. Nobody borrows your bonnet, or your shoes, or your gloves, but everybody feels at liberty to borrow your precious volume of poetry or history. Probably the custom is traditional and has been handed down to us from days when books were so expensive that only the rich could own them. Time has been when a Bible was worth as much as a house and lot, and when people took their turns in reading it when it was chained to a pillar in some public place.

* * *

An interesting question came to the assembled friends the other day in a letter from a Southern State.—What is the duty of a woman who has for many years been an interested member of the Methodist Church, when marrying a man equally zealous in the Baptist Church; she finds herself obliged to decide which communion she shall adhere to for the future. Ought her husband to leave his church and attend hers, or ought she to leave hers and join her lot with his, or might they decide to go their separate ways to the sanctuary. No outsider can arbitrarily decide a question of this sort. Usually there are modifying circumstances which enter into the case, and where the love between the two parties is strong and vital, they will find a way to come to an agreement. It would seem, usually speaking, that the wife would best yield her preference and join her lot with that of her husband. If, however, she finds this impossible and decides that she cannot be happy away from her own church, in most cases the husband will yield his own wishes to go with her. For many reasons, and especially for the reason that the family should present a united front to the world, it is best that husband and wife should worship together. When there are children, it is best that they should be brought up, not in the faith of father or mother, but of father and mother. Of course, where the differences are essential, where people are of violently opposing faiths, they should best consider the thing from every light before they agree to marry. How can two walk together unless they be agreed, is a question which still has its unanswerable argument.

* * *

A dear "Subscriber,"—I use the adjective, meaning just what it implies, for when I read her letter my whole heart went out to her, lovingly, and I longed to be of use and comfort in her trouble,—writes me a very touching letter.

It seems that she has a sweet little child, not much more than an infant, and until this precious gift of God came to her, the home was perfectly happy. Her husband and she had not even a difference of opinion. Family jars were unknown. As for a quarrel, or a coolness, or the hint of estrangement, no shadow of so sad a thing ever fell upon the complete happiness and unclouded sunshine of their married life.

If it were possible, one would fancy that so harmonious and congenial a pair would be drawn into closer union by the birth of their child. A new element of interest, of wonder, of joy, in their lives; a new gladness in the home; a clasp upon their already shining golden chain of daily delight. This is what we expect, and what we ought to see wherever and whenever a dear child is given to Christian parents, to be their own, an immortal being to train for immortality.

Just here, over the training, the trouble begins in some cases, and it has done so in "Subscriber's." She believes in gentle measures in managing the young, especially in managing babies. Her husband is of harsher fiber, and is stern, and set on having his own way, and he gets into conflicts with the baby, in which the little one is finally vanquished, of course, but only after she has cried herself into hysterics, had passionate screaming fits, and worn her poor mother to thread-paper.

* * *

There are many phases of the question of child-training, and a host of opinions on the subject. It is not to be taken for granted by any means that all of us, friends in council, will agree, but I have the floor, and so I'll speak, and you may answer if you choose.

I do not believe in a man's meddling with the management of a baby, when there is a sensible woman, and the baby's own mother, who can do it much better than he. All my life I have tried to help the under dog in the fight, and if ever there is an under dog, it is a mite of a baby, confronted by a great grown-up six-footer of a father. A father should leave the discipline of the young children entirely to their mother, not interfering unless his wife asks him to, and then acting with great caution. He loses more than he gains by attempting to coerce or to punish a little child. If he can keep out of this business, and let his wife attend to it, he will find that on the rare occasions when he does speak, his word will be more potential than if it were often uttered in fussy irritation or anger. A father should never need to take command in the home; command should belong to him and authority by right, but he should let the petty exercise of it be in his wife's hands while the children are in the nursery.

* * *

But, oh! my friends, for the children's own sake, do not make them objects of contention. Agree together. One must not say one thing and the other contradict it. Treat one another with respect. Let the children you both love draw you into fonder relations and closer intimacy of friendship. Let there be no scolding nor ill-temper nor anger nor vehemence in the household, and no fear, except the old-fashioned fear of God.

A Trained Nurse

Tells How Scrofula May be Entirely Cured.

Was Troubled for Seven Years with This Painful Disease.

Do not allow scrofula taints to develop in your blood. If you would be free from painful skin disease, take Hood's Sarsaparilla at the first indication of impure blood and thoroughly eradicate every vestige of scrofula:

"I was troubled from the time I was 9 years old until I was 16 with what the doctors called scrofula. My back was a mass of sores. I took medicines without avail and was given up as incurable. I finally began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and continued its use until I was entirely cured. I am now well and strong. As I am a trained nurse I have an opportunity to note many cases of eczema and other blood diseases cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla."

J. D. TORREY, Lillydale, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"STRONG MAN IRVING."

Montgomery E. Irving, who is said to be one of the strongest men in the world, in a recent interview with the Baltimore, Md. News, said, in regard to diet, "Keep away from coffee. It should be taken off the market."

Whenever one talks with atheletes nowadays, he finds the same expression in regard to coffee. It weakens the heart, shortens the wind, and unless one is very strong in the digestive apparatus, intereferes seriously with that portion of the body.

If it is necessary for a strong man to avoid narcotics and drugs of this character, it would seem especially important for the brain worker or the highly sensitized and delicately organized woman to avoid them as they would any other poison, if they feel the slightest desire to maintain their health and a comfortable poise of the nervous system.

True, many people seem to use coffee without a direct harmful effect, but a little careful inquiry will nearly always develop the fact that coffee users have some disturbance of the body, which they always attribute to some other cause than coffee, but which, by a curious law, is likely to be helped if they can ever be induced to abandon coffee for ten days to a month, and take on Postum Cereal Food Coffee, which instead of narcotizing and destroying the nervous system, furnishes the food elements demanded by nature to rebuild the gray matter in the nerve centres throughout the body.

Postum is widely endorsed by atlethic trainers, famous bicycle riders and boxers, as well as thousands of well-known men and women who earn their living by mental occupations.

* * * *

Postum is the only Cereal Food Coffee yet discovered, with a coffee taste, that is pure and free from low grade coffee or other drugs.

A SUCCESSFUL EVANGELIST.

Rev. Henry Stafford Smith's Work in New Jersey Among Children and Adults in Union Meetings.

FROM Rev. W. G. Myles, of Garfield N. J., comes a report of a remarkable revival in that town and the neighborhood under the labors of Mr Henry Stafford Smith. At Garfield, at Lodi, at Athenia, and at Rocky Hill, Mr. Smith has reaped a glorious harvest of souls. Many who have been under a Gospel ministry for years without realizing their own personal interest in the salvation offered by Christ have, under his preaching, been brought to decision and have consecrated themselves unreservedly to Christ.

REV. HENRY STAFFORD SMITH.

Mr. Smith's work while dealing with ordinary evangelistic methods with the general congregation and scrupulously pursuing undenominational lines, is singularly successful in bringing to a focus the preaching of the pastor of the church with which he labors, and utilizing the previous efforts of the pastor in his appeals for instant decision on the part of people who have listened unmoved for years to the Gospel message. His former experience has fitted him for precisely this kind of service. He has for many years, labored in the towns and villages of England, under the auspices of the London Evangelical Society, which is an agency designed to supplement the regular ministry and aid it without supplanting it. Mr. Myles, who introduces Mr. Smith to us, has known him for a long time and bears witness to the value of his services, in reviving religion in somnolent churches, and especially for bringing children and young people into the church, thus infusing new blood and added vigor to its life.

A unique method adopted by Mr. Smith is the children's service, which usually is held for one hour every day during the first week of his stay with a church. At these services he presents to the children in a graphic, interesting way some Bible incident, clothing it with all the romantic interest and Oriental color that belong to it and pressing its lesson home with point and force. To this he adds a concise compendium of Bible books, so as to give the child a clear idea of what the Bible is in history, ethical teaching and revelation. The children listen with intense delight and are unconsciously drawn to a study of the sacred book for themselves and a dedication of themselves and their young lives to its author. Churches desiring to secure Mr. Smith's services during his stay in this country may address him care of Rev. W. Myles, Garfield, N. J.

The Moody Revival Meetings.

Great interest has been awakened by the approaching series of revival services to be conducted by Mr. Moody, in the Grand Central Palace, between Forty-third and Forty-fourth streets, New York, beginning March 13, and ending March 20. A partial programme of these meetings, which will be the grandest series of revival services ever seen on this continent, has already appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

This programme provides for meetings from 9 to 12 A.M.; from 2 to 4 P.M., and from 8 to 10 P.M. daily.

Mr. Moody will have as leader of the singing, Prof. B. Towner, Superintendent of the Musical Department at the Bible Institute, Chicago; Rev. F. H. Jacobs, assistant pastor of Dr. Dixon's Church in Brooklyn, and Mr. J. H. Burke, who at present is leading the singing for Dr. Dixon. Mr. Moody also expects to have the quartette of Mt. Hermon students, whose musical numbers were always so enthusiastically received at the Meyer meetings in Carnegie Hall last winter.

Mr. Moody personally requests God's people all over the country to pray for these meetings.

How Young People Can Earn Money

A bright schoolgirl in Middletown, Conn., writes: "You say that you think I am the youngest person on your entire list of agents. This makes me prouder than ever of my success. I do not know of any other little girl who has earned thirty-five dollars in so short a time and in such a pleasant way as I have, and I am quite sure that none of your older agents are more pleased with their success."

What this schoolgirl did others can do. The Ladies' Home Journal will willingly co-operate with others who want to accomplish the same result. A very liberal commission will be paid upon each subscription and renewal secured, besides offering each an opportunity to share in $11,500, to be awarded on April 15.

PERSONAL WORK.

very Christian a Soldier of the Cross Pledged to Extend its Sway. Acts 8:26-40.

Conversion is enlistment, though it is seldom that the young convert can be brought to regard it in that light. Religion ought never to be comprised in personal comfort and enjoyment f the blessings it brings. It is never truly ur own in its fulness until it has been imarted to some other soul. It will never e known until the day when the secrets f all hearts are revealed, how many souls ave been brought into the kingdom by nordained laymen who never preached a ermon in their lives. Such men have mission which ministers can never perorm. Howsoever earnest and powerful preacher may be, there will always be ome who will regard his effort, as they gard a lawyer's plea in court, as a prossional duty which is paid for and which ay or may not be sincere. To such men n appeal comes with far greater force hen it is made by some business acuaintance who simply and sincerely vows that his life is blessed by his faith, nd that religion has increased his happiess. Such avowals are a duty. They supement most effectively the minister's bors, and they reach people who are beond his sphere of influence. The opporunities for making them are manifold. When Philip joined himself to the Eunuch n his chariot he could scarcely have oped for a convert. But the man, puzed by his reading, was in a receptive ondition, and having heard the word mself proposed baptism. Much more romising opportunities are continually pening. In the family, in the workshop, n the office, are men and women who do ot know what religion could do for them. hey would realize it if their Christian ssociate would give his personal testiioney. It is little that the best of us an do in return for the blessings we enby in Christ's service; but that little hould be done lest we be like the branch hat, bearing no fruit, is cut off.

HOURS OF DESTINY.

he Turning Points of Life When Decision Is Made. Acts 24: 24, 25; 26: 19, 29.

Every one who has reached manhood or womanhood can remember hours when there was a parting of the ways and a decision was made, which has had its influence on subsequent ears. They come sometimes under spelially earnest preaching, at other times in ircumstances of thrilling personal expeience, as when some imminent peril has een escaped, or some dire calamity has een averted, or some great and unexpected blessing has been received. The han of indecision suffers the opportunity o pass, hesitates, postpones, attends to ome other duty, and glides on, as probbly he will glide to the end of his life ithout doing the thing that he always neans to do some time but never does. Men of this kind seldom deliberately reect Christ. They simply bid him wait nd let his offer stand over as one that an be accepted at any time, until, at last, hey drop out of life, unconverted and unardoned. One such case is described by n eminent evangelist, who knew the man well. They were fellow-students at school and college. The evangelist lost sight of his friend at graduation. The young man was entering the service of a merchant in a great city. He went to church the first Sunday of his residence and heard a sermon on the text, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God." He was deeply moved under the sermon, but reflecting that he was entering on a new life, requiring all his attention, he decided to postpone Christian consecration until he had established his position in his new occupation. Some years later, when he was at the head of a department and one of the most valued and trusted employees of the house, he heard a sermon on the same text, but again delayed until he was in business for himself. After some years he was admitted to partnership in the concern, and his promised consecration came to mind; but once more he postponed it, saying: "When I have accumulated a competence I will attend to religion." He was a rich man when the evangelist met him again. He said: "It is too late now. I would give everything I have in the world if I could feel now as I felt in my youth, but do what I will, I cannot bring my mind to even consider the subject. I am lost, irretrievably."

INDIA'S ORPHANS.

How the Little Waifs in the Charge of the Missionaries may be Supported.

SOME weeks ago, having read the numerous appeals for help in the support of the children who have been received by missionaries of India during the famine, we wrote Bishop Thoburn, asking him to make inquiries as to the actual cost of support. His reply just received is as follows:

My dear Dr. Klopsch:

As requested by you in your favor of Nov. 28, I have consulted three experienced missionaries, each of whom is in charge of a large orphanage. They have furnished estimates covering the items of food, clothing, education, medicine, shelter and sundries. Under the term "education" are included books, school supplies and teachers. Shelter includes rent, etc. I put all the items together and made out an average, with the following result: Food, $8.50 per annum; Clothing, $2; Education, $2.50; Shelter, $1; Sundries, $1; Total, $15. One of the missionaries consulted, put the estimate about $5 higher. He lives at a station where prices are higher than elsewhere. I think the figures I give are a fair average and it is not probable they will vary much during the next six or eight years, unless we have another famine. I sincerely hope you will be able to put this great need before your readers in such a way as to secure a general response. Yours sincerely,

J. M. THOBURN.

Many of the missionaries are as we learn from other sources introducing an industrial element into their orphanages, being anxious by some means to retain under their care the orphans whom they rescued. Mrs. Bacon, of Lalhpur, is one of the missionaries who is making an attempt of this kind. Writing recently to the Bombay Guardian to acknowledge a donation for the support of her orphans, she said: "We had been hoping and praying for a little help for our famine orphans and are very thankful for what you sent. The boys and girls are as busy as bees this winter, at study part of the day and work three hours. The boys turn out very nice durries and kapra, as well as native shoes, also they have learned to kalai all our degchis and make tin cups and tin boxes out of oil tins, which we find very useful, they also are learning to sew very nicely. They do not all know these trades, but certain boys make the durries—others weave the kapra—others the shoe and tin making and sewing, not forgetting cooking, which all are able to do very well. But what they do best of all, is to eat—such a hungry set as they are, this cold weather; the big plates of rice and curry, or chappaties and dal, disappear in no time, it's a pleasure to see them. You would not recognize in them, the lean, hungry, diseased boys, who came in a few months ago. We are still receiving these poor starved children, but not in numbers only as we find them in the villages."

Pandita Ramabai, who is now on her way to this country, is doing admirable work of the same productive character at her farm at Khedgaon. She raises vegetables and has a small orange grove, which contributes to the support of her institutions. She has also had two wells sunk which gave employment to starving people and will keep her supplied with water.

Free.—A Wonderful Shrub.—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence showed at Alkavis, the new botanical discovery of the Kaya Kaya Shrub, as indeed a true remedy for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood or by diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. C. Dering, of North Carolina, N. Y., as told in the New York Herald of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis after all physicians had failed him in his case. He was prostrated for months and was pronounced incurable by the best physicians. Ordinary cases of Kidney and Bladder troubles are cured in from one to seven days. Thousands of testimonials received in the U. S. Write to-day for free trial to the Church Kidney Cure Co., 118 Fourth Avenue, New York, and the only importers of Alkavis, and they will send you a free trial bottle by return mail. Don't delay, write to-day. A free trial of Alkavis is sent to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney, Bladder or Urinary Disease. Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints or other maladies arising from derangement of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all interested to send their names and address to the company and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

DR. WURTH'S OPINION

OF THE NEW DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

A Remarkably Successful Remedy for Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Stomach Troubles.

Dr. Wurth, in commenting on recent discoveries in medicine said: There is none which is certain to be so valuable and far reaching in benefit as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the new stomach remedy; I say far reaching, because people little realize how important a sound stomach and vigorous digestion is to every man, woman and child.

Indigestion is the starting point of consumption, heart disease, Bright's Disease, diabetes, nervous prostration, liver troubles; why is this so? Simply because every nerve, muscle and tissue in our bodies is created and nourished from the food we eat. If that food is, by reason of a weak stomach, compelled to lie for hours, a sour, fermenting mass of half-digested food, it poisons the blood and nervous system, creates gas which distends the stomach and bowels, causing pressure on the heart, lungs and other organs and seriously impeding their action.

He says further, the point to direct attention is not the nerves, nor heart, nor lungs, nor kidneys, but the stomach, the first cause of all the mischief.

The remedy to use for indigestion and weak stomachs is not some cathartic, but a remedy which will digest the food, increase the flow of gastric juice, absorb the gases, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will accomplish exactly this result in any case of stomach trouble, because these tablets are composed of the digestive acids, aseptic pepsin, Golden Seal and Bismuth, pleasant to taste, and not being a patent medicine, can be used by anyone with perfect safety. I believe Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure any form of indigestion and stomach trouble except cancer of stomach.

Full size packages of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists at 50 cents. A book on stomach diseases together with thousands of testimonials will be sent by adressing Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

PROFITABLE SABBATH.

C mon Mistakes About Sabbath-Keeping hich Thwart the Object of Giving the ay. Ex. 20 : 8-11; Isa. 58 : 5-14.

How little the purpose of the Sabbath is understood even at this day, may be perceived by the kind of questions that are asked about it. Is it right to do this or that on the Sabbath? Do w break the Sabbath in spending it in th or that way? It is easy to see, from th indignation expressed in the words as- sc ated with the topic, that the prophet had h rd such questions in his time and had se the absurdities which have spoiled th day in other periods. Originally in stituted as a day of rest, it was necessary t legislate about it, to secure it as a rest fo people who, being poor, might be r bed of it by the rich, or being in service, m ht be robbed of it by their employers. H these very enactments intended to pro- te the liberty of the individual and insure h privilege of resting, have been turned in fetters to enslave the whole com- nity. Even the change of the day from th seventh to the first day of the week has n delivered the observance from its gloom a austerity. The persistence with which m have blundered about the day is ex- traordinary. If a loving father sending h two sons to a boarding-school stipulated th on a certain day at regular intervals th boys should be free from lessons and ta ks and if that day was one of special in rest in the family history—the birth- d of the father or mother, their wedding d , or the anniversary of some joyous e nt in the lifetime of some honored an- c or—we can easily see how vexed the f her would be with both sons, if he heard th one of them spent the day in riotous p sure injurious to his soul and body a the other spent it in gloom and self- a sement. We can imagine the father w ting them such a letter as Isaiah ad- d sses to the people of his time, in this fi y-eighth chapter. God assumes, as he h the right to assume, especially under th Christian dispensation, that his chil- dr n shall use their intelligence about the d he has given them. Their great dan- g is that the physical nature will usurp c trol over their spiritual nature, that the a orbing cares of business and material th gs shall leave them no time for the h her delights, the enjoyment of which d inguishes man from the beasts. He p vides this day of release from labor th t their lives may not become sordid a l that they may have leisure for higher a l better thoughts and occupations than u ally monopolize them. If men do not v ue the privilege, if they persist in secular o cupations or use the day in the gratifi- c ion of their animal natures, they miss th purpose for which the day was given, a d it becomes unprofitable to them. The p ofitable Sabbath is the day in which o souls are raised heavenward, and on w ich we are enabled to render some ser- v e to others, helping them, too, to escape th sordid influences of life.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discov- y of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful ola Plant, a new botanic product found on the ongo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by in the worst cases are really marvelous. Suf- ers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been once restored to health by the Kola Plant. ong others, many ministers of the gospel testify its wonderful powers. Rev. J. L. Combs, of rtinsburg, West Va., was perhaps the worst case, d was cured by the Kola Plant after fifty years' ffering. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, Washington, D. Editor of the Farmer's Magazine, gives similar timony, as do many others. To prove to you be- nd doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola porting Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, will nd a large case of the Kola Compound free by il to every reader of The Christian Herald who ffers from any form of Asthma. They only ask return when cured yourself you will tell your ghbors about it. You should surely try it, as it sts you nothing.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

VIVISECTION BARBARITIES.

A number of our readers have written us at different times, denouncing the cruelties perpetrated by vivisectionists in the name of science. From a letter received last week, we give the following extract:

Eminent medical authorities, both in this country and in Europe, are denouncing vivisection in the strongest terms and demanding its total abolition. Prof. Lawson Tait, F.R.C.S.E., foremost abdominal surgeon of England and once a vivisector, says: "In the art of surgery, the practice of vivisection has done nothing but wrong," and "in the interest of true science should be stopped." Dr. Chas. Bell Taylor, F. R. C. S., says, "no good ever came out of vivisection since the world begun, and in my humble opinion, no good ever can." James H. Payne, M.D., of Boston, in a letter to the "Anti-Vivisection": "I am wholly opposed to vivisection, it is useless, wicked, cruel, barbarous, and infamous. It is worse than useless. It fills the mind with false and brutal ideas. It demoralizes the sensibilities and unfits one for the demonstration of real scientific truth. I pray you may prosper in your good endeavors to obliterate the hideous practice from the whole earth." Dr. Edward Berdoe, M. R. C. S., in a speech at Buda-Pesth, Hungary, 1896, said: "It is only necessary to turn over the pages of the different journals of physiology to see that the greater part of the experiments on animals have no, or only the remotest, connection with the arts of medicine or surgery."

But not only is vivisection practiced in medical colleges, laboratories, and all the higher institutions of learning (without any restrictions), but it is fast finding its way into even the public and high schools of our land.

Thinkers are beginning to comprehend the dangers of such instruction. Over one hundred Anti-Vivisection Societies in America and Europe have been organized to spread information and to circulate petitions for the entire abolishment of such atrocious practices. Literature, petitions, etc., can be obtained by writing, Mrs. Fairchild Allen, Aurora, Ill., or New England Anti-Vivisection Soc'y, 15 Court Sq., Boston, Mass. ELLEN COMSTOCK,

Dr. Hunter's Book on the Lungs

Progress of Medical Science.

A little book published by Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, gives all the latest discoveries and improvements in the theory and treatment of Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and Consumption, fully explaining their differences and their cure by medicated air inhalations.

Dr. Hunter was the father and founder of the local treatment of the lungs by antiseptic medicated air inhalations, the inventor of the first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of lung diseases, and the discoverer of the only germicide that cures Consumption by destroying the bacilli of tuberculosis in the lungs of the patient. His treatment consists of healing and cleansing balms applied to the lungs three times a day by his inhaling instruments, the application of antiseptic oils to the chest, which surround the body with a zone of medicated air, and filling the chamber in which the patient sleeps with antiseptic vapors, thus keeping up a curative action on the lungs day and night.

No other treatment in the world is so direct, common-sense, and successful.

Mrs. Milford Jones says: It gives me pleasure to give all the information I can concerning Dr. Hunter and his treatment.

I can truly say that with God's blessing I am a living witness of its power to cure.

My disease was of nearly three years' standing; I had been treated by seven different doctors, all pronouncing my case very serious [illegible] I heard of Dr. Hunter and called on him as my last hope. He stated my case very clearly, saying there was a cavity in my right lung which to me looked very dark. He said he could cure me if I had patience and would be faithful in the treatment, but that it would take a long time.

I am now able to do my housework and work in the store. My friends can scarcely believe it possible for me to look and be so well, for they had expected to carry me long ago.

I firmly believe if you are in a critical condition at all, Dr. Hunter can cure you. I feel much interested in all sufferers of such a terrible disease. May God bless Dr. Hunter's treatment to your cure.

Your unknown but sympathetic friend,
Mrs. MILFORD JONES,
Dover, Morris Co., N. J.

Dr. Hunter's Book contains many similar letters from prominent people who have been successfully treated. It will be sent free to Christian Herald readers by addressing him at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

A Common Cold

and common carelessness can make a combination strong enough to defy all the healing skill of the physician. The common-sense treatment of a common cold is a prompt dose of Dr. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is the most efficient and reliable cure for colds and coughs, and is constantly prescribed by physicians.

S. HAYNES, M. D., Saranac, N. Y., says: "I have used Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my practice since 1853, and have always found it reliable for the cure of colds, coughs and all lung diseases."

ALL THIS FOR $1.00
ACTUAL VALUE $3.95

Think of It! You receive for one year, three of the most interesting, instructive, up-to-date papers published, and Four Poultry Keeper Illustrators, each containing the most accurate illustrations and information of the utmost value about profitable poultry raising. With this grand combination of literature is included a variety of fresh, reliable seeds, sufficient to produce a big and profitable garden, all for one dollar. This offer is made possible by the agreement of the publishers of "The Agricultural Epitomist," Indianapolis, Ind.; "The Poultry Keeper," Parksburg, Pa., and "The Young People's Weekly," Chicago or Elgin, Ill., to share the expense of the undertaking in order to secure new readers in every part of the country.

THE AGRICULTURAL EPITOMIST

(E-pit'-o-mist) is just what its name implies. A brief and compact treatise on Agriculture, Live Stock and Dairy, Horticulture, Poultry and Floriculture. Besides these several departments it has its Household, Children's and Miscellaneous Departments and Letter Box. Its contributors are the best practical up-to-date writers the country affords. Published monthly and is in the hands of its readers by the first of every month; contains from 32 to 40 pages boiled down from a hundred.

THE POULTRY KEEPER

is the leading authority on all matters pertaining to poultry raising. Edited by P. H. JACOBS, the best informed man on Poultry subjects; is a walking poultry encyclopædia. It leads and others follow. Its cover is printed in two colors, making it an ornament to any home.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY

is recognized as the best, brightest and most inspiring periodical published in the interest of American Youth, will interest the old as well as young. It has twelve pages, 17x11½ inches, every week, and is beautifully illustrated in colors. The best stories produced by the best authors. Not a dull line in it. Not an objectionable feature about it. In addition to these three standard publications you get

FOUR POULTRY KEEPER ILLUSTRATORS

No. 1 is on Poultry Houses, Incubators, Brooders, Coops, etc.; No. 2, Artificial Incubation, Raising Chicks, Testing Eggs, etc.; No. 3, Poultry Diseases, Lice, Gapes, Moulting, Egg Eating, etc.; No. 4, Judging Fowls, Description of Breeds, Mating, etc. No book you can buy will give you so much valuable information, new ideas, new methods. Not one important feature omitted. Not one useless word admitted. Many poultry keepers have turned failure into success by reading these books. Besides these publications you receive as described and illustrated in this offer, all of which are grown and put up for us by one of the most reliable and best known seedsmen and seed growers in the United States, and every collection sent out has his and our guarantee to be fresh tested seeds, and each packet is regular full size. Following is a brief description of the different varieties: One packet each of BUIST'S PRIZE MEDAL YELLOW GLOBE DANVERS ONION, producing largest and finest formed bulbs; hardy and keep better; perfect themselves in the Northern, Western and Eastern States first year from seed. BUIST'S PRIZE BELLE TOMATO, a hybrid of the famous BEAUTY, many specimens the past season weighing 1½ pounds each. EARLY WHITE BOX RADISH—Best variety for forcing, cold frame culture, or early sowing in open ground; pleasant flavor and exceedingly early. MARKET GARDENER'S LARGE LATE FLAT DUTCH CABBAGE—No strain is superior or few equal this. BUIST'S MAMMOTH RED-TOP WHITE GLOBE TURNIP—The most valuable and salable variety grown, producing twice as much to the acre; sown either broadcast or in drills; always a sure cropper. EARLY OTHELLO DARK BLOOD TURNIP—This seed was grown from darkest colored roots selected the past few years and is now offered for the first time. TROCADERO CABBAGE—Celebrated French variety of distinct type can not be mistaken for any other sort; leaves beautifully tinted with russet; heads form quickly and are very solid. BUIST'S EARLY MORNING STAR PEA—Earliest pea in the world; ready for picking in 42 days; hardier, more productive and withstand greater change of weather than any other variety; entirely free from runners. THE DIXIE WATERMELON—A hybrid of the famous Kolb's Gem, but far superior in size, quality and productiveness; flesh scarlet, melting and exceedingly sweet. FINE MIXED FRENCH BEAUTIES (Sweet Peas)—Improved by hybridizing; delicious perfume. The actual value of this combination is $3.95. You get it now for $1.00. Guaranteed just as represented in every respect by the publishers of these three great publications. You may send the dollar to "The Agricultural Epitomist. Upon receipt of your order your name will be immediately forwarded to the home office of the different publications and entered on their regular subscription list for one year's subscription, and an order sent to the seedsman, who will immediately forward the seeds by mail postpaid, and the Poultry Keeper, which publishes the Four Poultry Keeper Illustrators, will forward the four books as described by mail postpaid, so that every one accepting this GRAND COMBINATION OFFER will receive everything promptly and just as described. Don't fail to send at once, so as to get the first installment of current numbers of all three papers.

TEN PACKETS OF SEEDS

NOAH'S WINDOW.

Some Entertaining Versified Answers to Our Latest Scripture Puzzle.

MANY of our readers in answering the latest MAIL-BAG Scripture puzzle have written their solutions in rhyme. A few of which we reproduce below. Some of the verses are clever and very quaintly expressed and all are interesting:

The ark borne safely o'er the flood
For saving life, decreed by God.
Presents a wondrous view of plan
Decreed by God for saving man.
W. T. SLEEPER, Worcester, Mass.

A cold gray sky was overhead;
Beneath, a boundless ocean spread;
The ark upon it safely rode,
Its pilot was Almighty God.
Its "casement held a wondrous view—
And all the living world looked through."
HELEN L. PIERCE, Rocheport, Mo.

A casement held a wondrous view—
And all the living world looked through;"
Twas Noah, who, that wondrous sight
Through casement saw, by day and night.
J. P. H., Bucksport, Me.

When as the waters did assuage.
And from the waves appeared the sod;
Then from the ark, the living World,
Did view the glorious Bow of God.
MAY CLARKE, Waterville, Kan.

On Ararat's brow the ark did rest;
Noah and all therein were blest,
Through open door he passed again,
Followed by the living train.
REV. B. S. ROLLINS, Glenville, N. Y.

Four fourscore days the pouring flood
Had covered all the life of earth;
Except the four of Noah's blood,
And four who shared their household hearth.

Through opening of a cubit breadth
They saw the deluge sent for sin,
Raised him who saved their lives from death,
Secure from fear by God shut in.
L. E. FRENCH, Newport, R. I.

'Twas Noah's ark, the casement—
Now, just look in and see
With elephants and insects
Dwells Noah's family.
And, after all the world was drowned
Those in the ark looked out.
I hope I've solved your problem
Without a single doubt.
M. A. POWELL, New Haven, Conn.

The living world, eight mortal souls.
With beasts and birds of every kind,
Within an ark of shittim wood
Made from the plans of the Divine.

An open casement, maybe small,
But, lo, the wonders it reveals!
Tens, thousands, dead on mount and plain
Are seen, as back the water steals.

The mighty rains have ceased their flood;
The barren earth, the sky of blue.
God's vengeance wreaked, as prophesied
On erring man, is shown to view.

Oh Noah, with thy children safe,
Look forth, behold the wondrous view!
For soon thou, with the lower beasts
Inherit shall, the world anew.
J. J. B., Philadelphia.

When waiting for the sign of God,
As indicated by his word,
Given to raven or to dove,
Good Noah by dumb signs to move.
"A casement held a wondrous view,
And all the living World looked through"
Upon a new world, fresh and green
As ever Eden-world had seen;
At least, so thought those imprisoned long,
Of man or beast, or feathered song:
They, through the window, looked to see
A world redeemed: And thus may we,
Looking thro' Christ, the Son of God,
See his redemption by his blood.
CHARLES A. FORD, Homer, N. Y.

Another correspondent displays a strain of humor in his answer. We give his concluding verses:

The living world was then quite small—
Human souls only eight in all.
The arrivals went in two by two—
The elephant and the kangaroo.

Dust have been a wondrous sight,
When through the casement they all looked out,
At beheld the world in such a plight.

If they did not fear, for well they knew,
That he who marked the sparrow's fall
Would land them safely after all.
W. E. ANGEL, Bridgewater, N. C.

A Woman's Strong Constitution Wrecked. Effects of a Treacherous Disease. A Wonderful Case.

From the Bulletin, Monroe, La.

Mrs. Stephen Robbins is the wife of a prominent farmer living on a large and well-kept plantation just at the edge of Monroe, La. They have resided in this community but two years, having moved here from Illinois. The change was made for the benefit of Mrs. Robbins' health, her physicians having advised her that it was the only hope of her ever regaining her lost health.

"Three years ago this last winter," said Mrs. Robbins, "I was very sick with that most treacherous disease, the grippe. I had a very severe time with it, but was able to get out after being confined to my home several weeks. I think I went out too soon, for I immediately contracted a cold and had a relapse, which is a common occurrence with that disease. For several more weeks I was confined to the house; and after this I did not fully recover until recently. I was able to get out again, but I was quite a different woman.

"My former strong constitution was wrecked, and I was a dwindling mass of skin and bones. My blood was thin and I had grown pale and sallow. My lungs were so affected that I thought I was going into consumption. During my illness I had lost thirty pounds in weight. I tried to regain my strength and former good health by trying different medicines and physicians, but nothing seemed to help me. My appetite was gone, and when I ate the food it would not stay in my stomach.

"The only thing my physician said for me to do was to take a change of climate, and on his advice I came here. At first I seemed benefited, but to my sorrow it proved to be only temporary, and in a few months I was in my former condition. The color had left my cheeks. I had no energy, and life was a misery. I had become a burden to myself and family. Finally I happened to read in a newspaper of how Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People had effected a miraculous cure with the same disease which a neighbor of mine had in Illinois.

"On the strength of this testimonial I decided at once to give the medicine a trial. I accordingly sent for a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and gave the pills a thorough trial. I did not notice any change till I had tried the second box. I was discouraged a little with the result of the first box, but knowing that I should not expect a sudden cure of such a chronic case as mine, I tried the second box with the result that I immediately began getting better. I used five boxes of theee pills and was completely cured, as you see me to-day, weighing more than ever before."

As an evidence of the truthfulness of her story Mrs. Robbins volunteered to make the following sworn statement:

"I hereby affirm that the above statement is every word exact and true."

"MRS. STEPHEN ROBBINS.

"Monroe, La., March 2, 1897."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public in and for the Parish of Winn, State of Louisiana, this the 2d day of March, 1897. AMOS R. JESSUPS, Notary Public."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

SWEET PEAS FOR THE MILLION

AN UNEQUALED OFFER.

Never before has it been possible to offer such a Grand Collection of Seven Superb New Sweet Peas for Twenty-five Cents. All are regular-sized packets, containing from forty to seventy seeds each, except Queen Victoria and the other Eckford Novelty, of which there are twenty seeds in each packet. ☞ Last year, without counting postage and trouble in sending to England, it would have cost more than two dollars to have gathered together the seed contained in these seven packets which are sold now for 25 cts.

HEADQUARTERS FOR SWEET PEAS.

We have the largest and finest collection in the world,—see BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1898.

25 Cts. buys these Seven Superb Sweet Peas:

BURPEE'S BRILLIANT. The color is of a rich, bright crimson-scarlet throughout. Of largest size and finest form.

COQUETTE. Beautiful hooded flowers of clear primrose-yellow; the large expanded standard is shaded pale lavender.

BURPEE'S NEW COUNTESS. The flowers are of largest size and are a pure light lavender throughout.

PRIMA DONNA. A most lovely shade of soft pink, of large size and fine form,—really a great gem.

QUEEN VICTORIA. Color, soft yellow subtly overlaid with faint purple, imparting a beautiful luster.

ANOTHER NEW "ECKFORD." One of the six grand Novelties, described on page 86 of BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1898, of which American-grown seed is offered for the first time.

☞ NOTE.—Our seed of Eckford's two NEW Novelties is grown from original sealed packets bought direct from Henry Eckford last season at the retail price of 2s. 6d. per packet of twenty seeds.

NEW AMERICAN SEEDLINGS. This new strain contains some beautiful new colors, and has been much admired in Europe and America.

25 Cts. buys all the above,—Seven Superb New Sweet Peas, each in a separate retail packet, true to name as described, and mailed, postpaid, to any address in the United States or Mexico.

☞ In the envelope containing each collection we enclose a new printed leaflet, giving both HENRY ECKFORD'S and the REV. W. T. HUTCHINS' instructions on HOW TO GROW THE FINEST SWEET PEAS.

For 50 Cts. we will mail two collections as above, and give FREE one half-size packet (price 15 cts.) of the wonderful New Dwarf Sweet Pea,—Burpee's PINK Cupid.

To make sure of having sufficient seed of at least seven superb Sweet Peas for our popular Twenty-five-cent Collection, advertised above, we planted large areas of fifteen of the finest new varieties. As the crops of all these were good, we are enabled this year to offer also a grand Collection of Eight New Sweet Peas for 30 Cts.

This Collection, neatly done up in a large envelope, with directions for culture, contains one full-size packet each of—

AURORA. Extra-large flowers, borne three on a stem; both standard and wings are flaked and striped on a white ground, with bright orange-salmon. See illustration, page 144, BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL.

CAPTIVATION. This is really a new color in Sweet Peas; a glowing ruby-purple or bright claret. Large, shell-shaped standard; a charming novelty.

LOVELY. This is, indeed, lovely! It is a great acquisition. Grand flowers of very large size. Color, a most pleasing shade of soft shell-pink. See illustration, page 116, BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL.

MAID OF HONOR. This can be described as an Improved Butterfly. Beautiful flowers shaded light blue, on a white ground, and edged violet. Flowers of fine hooded form, borne three on a stem.

MARS. Eckford's New Scarlet. "Bright fiery crimson, deepening with age. A large, finely expanded, bold flower, of the most beautiful form. A great advance on every Crimson yet introduced."

ROYAL ROSE. The standard is deep rosy pink; the wings are a most charming, light rosy-pink,—almost a self-colored flower of handsome shape and immense size. A great advance on Apple Blossom, being of warmer shading and larger size.

STELLA MORSE. Decidedly the best of all the Sweet Peas, approaching primrose-yellow in color. One of the very finest of the nine magnificent New Sweet Peas now first introduced by us. See illustration.

BURPEE'S BEST MIXED. Truly an unequaled mixture containing all the best novelties up to date.

With each Collection we enclose a copy of our new circular on HOW TO GROW THE FINEST SWEET PEAS.

☞ All of these are of the largest size, and improved "up-to-date" kinds, while STELLA MORSE can be had only direct from us, and alone costs 15 cts. per packet. Never before have we been able to include, in a cheap collection, a novelty the first year of its introduction.

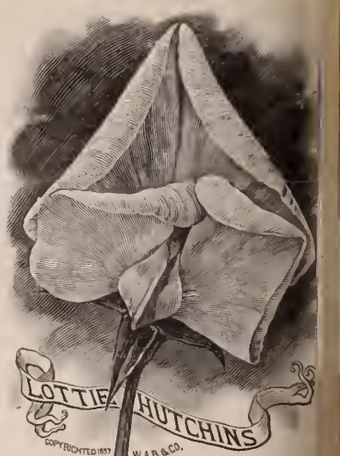
For 30 Cts., three dimes, or fifteen two-cent stamps, we will send the above Collection of EIGHT ELEGANT NEW SWEET PEAS, postpaid to any address.

For 50 Cts. we will mail the above and ALSO our other Collection of SEVEN SUPERB SWEET PEAS described above.

SEEDS FOR THE MILLION. See our special advertisement on last page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of February 3d.

Exclusive Novelties in SWEET PEAS for 1898

With the exception of BURPEE'S PINK CUPID, which is sold in our original sealed packets by Seedsmen all over the world, the following varieties, now first introduced, can be had only direct from us. The price of each is 15 cts. per packet of 30 seeds; 2 pkts. for 25 cts., or any 10 pkts. for $1.00, postpaid.



LOTTIE HUTCHINS. To those familiar with the popular Ramona, introduced by us several years ago, we can best describe LOTTIE HUTCHINS by saying that it is daintily flaked with pink in the same manner, but on a cream ground instead of white,—making a richer and even more lovely effect. The flowers are large in size and borne on heavy, substantial stems.

STELLA MORSE. The blossom opens with quite a suggestion of yellow,—a most fascinating shade of deep cream. About the third day it is a delicate primrose with a faint rose-pink on the edge, which casts a pleasing blush tint to a mass of the blooms, without destroying the creamy-yellow effect. It has the most perfect form, being of the largest grandiflora hooded type, and grows on long stems with three and four flowers to the stem.

SENSATION. This new Sweet Pea bears uniformly four flowers on the end of each stem. The flowers are of large size, finest form, and delightful fragrance. The expanded, shell-like standard is of a beautiful cream color, while the wings are pure white. Of unusually dainty appearance, the flowers are yet borne in wonderful profusion. The vines are completely covered with bloom.

MODESTY. Although of such a delicate blush, it is really a self color and sufficiently pink not to conflict in any way with Blanche Burpee. It has the great advantage of being black-seeded and, consequently, is of more vigorous growth than any white-seeded variety. Flowers of large size and perfect form are borne profusely three on a stem, while the unusual length of stem is quite a feature.

DOLLY VARDEN. On the fresh flower the wings are almost white, with a purple-magenta edging. The standard is bright purple-magenta, toward the midrib shading lighter, running to almost white on the sides and penciled with maroon at the base. It gives the general effect of a bluish-purple standard with white wings.

ORIENTAL. Those of our customers who tried the New American Seedlings last year, will be eager to have this new Sweet Pea, when we state that it is the one of these cross-bred seedlings that is of that "rich orange cast." It comes absolutely true from seed and is far superior to the popular Lady Penzance,—so much brighter and richer in color.

15 Cts. per pkt. of thirty seeds is the price of all the above; any two packets for 25 cts., or any ten packets for $1.00.

New Dwarf Sweet Pea,— Burpee's PINK Cupid

Burpee's PINK Cupid is a hardy, black-seeded variety that grows vigorously everywhere. It is not a sport from the original White Cupid, but an actual departure from its parent, the tall Blanche Ferry. In habit and manner of growth it is strictly a Cupid, spreading from the root, from a foot to eighteen inches around, growing from six to eight inches high, and shooting up stems about six inches long, which bear, in full bloom at once, from three to four handsome large flowers, all borne close to the end of the stem.

In regular-size packets (each containing twenty-four seeds):

Per pkt. 25 cts.; 5 pkts. for $1.00; per dozen pkts $2.00, postpaid.

In half-size packets (each containing twelve seeds):

Per pkt. 15 cts.; 10 pkts. for $1.00, postpaid.

For One Dollar we will mail full-size packets of ALL the SWEET PEAS advertised on this entire page, together with a trial packet of a gorgeous NEW AMERICAN SWEET PEA, not yet introduced, and one ounce of the unequaled BURPEE'S BEST MIXED,—all neatly packed in a box.

☞ In all, Twenty-two Varieties of the Best Up-to-Date NEW SWEET PEAS, neatly packed in a strong box and mailed for ONE DOLLAR, postpaid, to any address.

Truly this is the grandest assortment ever offered. Many are of our own introduction, while eight cannot be had elsewhere. This Box of the Best New SWEET PEAS would make a handsome present to a friend. We will carefully enclose your card in the box, if requested.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

MANY additional answers have been received from readers who were interested in our Scripture puzzle of "Noah's Ark," sent by M. V. L., Elizabeth, N. J., and which appeared in THE MAIL-BAG on February 2. The names of those who answered correctly will be found on page 191 of this issue.

Reader, Abbeville, S. C. 1. A porter on a train has to run on Sunday, but it does not hinder him from attending services at his church. When he took the work he didn't have to run on Sunday at first. He has no other work in view. Will he be held accountable for this Sunday train work? 2. A young man about nineteen feels called to work among heathen in Africa. He is without means to educate himself for such work, and desires to communicate with some one who can help him or give him information on the subject.

1. If his work be one of necessity, and the neglect of which involves loss of employment altogether, you would not be justified in advising him to quit it. He should, however, try to secure other employment even at less pay, in order to have his Sundays whole. If this be impossible, he must make the best spiritual use of his available time on Sundays until the opportunity comes to make a change. 2. Address Rev. Dr. Torrey, Moody Institute, Chicago, Ill.

S. C., ——. Does the Lord send evil spirits, as stated in 1. Samuel, 16: 23?

You have to understand this statement and many others in the Old Testament from the standpoint of the writer. The historians who wrote the books of Samuel and Kings were men of intense spirituality and deep piety. They looked at every event in its relation to God. Our modern histories reverse this method, and relate the circumstances which, in the opinion of the writers, suffice to explain events. Just as the ancient writers described thunder as the voice of God, and we explain it as the impact of the clouds. We should regard Saul as a man subject to periodical attacks of insanity, but the historian of the Old Testament regards him as under the displeasure of God, who sends an evil spirit to torment him.

N. O. S., Chandler, Ind. How does a writer indicate in a MS. the following styles of type? 1. Nonpareil. 2. Italics. 3. Roman capitals. 4. Italic capitals. 5. Script.

1. "Nonp." on margin; passage inclosed by brackets. 2. "Ff." on margin; passage indicated by brackets. 3. "Rom." caps on margin; letters underscored. 4. "Ital." caps on margin; letters underscored. 5. "Script" on margin; passage indicated by brackets or underscored.

Reader, New York. Are dominoes used for gambling or is it a game that Christian people may allow their children to play?

It is not necessarily a gambling game, but is very widely used as an innocent pastime.

Reader, Apoka, N. Y., writes:

I was much interested in the piece in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD entitled, "The dollar came back." I should not have been surprised if it had been returned after several years and yet came back [illegible] given, some of them [illegible] Prayer and the ten [illegible] command-[illegible] and the [illegible] many people [illegible] for them.

One correspondent writes: contains a hint that may be useful to many Sunday School teachers.

M. A. [illegible], Mo. 1. When Jesus spoke by the [illegible] 2. What does Christ mean by the [illegible] John the Baptist? (Matt. 11: 11.)

1. The words were probably written when the writer was overwhelmed at the thought of how much he had been [illegible] those three wonderful years that had never been written, and never could be uttered. He may, too, have had the idea that the new dispensation with the world could not appreciate or understand it if they were written. The world certain may have been [illegible] to that time. A less great man than John was, his belonging to the old dispensation rendered him inferior in knowledge and attainment to those who were under the new; just as a schoolboy of our time knows more of science than a philosopher did two hundred years ago. The revelation of Christ made an era in divine knowledge.

J. O. At a certain church meeting, some time ago, a resolution was introduced setting forth that "this church considers it highly detrimental to the cause of truth for any of its members to engage in card-playing or in dancing at parties." The pastor made a strong speech against the resolution. One of the members said he had always played at cards, and he always would play, and if they adopted that resolution he would leave the church. Now, do you think the pastor and member did right?

If the facts of the case were precisely as represented, it is difficult to understand on what ground card-playing was defended. It is undeniable that it leads to gambling and other sins, and even in its mildest aspects, is detrimental to spiritual growth and is a distinctly dangerous pastime. The fact that cards have proved the means of ruining so many thousands should be a sufficient reason for Christians letting them alone (see Rom. 14: 13 & 21). There are plenty other amusements to choose from to which no such objection applies.

Reader, Bellevue, Texas. 1. Does the Bible, in speaking of Judas Iscariot, say, "He hath a devil from the beginning." 2. If so, where can I find it? 3. Is the offer for the Art Bible still open?

1 & 2. The text you have in mind is probably John 17: 12. 3. Yes, for $1 down and $1 per month.

N. C. Lond, Freedom, N. H. Was Paul baptized? If so, where and by whom?

We have no later intelligence than that contained in Acts 9: 18. We presume Ananias administered the rite, but what does it signify? Do you suppose it had any occult effect on him? Do not go back to the blunder of the Corinthian Church, which caused Paul to lose his patience and say (1. Cor. 1: 14), "I thank God that I baptized none of you."

Subscriber, Delhi, Ia. 1. When Christ said: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," did he mean all or only some? 2. When Paul said (1. Tim. thy 4: 10) Christ was the Saviour of all men, did he mean all or only some? 3. Do you think that there are many in the churches who still hold the doctrine of eternal punishment? 4. Does not Christ's reference to regeneration in Matt. 19: 28 imply that it will occur in the future life?

1. All men; but, unhappily, many resist and never come to him, in spite of the sweet influence he exerts. 2. He meant all, and if all would accept him, all would be saved. If a free library is established in a town, it is for the use of all; even for those citizens who prefer to spend their time in saloons or gambling-houses. The fact that they do so does not disprove the assertion that it is for all. 3. Yes, the experience we have in this world, and the statements of the Bible give little, if any, ground for hope that the man who has rejected Christ in this world would accept him in the next, even if an opportunity were afforded. 4. We think not. The regeneration referred to there seems to us to be that of the world in the millennium, when old things will have passed away and all become new. Even if it refers to the spiritual change in the sense in which it is now used, the passage would read: Ye who in the regeneration have followed me shall sit upon the twelve thrones when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory.

If Constant Reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, M. D., will send her name and address to Mr. Moody or Mr. A. P. Fitt, at East Northfield, Mass., a copy of "The Way to God" will be mailed to her free. The great trouble with her seems to be that she has not a grasp of the simplicity of the Gospel. She is evidently looking for all sorts of feelings, and is looking at the lives of others instead of looking to Christ.

George Gaunt, Mayfield, Kan. 1. Who baptized the twelve Apostles? Did Jesus baptize them or any other of his followers? 2. What is the meaning of the expression "baptized into one body" in 1 Cor. 12: 13?

1. Four of the Apostles and probably more of them, were baptized by John the Baptist. John says (4: 2) that Jesus did not baptize. There is nothing to show whether a person who had been baptized by John the Baptist was baptized again on becoming a follower of Christ. But the probabilities are against it. Christ's mission was to baptize with the Holy Spirit. 2. That the several classes mentioned — Jew and Gentile, bond and free, when they became Christians received the same baptism and became brethren in Christ. As the immigrants who come here from many lands are expected to abjure their allegiance to the rulers of the lands from which they come, before they become citizens of the United States, so the converts to Christianity were expected to cease observing the customs of their former religion and become brethren in Christ.

O. M. J., Cincinnati, O. From certain passages of Scripture I infer that a man who has been converted can never sin and cannot be lost; while from others it would appear that if he does sin, he will not be forgiven but will assuredly be lost. How is it?

It is important to avoid on the one hand a presumption which exercises no vigilance and on the other hand a fear which harasses and depresses the spirit. As a matter of experience we know that the converted man does sin, but we are assured, for our comfort, that we have an advocate with the Father and the promise of forgiveness on repentance. Also that Christ will keep those who put their trust in him. (See 1. John 2: 1; Jude 24 etc.).

H. A. C., Mentor, O. 1. Is the prophecy of the wolf and the lamb (Isa. 65: 25) to be literally fulfilled? 2. Ought the directions as to dress in 1 Peter 3: 3 to be literally obeyed?

1. The prophet referred to the time of universal peace under Messiah's rule to which we now give the name Millennium when even the ferocious animals would experience a change of nature. There is no ground for regarding the prediction as figurative. 2. The injunction appears to point rather to a disposition, than to a rule of dress. A Christian woman is not to give undue attention to such matters. Her adornment, or charm, should consist in the grace of character. That should be her chief, rather than the decking of her person in extravagant display. Carelessness, slatternness, or ostentatious plainness of garb, as well as extravagance should be avoided in following the spirit of the Apostle's words.

F. S. W., Leominster, Mass. Can a person be a consistent Christian who does not believe in the articles of the creed of the church he belongs to? I do not believe in eternal punishment; am I justified in continuing membership in a church whose creed contains that article?

If the churches does not try you for heresy and excommunicate you, and, in fact, raise no objection to you on the ground of your differing from the creed, we do not see any need for you to withdraw. If you are holding fast to your faith in Christ and are living the Christ life, trying to do all the good you can, we doubt whether your fellow-members will trouble themselves about your belief as to eternal punishment. If they do not exclude you, you are right in continuing your membership. There are thousands who belong to churches holding the Apostles' creed who do not believe that "Christ descended into hell," but they are just as good and useful Christians as those who do believe it.

J. R., Newark, N. J. How early in the history of nations do we find the principles of insurance applied in business?

Mr. Charles Hopkins, A.M., a recognized authority on the subject, in a recent address in New Haven, Conn., stated that as early as 562, A.D., the Roman Emperor, Justinian, sold life insurance policies to collect money to carry on his government and to build cities. A Mortality Register was published in England about 1712.

J. H. Stone, Kokomo, Ind. You express of doubt about person living an absolutely sinless life [illegible] to be in conflict with Matt. [illegible] Heb. 6: 1, and other Scriptures. How do you reconcile your opinion with such passages?

The controversy is a very old one, and is more a question of words than of fact. From the standpoint none of the many passages you quote seem to be in conflict with our opinion. On the other hand, there is the explicit statement (1. John 1: 8): "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us"; which appears to us to justify our statement. Our own experience confirms it. We do not know you if you have led a sinless life, but we would be glad to know whether you are acquainted with any people who in your opinion are leading lives, as we put it, free from sins of omission and commission, in thought, word, and deed. Sometimes a brother is a better judge of another person's conduct than he is himself. We have known persons who sincerely believed that they had not sinned in many years, whose belief was not shared by any other person, least of all by persons who had lived with them or had business dealings with them.

TUSKEGEE'S PROUDEST DAY.

T Annual Farmers' Conference, Over Which Booker T. Washington Presides—A Noble Effort to Elevate the Negro and Make Him Practical and Self-Supporting.

IAGINE a broad, low building, roughly built of unplaned boards. The rudeness of the bare interior ws is somewhat softened by draperies of nish moss, while streamers of the same gray substance hang from the low ers. Many small Union flags hang ng the moss, and here and there clus- of stiff palmetto leaves show that thern swamps are not far away. A gh, low platform is built at one end of room, and all the rest of the space is id with rows of benches. The floor of audience room is the earth itself. the seats are backless benches, made slabs, spiked upon posts driven into ground. But no fashionable audience ing in opera chairs to hear the most ous singers of the world ever matched interested attention the thousand negro n and women who sit on those hard ks all day to hear what Booker Wash- on and the other speakers on the plat- m have to say to them.

PICKING TOMATOES IN THE INSTITUTE GARDENS.

his Tuskegee Farmers' Conference is these men and women their only nce for learning, and they waste no nd of it. I t all the way n New Eng- l to Alabama ttend the Con- ence, and it well worth the ert.

he Farmers' Conference, which a mbles at Tus- gee annually, ually the last Wednesday in February, is ique. Nowhere e in the world is the anything like i Tuskegee In- ute is like its g at parent, l mpton, and r many children, the various smaller ools for negroes, but nowhere else is e a farmers' conference. The schools a training the young colored people most ly. The Tuskegee Conference does much of the same work as is possible the older people, the men and women a too old to go to school, even if they ld take the time from their work to so.

hen Booker Washington was fairly led at Tuskegee he began to study the blem of these older people, who, seeing r children learning, and through learn- advancing, began to ask, "How can learn, too?" His answer was to gather w near-by farmers one day and talk them, and get them to talk and tell t things perplexed them most, or made n the most trouble. Advice and sug- tion put in such shape as to stimulate self-help followed. The next year n the invitation was sent out, all these came and brought others with them, some brought their wives. Each year more and more coming to the confer- e, until now quite a thousand colored n aud their wives come from all over the "Black Belt" of Alabama for the help and inspiration, which must suffice them for all the coming year. The occasion has become one of such importance that it draws to Tuskegee each year the leading educators for colored people from all over the country, for no- where else can the problems which con- front all interested in this work to be so well studied as there. The second day of the conference, called the "workers' day," is de- voted to these visitors, and their discussions of the lessons of the preceding day.

One old colored man, with grizzled hair, made the prayer with which the Farmers' Conference was opened the first year I was there. "Oh, Lord," he said, "we wants to tank de for dis our one day ob schoolin' in de whole year." That is the way they all feel. A few of those present have come by train, but the majority have driv- en in their own teams, five, ten, even thirty or more miles, in order to get there. What that means only one who has tested the mud of Alabama roads in Feb- ruary can understand. The "teams" are hitch- ed in the field outside the building, and a more miscellaneous lot it would be impossible to imagine. Some drive horses, more mules, not a few steers. One man each year drives the family cow, hitched between shafts. Several hitches are a mule and steer together. The men and women themselves vary just as much in dress and looks. Some, especially the younger, are neatly dressed, but many might still be in the style of clothes they wore "befo' de wah." The faces of the women, peering out with intense in- terest from beneath cavernous gingham sun-bonnets, or from under neatly-twisted turbans, are like the pictures which the books of Mrs. Stowe and Augusta Evans call to mind.

Booker Washington keeps the Confer- ence down to business. The farmers do all the talking, and he skilfully steers the discussions into practical channels. The speakers are almost all unlettered men and women; but they know what they want, and those who have found better things know how to tell about them.

Much of the talk centres around the ex- travagance of the colored men and their wives, and the evil of the mortgage sys- tem, by which a man's crop is eaten up before it is harvested. One man says: "We's been eatin' too much boughten stuff. We's been an' put into our moufs de bridle dats done been holdin' us down." It is the proudest boast of one man that he raises a good fat hog every year to give toward the support of Tuskegee. One man is discouraged. He says: "Our people so far behin' han' in debt, seems as if dey never ketch up." Most ad- mit they are too extravagant. One confesses: "Dey buys lots ob tings dey don' need. Some men des eat tobacco like other peoples does meat." In gen- eral, though, the feeling is one of encouragement and inspiration, and the opinion is expressed that the people are from year to year grow- ing "more manner- able." The influence which goes out from this Conference is incalculable. All around small local conferences spring up to meet monthly and come together at Tuskegee to report and compare notes. Some of these colored farmers have not only become independent, but even wealthy.

Many negroes own good farms, well stocked, and with excellent machinery. One man's story came out funnily at the last Conference. Booker Washington was telling, as an example, of one farmer whom he knew, but whose name he fore- bore to mention, since he was present, who, although now the owner of a good farm and stock, and with shares in both Tuskegee banks, was once so poor that when he wanted to put in a crop, and owned no mule, he proved equal to the emergency, and "hitched up his boy and plowed with him."

This, however, proved too much for the paternal pride to bear, and up rose the man himself, "right in meeting," giving the whole secret away, to exclaim:

"Oh, Mis'r Washin'ton, Ah never said dat. Ah didn't say 'Ah plows de boy.' Ah says 'Ah puts de harness on mah self, an' he plows me.'" Afterward he admitted that this plowing was done at night, "so de neighbors wouldn't know it." With the help of this first crop he bought an interest in a mule, and so a be- ginning was made. How far-reaching the good effect of all this may be no one can say, but it certainly is en- couraging when, as was the case near Tuskegee last fall, a jury of white men at the county fair awarded the prize for the best bushel of corn to a colored man over white competitors.

Of Tuskegee Institute itself, I have no space to write here. Under Booker Washington's management it has grown in less than twenty years from a tentative beginning of a few pu- pils in an old house, to an old establishment of several thousand acres of land and over thirty buildings, where each year a thousand young colored men and women are taught to be not only self-supporting, but help-giving to their fellows. Besides books, the pupils are taught almost all trades. The girls learn housekeeping, dressmaking, millin- ery, and laundry work; the men carpen- tering, brick-making and laying, black- smithing, farming, carriage-making, paint- ing, the machinist's trade, and many others. Except for three of the first, the pupils have built all of the thirty buildings at Tuskegee, even first making the bricks. The rough building in which the Confer- ence is held is a rude temporary structure, used because it is the only one large enough now to hold all that attend. A large and attractive new chapel is now being built by the students, the money for the necessary material being given by Northern friends. This, when done, will accommodate a large audience. During the year just passed some good practical agricultural buildings have also been erected, for, as Principal Washington has said, Tuskegee realizes that since so great a number of the negroes must live by farming, it is to the improvement of this that prompt attention should be given.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Psalms 23: 1, ...

The Lord is my Shepherd.

WHAT with post and rail fences, and our pride in Southdown, Astrakhan, and Flemish varieties of sheep, there is no use now of the old-time shepherd. Such an one had abundance of opportunity of becoming a poet, being out-of-doors twelve hours the day, and oft-times waking up in the night on the hills, at the stars, or the torrents, or the sun, or the flowers had anything to say, he was very apt to hear it. The Ettrick Shepherd of Scotland, who afterwards took his seat in the brilliant circle of Wilson and Lockhart, got his wonderful poetic inspiration in the ten years in which he was watching the flocks of Mr. Laidlaw. There is often a sweet poetry in the rugged prose of the Scotch shepherd. One of these Scotch shepherds lost his only son, and he knelt down in prayer, and was overheard to say, "O Lord, it has seemed good in thy providence to take from me the staff of my right hand at the time when to us sand-blind mortals I seemed to be most in need of it; and how I shall climb up the hill of sorrow and auld age without it, thou mayst ken, but I dinna."

David, the shepherd-boy, is watching his father's sheep. They are pasturing on the very hills where afterward a Lamb was born of which you have heard much, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." David, the shepherd-boy, was beautiful, brave, musical, and poetic. I think he often forgot the sheep in his reveries. There in the solitude he struck the harp-string that is thrilling through all ages. David, the boy, was gathering the material for David the poet, and David the man. Like other boys, David was fond of using his knife among the saplings, and he had noticed the exuding of the juice of the tree; and when he became a man, he said, "The trees of the Lord are full of sap." David, the boy, like other boys, had been fond of hunting the birds'-nests, and he had driven the old stork off the nest to find how many eggs were under her; and when he became a man, he said, "As for the stork, the fir-trees are her house." In boyhood he had heard the terrific thunder-storm that frightened the red deer into premature sickness; and when he became a man, he said, "The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve." David, the boy, had lain upon his back looking up at the stars and examining the sky, and to his boyish imagination the sky seemed like a piece of divine embroidery, the divine fingers working in the threads of light and the beads of stars; and he became a man and wrote, "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers." When he became an old man, thinking of the goodness of God, he seemed to hear the bleating of his father's sheep across many years, and to think of the time when he tended them on the Bethlehem hills, and he cries out in the text, "The Lord is my shepherd."

If God will help me, I will talk to you of the shepherd and the shepherd's crook, the shepherd's dogs, the shepherd's pasture-grounds, and the shepherd's flocks.

And first, the shepherd's plaid. It would be very strange for a man going out to rough and tumble work to put on spotless apparel. The pastor does not make himself fine, the servant does not put on clothes while waiting at her tasks; the shepherd does not wear a splendid robe in which to go out among the briers and the brambles. So when the Lord appeared to be the shepherd of his people, he appeared in a plain and useful garb. The Lord our Shepherd, coming out to lead the lost sheep, put on no royal apparel, but the plain garment of our humanity. There was nothing pretentious about it. I know the old painters represent a halo around the babe Jesus, but I do not suppose that there was any more halo about that child than about the head of any other babe that was born that Christmas eve in Judea. Becoming a man, he wore a seamless garment. The scissors and needle had done nothing to make it graceful. I take it to have been a sack with three holes in it: one for the neck, and two for the arms. Although the gamblers quarreled over it, that is no evidence of its value. I have seen two rag-pickers quarrel over the refuse of an ash-barrel. No; in the wardrobe of heaven he left the sandals of light, the girdles of beauty, the robes of power, and put on the besoiled and tattered raiment of our humanity. Sometimes he did not even wear the seamless robe. What is that hanging about the waist of Christ? Is it a badge of authority? Is it a royal coat of arms? No: it is a towel. The disciples' feet are filthy from the walk on the long way, and are not fit to be put upon the sofas on which they are to recline at the meal, and so Jesus washes their feet, and gathers them up in the towel to dry them. The work of saving this world was rough work, rugged work, hard work: and Jesus put on the raiment, the plain raiment, of our flesh. The storms were to beat him, the crowds were to jostle him, the dust was to sprinkle him, the mobs were to pursue him. Oh, Shepherd of Israel! leave at home thy bright array. For thee, what streams to ford, what nights all unsheltered! He puts upon him the plain raiment of our humanity; wears our woes; and while earth and heaven and hell stand amazed at the abnegation, wraps around him the shepherd's plaid:

> "Cold mountains and the midnight air, > Witnessed the fervor of his prayer."

Next I mention the shepherd's crook. This was a rod with a curve at the end, which, when a sheep was going astray, was thrown over its neck; and in that way it was pulled back. When the sheep were not going astray, the shepherd would often use it as a sort of crutch, leaning on it; but when the sheep were out of the way, the crook was always busy pulling them back. All we, like sheep, have gone astray, and had it not been for the shepherd's crook, we would have fallen long ago, over the precipices.

Here is a man who is making too much money. He is getting very vain. He says, "After a while I shall be independent of all the world. Oh, my soul, eat, drink, and be merry." Business disaster comes to him. What is God going to do with him? Has God any grudge against him? Oh, no. God is throwing over him the shepherd's crook and pulling him back into better pastures. Here is a man who has always been well. He has never had any sympathy for invalids; he calls them coughing, wheezing nuisances. After a while sickness comes to him. He does not understand what God is going to do with him. He says, "Is the Lord angry with me?" Oh no. With the shepherd's crook he has been pulled back into better pastures. Here is a happy household circle. The parent does not realize the truth that these children are only loaned to him, and he forgets from what source came his domestic blessings. Sickness drops upon those children and death swoops upon a little one. He says, "Is God angry with me?" No. His shepherd's crook pulls him back into better pastures. I do not know what would have become of us if it had not been for the shepherd's crook. Oh, the mercies of our troubles! You take up apples and plums from under the shade of the trees, and the very best fruits of Christian character we find in the deep shade of trouble.

When I was on the steamer, coming across the ocean, I got a cinder in my eye, and several persons tried to get it out very gently, but it could not be taken out in that way. I was told that the engineer had a fatality in such cases. I went to him. He put his large, sooty hand on me, took a knife, and wrapped the lid of the eye around the knife. I expected to be hurt very much, but without any pain, and instantly, he removed the cinder. Oh, there come times in our Christian life, when our spiritual vision is being spoiled, and all gentle appliances fail. Then there comes some giant trouble, and black-handed, lays hold of us and removes that which would have ruined our vision forever. I will gather all your joys together in one regiment of ten companies, and I will put them under Colonel Joy. Then I will gather all your sorrows together in one regiment of ten companies, and put them under Colonel Breakheart. Then I will ask, Which of these regiments has gained for you the greater spiritual victories? Certainly that under Colonel Breakheart.
